Strike out the word "Messeroe's," in line 7, and substitute therefor the word "Missine's;" insert after the word "service," in line 8, the words "in the war of 1812;" strike out all after the word "month" in line 9.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. HOWE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7489) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Caroline A. Groshon," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with amendments.

The claimant is the unmarried daughter of William Groshon, who served from September 2, 1814, to December 3, 1814, in Captain Missine's company of New York Volunters in the war of 1812.

Miss Groshon swears that she was born January 19, 1827, and that she is the only surviving child of the soldier. She further swears that she is dependent entirely upon her daily labor for support, and that her mother, the soldier's widow, who was a pensioner, died October 14, 1885.

The claimant's allegations are fully corroborated by the affidavits of J. W. Hatsey and A. B. Russell, citizens of New York City, who have known her for more than thirty years.

There are several precedents for the proposed legislation, and the House has at this session passed a bill granting a pension to an old and needy daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812.

The following amendments are recommended: Strike out the word "Messeroe's," in line 7, and substitute therefor the word "Missine's;" insert after the word "service." in line 8, the words "in the war of 1812;" strike out all after the word "month" in line 9.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will be consistent for one night at least. This bill is precisely on all fours with the one we were talking about some time ago, concerning which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] and my excellent friend from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] boiled over with indignation, that the House should be passing that kind of pension bills. Here is a woman born fifteen years after the close of the war in which her father served.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask unanimous consent that this bill lie over without prejudice, which was the action taken by the House to-day in all bills of this character.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Chairman, consistency is a jewel. My friend [Mr. CONNOLLY] was advocating a similar bill a while ago, but now he wants us to be consistent and vote this down. I am willing to vote with him to satisfy him. He says "the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] was boiling over." He is mistaken about that.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It was the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] who boiled over.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I hope the Chair will put my request first.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will receive the favorable consideration of this committee. This is a bill that I refused to introduce in the House until I had first personally investigated the matter, both as to the merits of the case and also as to the precedents in such cases.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That was my fix, too.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. So far as the merits of the case are concerned, this lady is an elderly maiden lady, gray haired, without many years to live, living alone, with no means of support, in poverty, and is the sole surviving daughter of an officer of the war of 1812 with a great record.

Mr. BLUE. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. One moment and I will. As to precedents: Before introducing this bill I discovered that there were numerous precedents for passing bills pensioning the daughters of soldiers of the war of 1812.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. One moment. It is not 10.30, and there is already a resolution before the committee. It will not take one moment to vote upon this bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I insist upon my motion that the bill be reported with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The motion of Mr. THOMAS was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PAYNE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry House bills, part of which were reported back with amendments, and part without amendments. With amendments—the bills H. R. 2035, H. R. 4517, H. R. 7688, H. R. 7079, H. R. 7073, H. R. 2153, H. R. 5183, H. R. 7647, H. R. 6159, H. R. 3605, H. R. 2395, H. R. 6922, H. R. 3842, and H. R. 4539. Without amendments—the bills H. R. 5793, H. R. 8075, S. 719, H. R. 5612, S. 1975, S. 7816. To lie on the table—the bill H. R. 6497; and also the bill H. R. 7489 without any resolution thereon.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplementary estimates of deficiencies in appropriations, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the legislature of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 10090, for the purpose of abolishing ticket brokerage; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Lansing, Mich., February 2, 1897.

Mr. Gillam offered the following:
Whereas a bill has been introduced in the National House of Representatives, known as H. R. 10090, for the purpose of abolishing ticket brokers, and entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce;'" and
Whereas the provisions of this proposed act, if carried into effect, would not only wipe out ticket brokerage, but deny to every citizen the right to dispose of his own property in the open market respecting railroad transportation, and in case of such disposal would be branded a felon, punishable by fine and imprisonment; and
Whereas the passage of such a bill or act would, in effect, be in violation of the recognized rights of the people, and is, in effect, a grab at the public purse for the benefit of railroad corporations and to the injury of the traveling public: Therefore,
Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Michigan, That we denounce the measure as unjust and one that tends rather to protect corporate interests than to benefit or in any manner favor the rights and privileges of the mass of American citizens; and
Be it further resolved, That we recommend to our representatives in Congress that they use all honorable means in their power to defeat any such measure; and
Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our representatives in Washington, to the Speaker of the House, President of the Senate, to the President of the United States, and to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission.
Which was adopted.

WILLIAM D. GORDON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
LEWIS M. MILLER, Clerk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the American Anti-Saloon League, of Washington, D. C., praying that in case certain Indian reservations within the bounds of the United States are opened to white settlement, a law be enacted prohibiting the carrying on of the liquor traffic within the limits of these reservations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VILAS presented a petition of the legislature of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of House bill No. 4339, to establish a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution No. 4, S, asking the members representing the State of Wisconsin in the Congress of the United States to vote in favor of bill H. R. 4339.

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill (H. R. 4339) to establish a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg; and
Whereas the operations that culminated almost simultaneously at Gettysburg and Vicksburg in July, 1863, not only mark the turning point in the war of the rebellion, but also constitute one of the great epochs in the history of our country, and should both be commemorated in the most impressive and enduring manner possible; and
Whereas the establishment of a national military park at Vicksburg will be a most fitting and appropriate monument to the great commander whose genius planned these operations and directed them to a successful issue; and
Whereas the State of Wisconsin has an especial interest in this bill for the reason that of her gallant soldiers 11 regiments of infantry, 2 of cavalry, and 3 batteries of artillery participated in the operations it is intended to commemorate: Therefore,
The legislature of the State of Wisconsin, by this concurrent resolution, asks that the above-named bill (H. R. 4339) be passed during this session of Congress, and requests the Senators and members of the House of Representatives in Congress from Wisconsin to labor earnestly for its passage; and the secretary of state is hereby directed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and members of the House of Representatives from Wisconsin, to the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Hon. JOHN A. F. HULL, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs.

L. W. THAYER,
President of the Senate.
G. A. BUCKSTAFF,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Given under my hand and official seal at the capitol in the city of Madison this —— day of February, A. D. 1897.

HENRY CASSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of the Napper-Tandy Club of New York City, remonstrating against the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WETMORE presented the memorial of George W. Foster and sundry other citizens of Westerly, R. I., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back the bill (H. R. 10134) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, with sundry amendments, and a written report accompanying it, which I ask may be printed. I give notice that I shall try to call the bill up on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. At the suggestion of several Senators, I wish to make a proposition about the order of business to-day.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] has announced that he desires to continue his remarks, beginning at the close of the routine morning business to-day. At 3 o'clock to-day the Senate has ordered that memorial resolutions in relation to a late Representative from Massachusetts shall be taken up.

I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska the Senate proceed to take up the Calendar under Rule VIII and consider unobjected cases until the hour of 3 o'clock arrives. That will give us one of the last opportunities of finishing the unobjected cases upon the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. The order of business not to be disturbed otherwise, but to remain the same as now?

Mr. HALE. Such an arrangement would not of course in any way disturb the order of business.

Mr. WHITE. Is it the design of the Senator from Maine that the order of which he speaks shall proceed at once? I make the inquiry, as I wish to offer a resolution which I think will not be objected to.

Mr. HALE. No; I bring it in now because I was on the floor. The routine morning business will go on, and when that is completed I understand the Senator from Nebraska will take the floor. All there is in my proposition is that the time which elapses after the Senator from Nebraska shall have concluded and 3 o'clock shall be devoted to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. TELLER. Including Senate bills?

Mr. HALE. Including Senate bills. Nothing but House cases were considered yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maine that there is not much use at this period of the session in passing Senate bills. There are some House bills which have been passed over that were not really objected to; but in some cases bills were passed over because the Senators who had them in charge were not present. Some of us would like to call up a bill on the Calendar that would not be reached to-day in regular order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that under the suggestion of the Senator from Maine all those cases will come up, unless objected to when reached.

Mr. HALE. My proposition covers all bills on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. Both House bills and Senate bills.

Mr. HALE. The remnant of House bills unfinished yesterday, and the Senate bills also.

Mr. TELLER. Is it the intention that we shall begin at the commencement of the Calendar?

Mr. HALE. At the commencement.

Mr. TELLER. And take up all unobjected cases?

Mr. HALE. All unobjected cases.

Mr. TELLER. Having gone some distance on the Calendar, I do not understand that the Senator means we shall commence where we left off yesterday.

Mr. ALLISON. We went through it yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. But we are to go back to the beginning of the Calendar and commence there?

Mr. HALE. Precisely.

Mr. TELLER. If that is the understanding, the order is entirely acceptable to me.

Mr. HALE. We can clear up a dozen or perhaps twenty cases, or more, and I do not know of anything else that it is desired shall be brought forward.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that there might be a misunderstanding there. Some cases have been passed over under Rule VIII, and others under Rule IX. Of course when one of the cases passed over under Rule IX is reached, a Senator who desires to call it up will be allowed to do so. It is not the intention, I understand, to start in on the Calendar where we left off yesterday.

Mr. ALLISON. We finished the Calendar yesterday.

Mr. FAULKNER. No; we finished the Calendar only as to the House bills.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; but we went through with the Calendar yesterday as to the House bills. Therefore we will commence with the Calendar at the beginning, under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. Under Rule VIII?

Mr. FAULKNER. That is right; under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. Is that in order, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit——

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Maine. I have an important bill in charge affecting the interests of our State, especially at this time, and of all the States. I do not think it will excite any debate; I hope it will not, and I desire an opportunity to call it up and see whether we can pass it or not. Of course, I will consent to anything which will expedite the business of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator understands, of course, that there are a good many Senators who have bills in charge that they desire to call up. This proposition of mine can not go through unless everyone consents. The object is to avoid being thrown into a scramble as to who shall get the floor, when the result would be that not much could be done. I have simply made the proposition in the interest of doing the most business during the time at our disposal.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the Senator from Maine whether it will be understood also that the Nicaragua Canal bill goes over until Monday as the unfinished business?

Mr. HALE. The Nicaragua Canal bill will undoubtedly be laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock as the unfinished business, and then it will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to please give me the benefit of his experience here. I am a new member, and I do not know exactly how to work this thing. I want to get my bill up and see whether it will create a fight or not, and if it does we can discuss it for a while, or a majority can lay it aside.

Mr. HALE. I do not know where the Senator's bill is on the Calendar. When we reach it, if it is not objected to, it will be considered and passed. If objected to, it will go over and come up again, holding its place on the Calendar. I do not know where the Senator's bill is; I do not know what it is; but he loses no right, I will say, in this agreement to take up the cases in their order.

Mr. TILLMAN. What am I to understand by the expiration of the routine business? Is it that as soon as we get through with the presentation of petitions and memorials, resolutions, etc., the Senator from Nebraska will continue his speech, and when he gets through then we shall go to the Calendar?

Mr. HALE. That is it, until 3 o'clock, when the memorial resolutions will be taken up. It is utilizing the time the Senator from Nebraska leaves to the Senate; that is all.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, while I do not object to the agreement proposed, it does seem to me it is a very great hardship upon some of the cases that are back on the Calendar. We called over the docket under Rule VIII, and some cases went over which are important and full of merit. When a Senator objects to a bill, it is laid aside. We ought to have some rule by which we would have a right to give every case a trial when we reach it. We pass those simply which are not objected to. The most important cases, of course, are those which are controverted, yet such a proceeding shelves them all and puts them out of the way for this session. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I have some bills in charge, and other Senators have bills in charge that they desire shall be heard, and although there may be objection to the measures, let us test the merits and give the bills a day in court, and see whether the Senate will pass them or not.

Mr. HALE. I do not desire to take any more time. My proposition can not be entertained unless every Senator here thinks it is best to proceed in this way. If any Senator objects, that is the end of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Maine. Is there objection?

Mr. VILAS. I ask that the request be stated by the Chair, so that the Senate may understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine will please restate his request.

Mr. HALE. It is that for to-day the Senate shall proceed with the Calendar on the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska, who, I understand, proposes to take the floor after the routine morning business is completed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that probably my colleague will desire to occupy the attention of the Senate after the morning hour.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. My proposition gives him all the range that he desires. Whenever he closes, the order will apply. I will state my request, Mr. President. It is that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska the Senate shall proceed to consider the Calendar under Rule VIII—unobjected cases.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether we are to begin at the back of the Calendar or at the front at the point reached under Rule VIII when last under consideration?

Mr. HALE. We will begin at the beginning of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. TILLMAN. In other words, you propose to go back over all that straw that has been thrashed and passed over on objection, and leave us who have our bills at the tail without the opportunity to pass them that others have had to pass their bills.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Maine, and then I think we will know specifically what we are doing. There are certain bills which were passed over without prejudice under Rule VIII, beginning on page 4. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that in his request for unanimous consent he propose that we begin on page 4 of the Calendar, which covers all the cases under Rule VIII which have been passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HALE. That is where I propose we shall begin.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator will observe, there are two points under Rule VIII on the Calendar. If that is what he proposes, then I hope it will be made clear.

Mr. BATE. If those cases were objected to, I suppose the same objection will obtain when they are again reached, and it would simply be, as was said by the Senator from South Carolina, thrashing over old straw. It seems to me that as we go along every case ought to have a status, and that we ought to have a right to try it on its merits and the justice of it in some way. The session is nearly at a close; of course the appropriation bills will soon be pressed; and, as I said, many cases will be shelved, some of which have merit in them.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me, to give a homely illustration, that you are passing around the plate twice to some before you get to others at all. I should like to begin, say, on page 14, and go on through to the end, and then go back to the beginning and come down again. Then all will have an equal advantage, and nobody will feel that it is not perfectly fair.

Mr. HALE. I think the best way is for me to withdraw the proposition, and let the Senate go on under its rules. Perhaps later in the day we can agree upon something of this kind, but I withdraw the proposition for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reports of standing and select committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3549) to authorize the Chesapeake Beach Railway Company, of Maryland, to extend its line into and within the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 2d instant, providing for the purchase of Analostan Island, intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, reported it with amendments, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3385) to refer certain claims for Indian depredations to the Court of Claims, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3715) for the relief of Capt. W. J. Kountz, to report it without amendment.

I will state that a Senate bill for the relief of the party named was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims on the 4th instant. When the House bill reached the Senate, it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Subsequently that committee was discharged from the further consideration of the House bill and it was referred to the Committee on Claims. I shall be glad to have the House bill take the place of the Senate bill on the Calendar, which is Order of Business 1532, being the bill (S. 1733) for the relief of Capt. W. J. Kountz.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

Mr. BURROWS. To complete the record, I move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was ageed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 3662) for the establishment of a light and fog-signal station near Homer, Kachemak Bay, Cook Inlet, Alaska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ROACH introduced a bill (S. 3663) to grant public lands to the State of North Dakota for the use and maintenance of the School of Forestry of that State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3664) to provide an American register for the steamer Jacksonville; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 3665) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 197) providing for the printing of the report of the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Ceremonials at the Celebration of the One hundredth Anniversary of the Laying of the Corner Stone of the Capitol of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

THE BOTANIC GARDENS, ETC.

Mr. HOAR. I move that House Report No. 385, Forty-sixth Congress, third session, be reprinted for the use of the Senate. It is a brief report proposing new arrangements in regard to the Botanic Gardens, etc. I am not prepared to express any opinion as to the merits of the proposition advanced, but it is an interesting report and it ought to be in the possession of the Senate. The copy that I hold in my hand is, I understand, the last one to be obtained.

The motion was agreed to.

BONDED WAREHOUSES.

Mr. WHITE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether an order has been issued discontinuing general bonded warehouses established under the provisions of the act of Congress of August 24, 1894; and if so, the authority and reasons for the issuance of such order.

ACCEPTANCE OF GIFTS BY OFFICERS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire and report if it is lawful for an officer of the Regular Army of the United States, while holding his official position and receiving compensation from the Government therefor, to receive from private citizens valuable presents in compensation for services performed by him in the line of duty; and if so, the said committee be, and they are hereby, directed to report to the Senate a bill prohibiting the acceptance of such a gift during the time such officer is in the actual service of the Government.

WATERWAYS FROM THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. VILAS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed in addition to the usual number 5,000 copies of the message of the President of January 18, 1897, and of the report of the Commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1895, to inquire into deep waterways between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean accompanying the same, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House, and 500 for the use of the Commissioners.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1323) for the relief of Ira H. Sweatt; and

A bill (H. R. 4930) granting a pension to Mary Forward.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8190) to provide an American register for the bark Ceres; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution instructing the Committee on Pacific Railroads to inquire and report to the Senate whether the executive department has by existing law authority to foreclose the Government mortgage or lien on the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Before my colleague begins his remarks, I should like to ask that at the conclusion of his remarks the resolutions be passed over, retaining their place, that I may address the Senate upon the subject on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. THURSTON resumed the speech begun by him on Wednesday. After having spoken for some time,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest——

Mr. VILAS. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside to enable the Senator from Nebraska to conclude his remarks.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the request I was about to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects to laying aside the unfinished business.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont suggests the lack of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Martin,	Sherman,
Allen,	Daniel,	Mills,	Shoup,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Gear,	Morrill,	Teller,
Bate,	Gibson,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Berry,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Blanchard,	Hale,	Peffer,	Turpie,
Butler,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Vest,
Call,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Vilas.
Cameron,	Lindsay,	Platt,	Walthall,
Chilton,	McBride,	Pugh,	Wetmore.
Cockrell,	Mantle,	Roach,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I was going to ask, with the permission of the Senator from Louisiana, whether the Senator from Nebraska would not like to continue his remarks.

Mr. THURSTON. I would have preferred to have concluded this morning, but I understood objection was made.

Mr. HILL. I hope that objection will be withdrawn so as to allow the Senator from Nebraska to complete his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. I am entirely willing that the Senate shall consider the Calendar of business, but I am unwilling that any Senator shall occupy five days arguing a question in order to defeat it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from New York will permit me, I think it was the unanimous consent this morning that after the Nicaragua Canal bill had been informally laid aside we might go to the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. That proposition was withdrawn.

Mr. ALDRICH. Three o'clock has been fixed as the time when the resolutions of the House will be called up for the purpose of delivering eulogies upon a deceased Representative.

Mr. HILL. There seems to be a universal desire that my motion should be withdrawn, and I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York withdraws the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to laying aside the Nicaragua Canal bill informally if the Senator from Louisiana does not object.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not object.

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be laid aside without prejudice, so that the Senate may go on with the Calendar. I understood that was agreed to under some general arrangement this morning.

Mr. WHITE. It was withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn, and the Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. The Chair did not understand me, I am sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I said I was willing to lay aside temporarily the Nicaragua Canal bill, in order that the Senate might proceed to consider the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to appeal to the Senator from Alabama to withdraw his objection. My colleague will be able to close his remarks in the course of half an hour or so.

Mr. THURSTON. I will not ask leave to go on at the present time. The Senator from Alabama objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand——

Mr. THURSTON. I give notice now that I shall ask unanimous consent to proceed on Monday morning, immediately after the expiration of the routine business.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the two pending resolutions go over without prejudice.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to that.

Mr. HILL. That does not affect the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLEN. That consent was given this morning.

Mr. THURSTON. I also wish to suggest——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will suspend a moment. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent——

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] says that consent was given this morning, and so I withdraw the request.

Mr. ALLEN. Consent was given this morning.

Mr. THURSTON. I wish to suggest that I have refrained from claiming the attention of the Senate for this entire session, except with respect to this one matter. I have patiently sat and listened to arguments that seemed unending and unceasing at times when an objection might have been interposed. I now suggest that the same courtesy I have extended to others I shall ask for myself on future occasions, and as I receive it so shall I give it.

[Mr. THURSTON's speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that we take up the Calendar under Rule VIII, the Senator from Alabama having consented to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily, as I understood him.

Mr. MORGAN. For that purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. For that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senate proceeds with the Calendar, I desire to make a motion which I think will be very much for the convenience of the Senate. It is that our Calendar, which contains a list of subjects on the table, the unfinished business, special orders, etc., shall also have added to it a list of all the bills that are in conference, so that a Senator can find where a particular matter is by a glance at the Calendar. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the motion? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that we commence at the point left off when the Calendar was last under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar will be proceeded with; but the Chair will first lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree.

The bill (H. R. 5499) for the relief of Patrick Clabby was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BETSEY J. WEBBER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 178) granting a pension to Betsey J. Webber.

The amendment was in line 6, after the word "Webber" where it occurs the first time, to insert the word "dependent;" so as to read:

Betsey J. Webber, dependent mother of Otis Webber, jr.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MARIA SOMERLAT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1323) granting a pension to Mary Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat.

The amendment was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HANS JOHNSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1495) granting a pension to Hans Johnson.

The amendments were, in line 8, after the word "Johnson," to insert the words "a pension;" and to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Hans Johnson."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that those amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. LAURA A. NELSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2126) granting a pension to Mrs. Laura A. Nelson.

The amendment was, in line 6, to strike out the words "of the" where they occur the second time and in lieu thereof to insert "Company E."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LAURA C. DODGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2347) for the relief of Laura C. Dodge.

The amendment was, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

NETTIE A. CHEEKS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2913) granting an increase of pension to Nettie A. Cheeks.

The amendment was, in line 5, to strike out the letter "O" and insert the letter "C."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MAJ. GEN. JULIUS H. STAHEL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1694) to increase the pension of Maj. Gen. Julius H. Stahel.

The amendment was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives, and that a conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. PRITCHARD were appointed.

MARY O. H. STONEMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman.

The amendment was, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "thirty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SHOUP, Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, and Mr. CANNON were appointed.

GEORGE B. CUSTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1806) granting a pension to George B. Custer, late sergeant Company H, Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The amendments were, in line 7, beginning with the word "month," to strike out all down to and including the word "date," in line 9, and to insert "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving;" and to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to George B. Custer."

Mr. ROACH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. LUCY ALEXANDER PAYNE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. ROACH. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the House amendment and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ROACH, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. PEFFER were appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar will be proceeded with under the agreement.

MOBILE MARINE DOCK COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1968) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company was announced as the first in order on the Calendar; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the Mobile Marine Dock Company, or to its authorized agent or attorney, $86,202.65, in full payment for the use and occupation of and damage to property taken of that company from April 16 to November 15, 1865, inclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 1178) conveying to Rafael Seguro, of Iberia Parish, La., the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in said parish of Iberia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

The joint resolution (S. R. 151) relating to motive power on the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway, the Belt Railway, and the Maryland and Washington Railway companies was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very sure that we legislated on that subject a few days ago, and I ask that the joint resolution go over. I think I am not mistaken about the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The joint resolution goes over.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: At my suggestion, the joint resolution (S. R. 151) relating to motive power on the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway, the Belt Railway, and the Maryland and Washington Railway companies was laid over. I said I thought the Senate had legislated on the subject, which I find to be true. I desire to move the indefinite postponement of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS' HOME AT HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 2791) for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of the Northern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has heretofore been read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT TAX-SALE CERTIFICATES.

The bill (H. R. 3610) for the relief of holders of certain District of Columbia tax-sale certificates, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who reported that bill, is not in the Chamber, and I suggest that it go over without losing its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COMMODORE WILLIAM P. M'CANN.

The bill (S. 1350) to make Commodore William P. McCann, of the Navy, a rear-admiral on the retired list was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to transfer Commodore William P. McCann, United States Navy, from the retired list of commodores to the retired list of rear-admirals from May 4, 1892, the date of his retirement in his present rank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH CABLE LINES.

The bill (S. 3010) relating to the landing of any new submarine telegraph cable line or system in this country was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PAINTING OF THE FRIEZE IN CAPITOL ROTUNDA.

The joint resolution (S. R. 152) appropriating $6,000 for completing the painting of the frieze in the Rotunda of the United States Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALTHALL. Let that joint resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA.

The bill (S. 3049) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of North America, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SALARIES OF SKILLED WORKMEN IN THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The bill (S. 3243) regulating the salaries of printers, bookbinders, and other skilled workmen employed in the Government Printing Office was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DANIEL DRAWBAUGH.

The bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Daniel Drawbaugh was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. That bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SALES IN SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

The bill (S. 2009) to simplify the system of making sales in the Subsistence Department to officers and enlisted men of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator reporting that bill is not present, and the matter has been heard again in the Committee on Military Affairs. I think the bill had better be passed over for the present, without losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

The bill (S. 2849) to promote the efficiency of the militia was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

REGULATIONS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS AT SEA.

The bill (S. 3244) to amend an act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPTURE OF THE COMPETITOR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN June 3, 1896, relative to the capture of a vessel of the United States called the Competitor by a Spanish ship of war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This resolution has been heretofore read at length. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN A. FAIRFAX.

The bill (S. 1604) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "pay," to strike out "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia, $502, being the amount found due the said Fairfax by the Court of Claims of the United States April 9, 1894, from the United States, for work and labor in building roads and streets in said District under the late board of public works therein, the said sum to be taken and accepted by the said claimant as in full for said services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That the said sum shall be paid from the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated by the act approved June 20, 1878, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," to pay the workingmen employed in the public improvements under the late board of public works of the District of Columbia, or the contractors of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE LINE OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 2202) to reorganize the line of the Army, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PEACE MONUMENT AT APPOMATTOX.

The bill (S. 3251) to procure a site and erect a peace monument at Appomattox was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALTHALL. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUBLIC ROADS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 157) extending the scope of the investigations by the Agricultural Department in the matter of the improvement of public roads was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that on the next page, Order of Business 1257, seems to be a joint resolution of the same character and scope as the one which has just been read, which was rejected, and afterwards reconsidered and placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator who reported that joint resolution is absent, and I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The bill (S 2726) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, was announced as next in order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill; and, after reading some time, was interrupted by

Mr. WALTHALL. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that as we have begun to consider the bill it is too late now to enter an objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has never been so held. It has always been held that an objection may be made at any time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This is a bill of considerable importance, and has been on the Calendar some time. I hope the Senator will not object to it.

Mr. MILLS. It is a bill in which the people of Texas are considerably interested.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must protest that when a Senator makes objection to the consideration of a bill, time shall not be consumed by other Senators in begging that he withdraw the objection. I take it for granted that no Senator makes an objection unless he has a reason for having a bill passed over. I know when I make an objection it will stand, and I certainly hope the time of the Senate will not be consumed in this way.

Mr. MILLS. But there is a time within which an objection should be made, and that is when the bill is first called up, before the Senate proceeds to its consideration, and not afterwards.

Mr. COCKRELL. The rule is that the objection can be made at any time during the consideration of a bill, and when objection is made, the bill must go over. That has been the rule from time immemorial.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist on so strict and harsh a rule as that, for sometimes a very just and humane measure may be objected to under a misapprehension, which would cause it to be dismissed without a hearing, when a word of explanation would cause the objection to be withdrawn.

Mr. WALTHALL. I made the objection, Mr. President. This is a very important measure, and the Senator who reported it is not in the Chamber. I insist upon the objection, if it is not too late, and I do not think that it is.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask if, under the unanimous-consent rule, it is proper to move to take up a bill which has been objected to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it is not.

Mr. MILLS. No; we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARY A. SWIFT.

The bill (S. 2071) for the relief of Mary A. Swift was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $12,000 for the relief of Mary A. Swift, widow of the late John F. Swift, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Japan, that being the salary allowed by law for one year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the next two bills on the Calendar be indefinitely postponed, as there is a general law covering the question involved in those bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The titles of the bills will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3257) donating condemned cannon and cannon balls to the Idaho Soldiers' Home, Boise City, Idaho; and

A bill (S. 3234) donating condemned cannon and cannon balls to the Ohio Soldiers and Sailors' Home, Erie County, Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills the titles of which have just been read will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection.

REORGANIZATION OF NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 190) to facilitate the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; to secure to actual settlers the right to purchase at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre the agricultural lands within its grant, and to prohibit said company or any successor company from giving by consolidation, sale, or other corporate action control of its railroad to any corporation, company, person, or association of persons owning, operating, or controlling a parallel or competing railroad was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That joint resolution has never been referred to any committee of the Senate. Let it be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUBLIC ROADS.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 194) extending the scope of the investigations by the Agricultural Department in the matter of the improvement of public roads was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over under the objection raised to the Senate joint resolution on the same subject.

HOME FOR AGED AND INFIRM COLORED PEOPLE.

The bill (S. 3227) to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] at one time made objection to that bill. I do not know whether he has any objection to it now or not, but I have sent for him.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who reported the bill, is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TONNAGE TAX.

The bill (H. R. 2672) concerning tonnage tax, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BERRY. I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is opposed to that bill. I do not see him in the Chamber, and, therefore, on his behalf, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

The joint resolution (S. R. 163) acknowledging the independence of Cuba was announced as next in order.

Mr. VILAS and Mr. GEAR. Let that go over.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to proceed to the consideration of that joint resolution, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not in order. I hope the Senator will not undertake to violate the agreement which was made, which was that we should consider unobjected cases only.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not so understand the agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the express agreement.

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir. I consented on this floor to consider the Calendar. I had my eyes open and looking at the subject when I consented that we should consider the Calendar. We are on it now, and I move to consider that joint resolution notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the accuracy of the statement of the Senator from Missouri is challenged, the Chair will have to ask the reporter to read precisely what was the agreement. The Senate has been acting thus far only in the consideration of unobjected cases.

Mr. MORGAN. I remember very distinctly, Mr. President, that when the question was put I waived the bill that was then under consideration, that it might be laid aside informally for the purpose of proceeding with the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama is not heard on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. I asked that the Nicaraguan Canal bill might be laid aside informally for the purpose of proceeding with the Calendar. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. The unanimous-consent agreement was made earlier in the day, as I understand.

Mr. MILLS. That was refused.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the question on the motion of the Senator from Alabama be put to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was first endeavoring to ascertain whether the motion was in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make no point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] was understood to make the last suggestion about proceeding with the consideration of the Calendar. The Chair asks the Senator to state his recollection of the request he made.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Nicaraguan Canal bill having been laid aside informally for the purpose, I asked the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator limit his request to unobjected cases?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I stated "unobjected cases." Of course it included that. It was my intention that only unobjected cases should be considered.

Mr. MORGAN. But you did not say so.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us take a vote on the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly proceeding under Rule VIII means considering unobjected cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule as it has been construed all along up to this time, that it was the consideration of unobjected cases that was meant when unanimous consent was asked; and as the Senator from Rhode Island states that was his idea, the Chair feels compelled to rule that the motion of the Senator from Alabama is not now in order.

Mr. MORGAN. May I be allowed, by unanimous consent, to say a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to force this joint resolution on the consideration of the Senate when it appears the Senate is so thin; but I want it understood that whenever the joint resolution comes in contact with the Senate I am going to insist upon its consideration, and I do not intend, so far as my privileges and powers as a Senator are concerned, to give way to anything at all, if I can get the question of Cuba considered.

I now submit to the ruling of the Chair, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ST. JOHNS RIVER, FLORIDA.

The joint resolution (S. R. 165) relating to the St. Johns River, Florida, and bar at the entrance to the river, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, to report to Congress without delay an estimate of the cost of improving the St. Johns River, Florida, for seagoing steamers from its mouth to Palatka and for river steamboats from Palatka to Lake Winder, and above that point as far as practicable to give transportation to the level now being desired on the highest levees of the river; also to report an estimate of the amount of money necessary for immediate expenditure for the prevention of the channels made by the jetties over the St. Johns Bar at the mouth of the river from closing up or diminishing in the depth of water, and also the amount necessary for obtaining a depth of 30 feet of water over the bar at the mouth of the river.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE S. SIMON.

The bill (S. 2588) for the relief of George S. Simon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 8, after the date "1864," to strike out "amounting at that date to about $8,000;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby empowered to hear and adjudicate the claim of George S. Simon, of Darke County, Ohio, for goods and merchandise taken from his store at Versailles, Darke County, Ohio, and used or destroyed by the United States troops on the 13th day of January, A. D. 1864.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. If it be in order to have the report of the committee read, I ask that it be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; that is in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I can state to the Senator the facts in the case. Some Pennsylvania troops on their return home, and before they were discharged, stopped in the town of Versailles. Whilst there they looted the store owned by this man Simon, destroying and carrying away goods to the amount of several thousand dollars. He now desires to go to the Court of Claims to see whether he has a just and equitable claim against the Government. There is no appropriation or anything of that kind in the bill. It is simply to permit him to go to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR STORES AND SUPPLIES.

The bill (S. 2433) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

CAPT. WILLIAM N. TISDALL.

The bill (S. 1427) to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I see that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not here, and not knowing what particular merit there may be in a special act to promote this gentleman, I think the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

PORTRAIT OF DANIEL D. TOMPKINS.

The bill (S. 1499) to purchase a portrait of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Vice-President of the United States, painted by Jarvis in 1812, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask that that bill may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

ELECTRIC SUBWAYS IN THE DISTRICT.

The joint resolution (S. R. 187) relating to the laying of electric subways in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLEN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice.

TERM OF OFFICE OF POSTMASTERS.

The bill (S. 3514) to regulate the term of office of postmasters was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. GEAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JOPLIN, MO.

The bill (S. 3481) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Joplin, in the State of Missouri, was announced as next in order.

The bill was read.

Mr. MILLS. Is there a report accompanying the bill? If there is, I should like to have it read. I desire to know whether there is a court at that place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no report.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who reported the bill is not present. It seems to me he ought to be here and tell us something about it; about the size of the city, and whether there is a court there. I object to the bill for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. MILLS subsequently said: I desire to withdraw the objection which I made a while ago to the bill which was passed over for the erection of a public building at Joplin, Mo. I take it for granted that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who is not present knows all about it, and while there is no written report, I will withdraw my objection. The bill has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF MAIL SERVICE.

The bill (S. 1811) to extend the uses of the mail service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 12, after the word "deliver," to insert:

And the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, test the practical operation of this act in such one or more cities as he may select before extending it generally throughout the country, and if the result be unfavorable suspend its operation altogether.

So as to make the section read:

That it shall be lawful for the postal cards and envelopes, with coupons attached, as patented and now or hereafter owned by the United States Economic Postage Association or its successors, a corporation created under and by the laws of the State of West Virginia, to be carried in the mails of the United States, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, and the postage thereon, at the regular postal-card and letter rates, paid on presentation of the coupons from the said cards and envelopes when detached at the office of delivery; and the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, test the practical operation of this act in such one or more cities as he may select before extending it generally throughout the country, and if the result be unfavorable suspend its operation altogether.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General shall in the beginning or from time to time prescribe.

So as to read:

That before the said cards and envelopes shall be so carried through the mails the said association shall enter into a bond to the United States, with corporate or other sufficient security, to be approved in form and sufficiency by the Postmaster-General, in the sum of $100,000, or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General shall in the beginning or from time to time prescribe, conditioned for the redemption in cash when presented of each and every one of said coupons taken from cards and envelopes at the office of delivery.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the bill calls for an explanation from the Senator who reported it.

Mr. VILAS. This is a plan to enable persons to send out letters and provide for a reply for the convenience of tradesmen. It has been recommended by the Post-Office Department, examined by the committee, and the committee believe it is an experiment which the Post-Office Department ought to make with a view to facilitating the use of the postal service by tradesmen and merchants. Great care has been taken to guard the Department against the slightest risk in respect to the experiment. It is all left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and it so provided that he may, if he choose, try it in only one city in the country. I believe that the proposed act will prove a successful experiment and greatly facilitate the use of the mails.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. VILAS. Of course, if we are to go into an elaborate discussion of the bill, it would take some time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator from Rhode Island desires to have the report read, I suggest that it will be more convenient to have the House report read, because it sets forth the merits of the bill with illustrations. Instead of repeating it and reprinting it, our committee thought it best simply to refer to the House report with a general statement such as I have made from the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin one or two questions. As I gathered from the reading of the bill, it provides that a particular corporation may have the privilege of manufacturing and sending out these cards.

Mr. VILAS. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that that is because it is a patented device belonging to this corporation. The bill provides explicitly that the United States shall under no circumstances pay anything for royalty or for the patent.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that very well.

Mr. VILAS. It is the only way in which the plan can be made available at all.

Mr. ALLEN. But why give to a particular individual or a particular corporation a right that you do not extend to all other corporations or persons?

Mr. VILAS. Because they have already secured, under other laws, the patent. We do not interfere with that at all. We leave it where it is.

Mr. ALLEN. There ought to be in the same bill provision that other persons or corporations having similar patents may have the like privilege.

Mr. VILAS. But there is no other patent of that kind.

Mr. ALLEN. There may be.

Mr. VILAS. Then, if there should be, it should be opened at once. There is no difficulty on that score, I am sure. The Senator will see, if he will look at it.

Mr. ALLEN. It is so manifestly unfair to have special legislation in favor of one particular corporation in this respect that I shall object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator objects on that ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PAYMASTER JAMES E. TOLFREE, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 3492) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James E. Tolfree, paymaster, United States Navy, $4,000, in full for all losses of both Government and personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the Windsor House, at Yokohama, Japan, February 8, 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOME FOR AGED AND INFIRM COLORED PEOPLE.

Mr. PERKINS. I was in a committee room when the bill (S. 3227) to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people was temporarily passed over. The committee unanimously reported in favor it, and I think if the report of the committee is read to the Senate the bill will meet with no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator from California that there is no time to have the report read now. I wish he would let me get up a bill.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator from New Hampshire does not object to the bill, we will not consume any time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object, but we will not have time to have the report read.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill has been read, and its passage would please a great many people who are interested in a very just measure. However, I will not talk any more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

Mr. ALLEN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senate to go back to Order of Business 717, being the bill (S. 1823) to amend an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the Senate go back to the bill he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose that is in the regular order.

Mr. PERKINS. I supposed my request was in the regular order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought so.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to have the Senator from Nebraska——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be obliged to hold that where a bill has been passed over it requires unanimous consent to return to it and take it up.

Mr. CHANDLER. Where did the execution of the order begin? Did it take in Order of Business 717?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate began on page 14 of the Calendar, Order of Business 1186, being the bill (S. 1968) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company, and is proceeding in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. How did the Senate happen to begin with Order of Business 1186?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is where we left off the last time we had the Calendar up.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is where we left off.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order having been demanded, the next case on the Calendar will be announced.

PAY CLERK CHARLES BLAKE, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 3493) for the relief of Pay Clerk Charles Blake, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Charles Blake, pay clerk, United States Navy, $700, in full of all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the Windsor House, Yokohama, Japan, February 8, 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTINENTAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

The bill (S. 567) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company and others was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE COGSWELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 18, 1896.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM COGSWELL, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to communicate a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM COGSWELL, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate to the family of the deceased; and that as a further mark of respect the Senate will, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, stand adjourned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions are before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, Gen. WILLIAM COGSWELL, member-elect from the old Essex district of Massachusetts, one of the bravest and ablest soldiers she ever sent into battle, a statesman who had been gaining and growing in a large national fame for four terms in the House of Representatives, until it had been expected that by the general desire of the House he would have been assigned the place which carries with it the leadership of that body on the floor, died in Washington, May 22, 1895. He raised and commanded one of the first companies—he thought the very first—enlisted in the country for the war. He was in many battles, was with Sherman in the march to the sea, was three times wounded, and came home a general when the war ended. He was beloved by his soldiers, and had the confidence and affection of General Sherman.

The detail of this brilliant service, as of the lesser but important work which he did for his native Commonwealth in many other honorable places of trust, has been stated in the other House, especially in the admirable eulogy by his successor. Those proceedings will be printed with ours. So I need not repeat them here.

Mr. President, what I have said already would seem to be enough. To have been loved and trusted by as noble a constituency as ever made a part of a free people; to have been of the very first and of the very last in the great struggle for the country's life; to have gained a foremost place in that great Assembly which now as ever represents what is best and most trustworthy in American character; to have steadily grown in power and in honor until the boy who offered his life for his country at 22 was borne to his grave amid the lamentations of a whole people who honored him as one of the foremost among the statesmen of America in America's best and greatest day, would seem to make the language of ordinary eulogy alike ridiculous and superfluous.

One or two traits I will speak of for which General COGSWELL was specially remarkable: He was an example of what we so often find to be true, that the bravest men are the gentlest and most affectionate in their own households. He was a lover of home, of wife, of family, of children. The men who loved him best, where everybody knew him, were his near neighbors, and his townsmen, and the people of his district.

He was a man who grew constantly. The faults which he had when his public service began wore off and disappeared with life's discipline and experience. His intellectual powers developed and strengthened from year to year; so you could almost see the difference from year to year in the quality of his work and speech. When he entered the House of Representatives he was an able man. When he died, six years after, he was a great man. He had laid aside weaknesses and infirmities; he had burst and outgrown limitations; he had put under his feet faults and bad habits; so that if his life had been spared we should have looked upon him as one of our brightest and most shining models of what is excellent both in public and in private character. I think in these days, when there is so much well-founded and so much ill-founded criticism of the public life in this country, that it is well to point out to the people what an intellectual and what a moral education is service in these Halls for the men, and they are the large majority, who perform that public service faithfully to the best of their ability.

I believe I have been longer in continuous national legislative service in this country than any other man, with the single exception of my honored and venerable friend the senior Senator from Vermont. I declare as the result of my observation that the character of our national legislators is, on the whole, growing better from year to year and from generation to generation. Life in Washington is becoming purer and sweeter and simpler.

General COGSWELL grew in the confidence and esteem of his constituency. He was nominated by a majority of 1 and elected by a plurality only, being in a minority of near 1,400 of the total vote. At his last election he was nominated by acclamation and chosen by a majority in his district of 8,600 over all competitors, having a majority in every town, city, and ward in his entire district. He grew also, as I have said, in the love and affection of his associates.

He was as brave a man as ever went into battle. When his commanding officer had given him an order, there was no occasion for any further anxiety if the order was one which could be executed by human courage and skill. The men under his command felt sure that he would lead them in the path of glory, and, if any man could lead them in that path, in the path to victory.

He was a stanch friend, a trusty companion, and a wise counselor; a dauntless and unflinching champion of any cause in which he enlisted. If I were to sum up his quality by a single word, it would by the word manliness.

General COGSWELL had some very original and racy qualities of intellect and character. They were disclosed to his friends and companions more freely as he grew older. He was a man who mellowed with years. But yet his peculiarities remained. He had a certain gruff independence and originality which made every man like to know what he was thinking of and to listen to what he would say. He had a gift of pithy, sententious speech, a shrewd common sense, and sharp wit. He was a man whom Dr. Johnson would have liked for a companion. While he grew kindlier as he grew older, and was tolerant of human infirmities and liked men when he came to know them well, he was a good hater, and was especially impatient of cant and affectation and pomposity and the varnish and veneering of behavior.

Mr. President, my words of praise will seem feeble to those who have heard or who shall read the eloquent tributes of my colleagues in this and the other House. They will seem poor and inadequate as an expression of the feeling of the Commonwealth for the brave son she has lost and of the great constituency who mourn for their loved and honored Representative. He sleeps in her holy Pilgrim soil with the great men who for nearly three hundred years have adorned her annals. Massachusetts has given to the service of the country her full share of patriots, of benefactors, of statesmen, of orators, of poets, and of sages. It is no time for boasting when we are mourning for our dead. Certainly I would arrogate for Massachusetts no superiority of merit, especially in the presence of the representatives of the great Commonwealth of Virginia. And still it almost seems as if we might say of the little State what one of her poets said of our mother England—

> One-half her soil has walked the rest,
> In heroes, martyrs, sages.

To that honorable company WILLIAM COGSWELL is gathered. The men who loved him and whom he loved have laid him to sleep within the limits of old Essex, where Winthrop landed, where Endicott dwelt, where Putnam was born, where Whittier sang, where Dane and Cutler planned the great ordinance of 1787, which stands with the Declaration and the Constitution as one of three great title deeds of American liberty, and where the sailors put to sea for the great sea fights of the war of 1812.

General COGSWELL'S services in civil life alone would have given him a high place in the grateful memory of the people. But it is as a soldier that his countrymen will remember him, and it is as a soldier that he would wish to be remembered. Whatever may be said by the philosopher, the moralist, or the preacher, the instincts of the greater portion of mankind still lead them to award the highest meed of admiration to the military character. Even when the most selfish of human passions, the love of power, or the love of fame is the stimulant of the soldier's career, he must at least be ready for the supreme sacrifice—the willingness to give his life, if need be, for the object he is pursuing. The great apostle of the Gentiles, in his loftiest passages, illustrates the highest Christian character by comparing it to that of the soldier. And surely, when the end is unselfish, when the love of country or the desire to save her life by giving his own has entire mastery of the soul, when all the ends he aims at are his country's, his God's, and truth's, all mankind are agreed to award to the good soldier a glory which it bestows nowhere else.

Mr. President, more than the full allotted time of a generation has passed since the splendid youth of 1861 sprang at the call of their country to the defense of Washington. Men have reached mature middle life who were born since the sound was heard of the first shot at Fort Sumter. The great majority of the soldiers of the great war for the Union have gone. Their eyes will never again flash with triumph as they follow the flag to victory, or kindle with affection when they gaze on comrades' faces. Their ears are cold in death—

> They list no more the tuck of drum,
> No more the trumpet hear.

They will never again answer to the general's summons, to the thunder of the captains, and the shouting. They sleep with the great leaders—with Grant, and Sherman, and Sheridan, with Devens, and Hooker, and Shaw.

The majority have gone. The few survivors who remain with us are entering upon an honored old age, crowned with the love of their countrymen. But their fame and honor shall abide. It shall abide when the walls of this Capitol shall have crumbled, eternal and imperishable as the liberty they loved and the Union they saved.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I knew General COGSWELL as a member of the House of Representatives, where it was my fortune to serve with him several years. He was a gentleman of the highest character, modest and retiring in his disposition, and kind and courteous in his intercourse with his fellows. While he was well informed on all the subjects which come before Congress for consideration, he very rarely took part in the debates of the body. He was not a ready debater. He shrank from the arena. He had no taste for the controversial part of the consideration of subjects. He left that for others who were better adapted to it and whose tastes inclined them to share in the intellectual combat. He had his convictions, the result of intelligent consideration, and by them his conduct was controlled.

It takes nothing from the character of General COGSWELL to say that he was not a skilled and ready debater. This is not a faculty which can be acquired by labor, however intense and long continued. It is a gift of the Creator, and one that does not always accompany the mind of man, however largely it may be stored with knowledge. Its absence does not mean that character is wanting in moral force, or that intelligence is destitute of usefulness. Every day's experience proves to the contrary. Many of the greatest statesmen whom this country has ever produced were conspicuously deficient in the power of debate. The author of the Declaration of Independence immortalized himself with his pen. No man of his day possessed such power to arouse the world through the point of his pen as he. Yet when that great instrument was assailed in the Continental Congress by men whose names did not outlive their generation, he was utterly powerless to defend it. Benjamin Franklin was confessedly one of the greatest philosophers of the Revolutionary era and a very accomplished diplomat, but he could not debate a proposition like Hamilton or Adams. Nor was he a match for men below them in the gifts of debate. Andrew Jackson was strong with the pen and still stronger with the sword, and notwithstanding the fact that he was a trained lawyer and of ability enough to grace the supreme bench of his State, to represent her in the Senate of the United States, and to preside over the destinies of the nation, yet he could not debate. When he was in the Senate of the United States, during the Administration of the elder Adams, the Vice-President who presided over that body, and who was conscious enough of his own deficiency in that respect, formed a very unfavorable opinion of the man who, in after years, proved himself the great general, and as President of the United States so indelibly stamped his opinions on public questions on the minds of the people of the Republic.

To know General COGSWELL one had to be in close contact with him socially. In the committee room or in the abandon of social conversation at the fireside he showed himself the man of intelligence and thought. He could not be drawn into a heated controversy about anything. His whole nature was averse to it. He was not born for storms, but for sunshine. He was affable, gentle, and kind. His convictions and conduct were the product of reason, not of passion. In his intercourse with his fellows he sought to do right to them and to deserve right from them, and when he finished his career I do not suppose he left an enemy on the earth. His was, indeed, a massive, a splendid character. It stood out like a monumental stone, not adorned by fretted work, but plain, clean, powerful, and ponderous as it rested on its imperturbable base. Everywhere in the world of humanity character stands for a certain quantity of force—a force that is not perceptible to the sight or tangible to the touch. But it is a force nevertheless. It exists and exerts itself beyond the sphere of sensuous cognition. The elements in the character of an upright man impress themselves upon the moral and intellectual world just as light, heat, and moisture do upon the material world. They are among the silent forces which quicken with life the latent germs and cause them to grow and mature and bring forth their harvests in their season.

Such was the character of the distinguished son of Massachusetts around whose bier we are gathered to-day. I have spoken of him as he appeared to me, the representative of his people in the councils of the nation. But there was another theater where he appeared as an actor in the earlier days of his life. He was his country's soldier in a great war where hundreds of thousands gave their lives for the land they loved. To one who has borne arms in such a war, who has seen and felt all which that one word means, it would be more acceptable that almost all the other virtues he possessed should be forgotten than that crowning virtue of true manhood. He was a brave soldier, an intelligent officer and leader, tried on many fields and measuring up to the duties of every station which he was appointed to fill. His record as a soldier gave Massachusetts just cause to be proud of him, and imposes upon her the duty of cherishing his memory and carving his name in the list of those who in peace and war have made her name immortal.

In the conflict of which I have spoken he and I were on opposite sides. Each fought for the cause he loved. Each fought with those among whom he was born—he for Massachusetts and I for Texas. For four long and troubled years our armies were striking at each other's lives and the lives of the governments whose standards they bore. The arbitrament of the sword declared the United States victor and the Confederate States vanquished—that the Union of the States should be an indissoluble union, and that each citizen should be a member of the great commonwealth of States as it was established by a common ancestry. The wise counsels that dominated the policy of the conquerors soon restored fraternity, and a union of "hearts and hands" as well as of "lakes and lands." Soon Union and Confederate soldiers met and mingled in the national councils, and soon the estranged people were brought together and mingled in peace and patriotic devotion in all the relations of private life. Having by the consent of our people been sent to the House of Representatives, we met here as friends, not as foes, and began our labors for the advancement of our country, each in the way he thought wisest and best. As intimately as I knew him, I never heard him speak of his military career until I met him one evening at a lecture delivered on the battle of Missionary Ridge, which was some years after he had been elected to Congress. When the lecture was over some questions were asked about certain commands that took part in the battle, and during the colloquy I learned that we had been confronting each other from Chattanooga to Atlanta. That campaign has gone into history, and those who shared in it are rapidly passing away. Most of them, like General COGSWELL, have stacked arms on this side the river, and have crossed over and are now "resting under the shade of the trees." Those of us whom the roster has designated for duty with the rear guard are still on the march, and soon shall reach the rendezvous on the farther bank of the shining river, where the blue jacket and the gray are both faded into white, and where Grant and Lee, and Jackson and Sheridan, and Thomas and Hood, and Burnside and Johnston, and the thousands whom they led, are standing round the same bivouac fires, citizens of the same great commonwealth and soldiers in the armies of the Prince of Peace.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am glad to give my testimony to the excellencies of Gen. WILLIAM COGSWELL. The addresses made in the other House and the one made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts, however, leave very little to be said by anyone. There are some bare facts, and the facts that I venture to mention of his life alone are a sufficient eulogy.

His descent was that which we in New England think is honorable. From a Puritan who landed in a shipwreck on the coast of Maine in 1635, in the fifth generation that family illustrated the character of the people who had a belief, recognized a duty, and never flinched from it. Eight brothers of the Cogswell name were in the Revolutionary war, their aggregate service counting thirty-eight years. We may judge from that where the young man was likely to go when the long roll sounded. He enlisted as soon as he heard of the trouble of a Massachusetts regiment in the streets of Baltimore.

He was a gentleman of education, and had entered upon a professional life, but he dropped everything. He enlisted April 19, 1861. He became a captain of the Second Massachusetts Infantry on the 25th of May. We may be assisted in estimating the character of the man by looking at the history of his regiment. At Cedar Mountain it lost 35 per cent of its force; at Antietam, 25 per cent; at Chancellorsville, 33 per cent of those who were in action; at Gettysburg, 44 per cent of all who entered into that great battle. During the war that regiment on its rolls bore the names of 843 soldiers killed, injured, and disabled in action or by accident or disease.

On the 25th of September, 1862, he was detailed to duty as a major. He was made lieutenant-colonel shortly afterwards, on the 23d of October. He became a colonel of his regiment in June, 1863, at the age of 24. His regiment reenlisted in December, 1863, becoming the Second Regiment of Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers. During the furlough of thirty days to which they became entitled, he took the remnant of the regiment to Massachusetts. Of the 1,046 who had left Boston thirty months before, 222 returned. When they were welcomed by Governor Andrew, General COGSWELL felicitously replied:

> When I say to your excellency that these men, with the experience they have had, with the hardships, sufferings, and dangers that they have seen and dared, have reenlisted, I have said enough for a lifetime in their praise.

He was in the famous Atlanta campaign. He was put in command of Atlanta for a time, and to this day he is remembered with kindliness and respect in that region.

In April, 1865, when Sherman was about closing his great campaign, General COGSWELL was wounded at Averysboro, N. C. The second day after that he was again wounded, the third wound he received in the war. The last two, though more or less painful, did not keep him from continuing on duty.

In civil life he was adequate to every task imposed upon him, and the good will of his constituency is shown by the fact that, coming from the war, he was three times elected mayor; he was once a senator of his State; he was five times a representative in the Massachusetts assembly; he was five times elected to Congress, and had his life not been cut off untimely he would probably have continued in the public service, even to a great old age. He was elected, as has been stated, to the present Congress by a majority of over 8,000, but the plurality was 10,000.

While General COGSWELL was a stanch Republican and commanded the respect of everybody having a creed and living up to it, he was a generous friend of his Southern brethren, as is shown by a short and eloquent speech that he delivered in the House when Georgia was asking Federal aid for an exposition which she was about to hold.

In the private relations of life he was without a fault. In public life he was a man of absolute integrity. He was diligent, faithful, honorable, lovable. He was emphatically a patriot, a soldier, and a gentleman.

The tribute to his character paid by his colleagues in the two Houses of Congress from East, West, North, and South abound in the strongest terms of respect, friendship, and sorrow. It was a very noble life. There never was a duty that he did not fully discharge. There never was a place which he did not fill with a fidelity and a capacity more than satisfactory to his constituents and all others who knew him.

The bare facts of his life, I say, are a sufficient eulogy. His fellow-citizens and neighbors of Washington remember him with more than affection. Massachusetts will honor him from generation to generation.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I esteemed Gen. WILLIAM COGSWELL too highly to permit this occasion to pass without adding my own testimonial, however brief, to his worth as a man and his value as a citizen. My acquaintance with him was not a long one, but I knew him well. This acquaintanceship with him began when he entered the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States. I served with him as a member of the House of the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses, and during the two years of the Fiftieth Congress he was associated with me in membership upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of that body. This association led to close acquaintanceship, aye, to more than that, to good will, high esteem, and a friendship which existed up to the time of his death.

General COGSWELL was a high type of a man. His disposition was genial, his manner and address courteous and attractive, his presence magnetic. The qualities of his heart indicated the broad-minded, liberal, philanthropic, sympathetic man; while the qualities of his mind denoted high capacity, the constituent parts of which are discernment, clearness of intellectual vision, analytical power, and strength of grasp of a question. In the consideration of questions that came before him for decision or action he was at once fair and just, accurate and able.

Mr. President, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has been represented in the two Houses of Congress by many sons who have honored her trust and shed luster upon her name. The great Webster stands out like an Eiffel Tower or Washington Monument in American history, while over the names of the Adamses, Winthrop, Rufus Choate, Charles Sumner, Edward Everett, and others, the student of American biography loves to linger. Some of her sons who figure in contemporaneous history are most worthy of honorable mention in this regard.

But while paying this tribute to the statesmanship of the Bay State, it may be said with equal truth that not all of her public men have always been tolerant of judgment of the opinions and actions of other men. Too often have we seen the reverse. But this can not be said of him whose life and character form the theme which now occupies the attention of the Senate. General COGSWELL was a man whose opinions, while strong and forceful, were tempered with a just regard for and consideration of the opinions of others. He was tolerant of judgment. Bigotry had no place in his make-up or composition. He believed that good could come out, and does come out, of "every Nazareth" in the land, whether it be situated in the Northern or Southern, Eastern or Western portion of this great country of ours. His heart was broad and catholic in its sentiment. It embraced the whole of this country and included in a common brotherhood all who bore the insignia of his country's citizenship.

A gallant soldier in the war between the States, who won rank in arms and distinction in the field, General COGSWELL exemplified in his career after the war the truth of the maxim that "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." He won civic victories as great as those he had achieved as a soldier. He served his State with distinction in both houses of her legislature, and as one of her Representatives in Congress he occupied an enviable position among the legislators of his time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on occasions like this we are forcibly reminded of the fact that—

Man's home is in the grave!
Here dwell the multitude.

Death is an inseparable condition of life—inexorable and sure. It has been said that there is nothing so momentous, so imminent, so certain, so universal. "It is appointed unto men once to die." There is no exemption, no reprieve, for "dust to dust" was the sentence pronounced on all humanity.

Earth to earth, and dust to dust!
Here the evil and the just,
Here the youthful and the old,
Here the fearful and the b old,
Here the matron and the maid,
In one silent bed are laid;
Here the vassal and the king
Side by side lie withering;
Here the sword and scepter rust—
Earth to earth, and dust to dust!

We are here to-day to speak loving words of eulogy to the memory of a friend and associate. WILLIAM COGSWELL impressed me as a man of broad sympathies, profound convictions, and generous impulses. He was genial, kind, companionable, and sincere. Brave and fearless on the field of battle, he was in private life as gentle as a woman and as sweet as a child. If he ever did a mean thing, those of us who associated with him in the other House of Congress knew it not. He was a strong debater, a tireless worker, and an indomitable antagonist, but he was always a fair and open opponent. The idol of his city and his district, he enjoyed in the House of Representatives the distinction of being one of the most popular men of that body. On leading committees and charged with grave duties, he was always equal to the requirements of the position, acquitting himself with distinguished ability and with an integrity and fidelity questioned by none. His record is one of conspicuous merit, without a spot or blemish to mar its symmetry or cloud its horizon.

General COGSWELL was withal a man of intense earnestness. How well I remember him at the Republican national convention of 1892, in the city of Minneapolis. In the contest before that convention he differed from some of us, but no arguments or entreaties moved him in the least. Early and late he sought the accomplishment of his purpose, and when finally the candidate of his choice was nominated, he resumed his wonted composure, as though nothing unusual had engaged his attention. He had made a great fight and had won a conspicuous victory, but in the moment of triumph humility rather than pride possessed him. That was like the man. An earnest opponent, but never a bitter or revengeful antagonist.

Others have told the story of General COGSWELL'S career as soldier, civilian, and legislator. That I need not repeat. It is sufficient for me to recall him as a friend and an associate in the service of the Government. I knew him well, and to know him well was to admire and love him. Large-hearted, generous, and sympathetic, his companionship was an inspiration and his friendship a benediction. Through all the weary months of his sickness and suffering my heart went out to him in sympathy and affection. At last death came as a respite, and the soul of this great and good man took its flight to the abode of the blessed, where suffering, sorrow, and death are unknown.

He passed away gently and quietly, and joined the majority on the shores of the Great Beyond.

But why should we mourn for our departed friend, for is not death a necessary result, to be welcomed rather than repelled after the strifes and toils and struggles of a busy and eventful life? Let us, as we contemplate death, adopt the words of Addison:

When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tombstone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see the tomb of the parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow; when I see kings lying by those who deposed them, when I consider rival wits placed side by side, or the holy men that divided the world with their contests and disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions, and debates of mankind; when I read the several dates of the tombs, of some that died yesterday and some six hundred years ago, I consider that great day when we shall all of us be contemporaries and make our appearance together.

Mr. President, I bring to the memory of my friend a tender and loving tribute. The place he so well filled on earth is forever vacant, but I believe that his earnest spirit is enjoying the delights, the joys, and the labors of a better world than this. This belief reconciles one to death, and prepares our minds for the great change that awaits us all. On the grave of the distinguished dead I would plant sweetest flowers, and in my heart of hearts cherish his memory in loving kindness and tenderest affection. A good man left the world when WILLIAM COGSWELL died, and the world was the better because he lived in it. Let us, in appreciation of his virtues, emulate his example, and strive to so live that it can be said of us, when the end comes, that we left behind us a legacy of good deeds and of honorable achievement.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, he who comes last in a field where so many eloquent speakers have reaped can only hope to glean among the already garnered sheaves. Coming from the same county, a friend of many years, I can not, however, fail to express the affection I felt for the distinguished man to whose memory we do honor to-day. To that memory I wish to pay my tribute and recall once more the deeds and honors of a distinguished life.

WILLIAM COGSWELL was born at Bradford, Mass., on the 23d of August, 1838. The family were of English origin and came to this country in 1635. Family history records that John Cogswell, the first of the name in the New World, was wrecked with his wife and eight children on the Maine coast. Notwithstanding this disastrous termination of a perilous voyage, the family found their way to the town of Ipswich, in Essex County, Mass., and there settled. WILLIAM COGSWELL was the seventh in descent from John Cogswell, the original Puritan settler. The family appears to have been a prominent one in England, where they owned and conducted woolen mills through successive generations; and the American branch soon made themselves felt in the neighborhood in which they dwelt. The grandfather of General COGSWELL rose to be chief medical officer in the Continental Army and seven of his brothers likewise served their country in various capacities in the war of the Revolution. Dr. George Cogswell, the father of WILLIAM COGSWELL, is a well-known man, and was one of the founders of the Republican party. In 1860 he was a delegate to the convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln. His life has been a long and eminently useful one, and he is still living, at an advanced age, at the family home in Bradford. His wife, who was a Miss Abigail Parker, died when her son was only about 7 years of age.

WILLIAM COGSWELL'S early education was secured at various academies in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. He was a pupil of the Atkinson Academy, Atkinson, N. H.; Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and Kimball's Union Academy, Meriden, N. H. In 1855 he entered Dartmouth College. His collegiate training, however, was brief, and in 1856 and 1857 he became a sailor before the mast, visiting in this way many of the principal ports of the world. Returning to his native State, he entered the Harvard Law School for a course of study, and on September 8, 1860, was admitted to practice at the Essex County bar. His first legal experience was obtained in the office of William D. Northend, who is an eminent lawyer, and a little later, in April, 1861, he opened an office for himself. COGSWELL was at this time 22 years of age, and the exciting events of that period were little calculated to hold the young lawyer at his desk. The drudgery of professional toil would hardly commend itself to a man who came of a race of soldiers when the land was filled with rumors of war. During the winter which preceded the inauguration of Lincoln he enlisted in a local militia organization and entered with enthusiasm upon the performance of his military duties. In a statement which he left can be found an accurate and a concise history of the brilliant military career of which this enlistment in a militia company was the beginning. The attack of the mob on the Sixth Massachusetts in the streets of Baltimore roused the heart and conscience of the loyal North. Within twenty-four hours from the time when the news first reached Salem, young COGSWELL had recruited a full company of 100 men. His office was turned into a recruiting station, and it is worthy of remark that so successful was the work of enlistment that the company was, if not the first, one of the very first raised in the country for the war. The work of organization went on rapidly, and in the May following Captain COGSWELL'S company became Company C of Gordon's famous Second Massachusetts. On an occasion like this it is impossible to do more than allude briefly to some of the leading incidents of a military career filled with deeds of conspicuous gallantry. In the winter and spring of 1861–62 COGSWELL was attached to Banks's command in the Shenandoah Valley, and on several occasions opposed an effectual resistance to Jackson's operations in that region. After the battle of Antietam, where his company and regiment were engaged all day with signal success, COGSWELL was promoted to be lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. In this battle he was slightly wounded, but he quickly recovered sufficiently to be able to lead an expedition under the cover of darkness across the river into Virginia, which ended in the capture of a band of guerrillas and in the death of their notorious captain, Burk. COGSWELL participated at the head of his regiment in the bloody conflict at Chancellorsville. On the second day of the engagement he was wounded severely in the left arm. This obliged him to retire from the field of battle, and he was unable to rejoin his regiment until after the battle of Gettysburg. In the following month of June he was made colonel of the regiment, being at that time but 24 years of age. His next conspicuous service was in connection with the draft riots in New York City. The discharge of this duty called for unusual coolness and discretion, but COGSWELL proved equal to the emergency. When comparative quiet had been restored, the regiment rejoined the Army of the Potomac, and a little later became a part of the Army of the Cumberland. His most conspicuous service, however, was probably rendered before Atlanta. He was actively engaged in the campaign which resulted in the evacuation of Atlanta, and was mentioned for distinguished conduct at the battle of Resaca. When Sherman entered the city, on September 3, 1864, one of his first acts was to make Colonel COGSWELL post commander, a position which he held until the 17th of November, when the Union Army began its famous march to the sea. It is worth remembrance here that when, thirty years later, the people of Georgia were asking for national aid for the Atlanta Exposition, they found no more effective advocate than the former military commander of Atlanta, then serving his native State with distinction in the halls of Congress. Both in the Appropriations Committee, of which he was a member, and on the floor of the House, General COGSWELL did zealous service for the city which he left a heap of smoldering ruins in November, 1864. Shortly after the fall of Atlanta, on December 12, 1864, Colonel COGSWELL was brevetted brigadier-general, and just a month later was assigned to the command of the Third Division of the Twentieth Army Corps. This command he continued to hold until he was mustered out of the service in July, 1865. In one of the last engagements of the war, at the battle of Averysboro in April, 1865, General COGSWELL was wounded for the third time. The injury did not prove serious, however, but the one received at Chancellorsville continued to harass him until the end of his life.

With the close of the war General COGSWELL returned to Salem and to the practice of the law. Two years later he was elected mayor of Salem, and served three years in that capacity. In 1873 and 1874 he was again mayor. From the time he was first summoned to public office he never for a moment forfeited the confidence of his adopted city. Five times he represented it in the Massachusetts house of representatives, and during the years 1885–86 was State senator. In 1876 he was made inspector-general of fish for the State of Massachusetts, a post he continued to enjoy until he was elected to the Fiftieth Congress in 1886 from the old Essex district. He was reelected to the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses. His committee assignments were varied and important. He served, among others, on Appropriations, Rivers and Harbors, and the District of Columbia. His work on Appropriations and Rivers and Harbors was most exacting, but he discharged it with unusual ability and fidelity.

In the fall of 1894 he was selected by the Republican State committee to preside over the convention of that year. His speech had been prepared and had been given out to the newspapers in accordance with custom. There had been no intimation of declining health, and the report, which was first given out on the morning of the convention, that he could not preside over its deliberations, came, therefore, as a painful surprise to his friends and the public generally. His indisposition was at first thought to be but temporary, but it soon became evident as the campaign progressed that he was stricken with an incurable malady. In the November election his constituents rallied to pay him one last tribute of affection and regard. The plurality he received was the largest given any candidate for Congress in Massachusetts that year. When Congress convened for the short session in December, he was unable to take his seat, but in a few weeks he insisted on coming on to Washington to resume his public duties. Attendance upon the sessions of the House, however, only aggravated his malady, and he soon afterwards journeyed southward to Jamaica, in a vain search for health. But the skill of physicians and the loving and tender care of wife and friends were alike hopeless. He succeeded in getting as far as Washington on his return journey, and here, after lingering for a number of weeks, he died on the 22d of May, 1895.

Such in bare cold outline are the incidents of an honorable and distinguished life. But there is much more than this to be said. He was not only a good soldier, who rose at a very early age to a high command, but he was conspicuous for personal gallantry. He had a warm and impetuous temperament that carried him to the front of battle in his youth and which gave him the energy and the power which marked his career in later life. We speak of him here in the Capitol as the soldier and the public man, and it is not fitting perhaps to go further. Yet to those of us who knew him well and whose affection he possessed, the qualities of mind and heart which made him beloved by his constituents and which endeared him to those nearest to him are very present. He was a loyal friend and a frank and open foe. He was warm-hearted and affectionate, vigorous in speech, and full of sympathy and humor. He had strong convictions and was always earnest in expressing them. He showed a strength of will and a power of self-control which commanded the admiration of everyone who understood the manner in which he had displayed these fine and manly qualities. Those who were associated with him in Congress understood and appreciated his high value as a public servant and grieved for his death because it was the loss of a companion and friend. The State which he had represented, the famous county and the old Puritan town which he had served so long, mourned with deep and genuine sorrow when he was brought back to his last resting place in the land where his people had lived for seven generations, and which he loved with all the strength of his heart.

If we reckon length of life by the number of days, that of General COGSWELL was short indeed, but if we take for our measure the words of Stevenson that "to the bold and the busy life is always long," then this life, whose end we mourn to-day, was far longer than that of many which outrun the psalmist's span. It was filled with work which any man might have been proud of, with deeds which not only brought fame and honor to the doer, but which served country and State in the day of battle and in the time of peace. What he did may have fallen short of what he desired to do, as is always the case with strong men of action. The outward rewards that he received, distinguished as they were, may well have seemed to him, as they certainly often did to others, not always to equal the deserts. But now that the book is closed and the last account made up, we can fairly say that he had, whatever else might have been lacking, the best of all rewards—the consciousness that he had played a man's part in the life of his time, and left a memory which his children and his children's children will reverence and cherish. He not only served with distinction in public life, performing with faithful diligence arduous duties, many of which brought no compensation except the knowledge of duty done, but he also served his country on the great field of the civil war. In that mighty trial he had had his share. What an opportunity it was to men like COGSWELL, who tasted it to the full! With such a life as his in that war time, I always think of the splendid and familiar lines of Scott, in which we may find the secret of the great romancer's life and art:

Sound, sound the clarion! fill the fife!
To all the sensual world proclaim,
One crowded hour of glorious life
Is worth an age without a name.

It was given to a man like COGSWELL to be able to say this, and I think we may well ask ourselves whether any man who can say it of himself truthfully has much need to desire more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions which have been read.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 8, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 6, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENGROSSED BILLS PASSED.

The SPEAKER. On the following bills the reading of the engrossed copy was demanded, and the previous question having been ordered, the Clerk will read the engrossed bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4930) granting a pension to Mary Forward.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1323) for the relief of Ira H. Sweatt.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 10167.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to renew the amendment which I offered the other evening and withdrew just at the conclusion of the day's labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was to strike out "one" and insert "five."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 1, strike out "one" and insert "five;" so as to read "for five new engines."

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, we have passed that paragraph, have we not?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If you will refer to the RECORD, you will find that just as I withdrew my amendment the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] moved that the committee rise, and there were no further steps taken. That will be found in the RECORD on page 1552.

Mr. GROUT. The reading of the paragraph for the increase of the fire department was finished reading, and the reading of the bill this morning would be resumed after that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. What page of the RECORD does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Page 1552. I call the attention of the Chair to the top of the page, first column. The Chair will find that immediately, as I withdrew my motion, it reads: "And then, on motion of Mr. GROUT, the committee rose." That was immediately after I withdrew my amendment. I did not have the report of the District Commissioners at the time and I did not have the interview to which I referred. I have them now, and I desire briefly to call attention to those matters. If you refer to the RECORD, you will find that the statement is as I have made it, at the top of page 1552, first column.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire where the Clerk understands the reading is to begin this morning. I do not know what the RECORD may show, but my recollection is that the reading ended at telegraphs and telephones——

The CHAIRMAN. The last reading seems to be on page 1551.

Mr. RICHARDSON. At the top of page 1552 of the RECORD the Chair will see the action of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk had concluded the reading of line 6 of that page, and then the gentleman from Tennessee offered his amendment, and no point was made against it at that time. After some discussion, the gentleman from Tennessee withdrew his amendment, and then the gentleman from Vermont moved that the committee rise. The Chair thinks that the gentleman can renew the amendment this morning if he desires to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to renew the amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the recommendation of the District Commissioners. I mentioned it the other afternoon, but did not have the report of the Commissioners.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, however, finds on reading page 1551 that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee was simply a pro forma amendment, and not this amendment, and the amendment was to line 7 and not line 1.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendment I offered, the real amendment, was to strike out "one," before the word "new," and insert "five."

Mr. GROUT. But, Mr. Chairman, as I understood it, that amendment was made to line 1 in page 29 of the bill. Then, after that, discussion was continued upon a motion to strike out the last word, and the Clerk read down to "Telegraph and telephone service."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the extract from the Commissioners' report which I have marked.

The Clerk read the extract, as follows:

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

During the fiscal year 1896 the engine house on M street, between New Jersey avenue and First street NW., for the use of Truck D, was completed, and the engine house on D street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets NW., was nearly completed.

With the growth and development of the city and the populous suburbs an equivalent extension of the fire service becomes indispensable. The recent report of the assessor of the District of Columbia, modified by more recent information from United States officers, shows that the value of buildings in the District aggregates about $190,241,921. Of this amount, buildings of the value of $108,528,100 are owned by the United States of America. For the protection of all this vast investment in buildings from destruction or injury by fire the entire equipment of the fire department of the District consists of 10 fire engines, 4 hook and ladder companies, and 2 chemical-engine companies.

The Commissioners have appended to their estimate of appropriations for the fiscal year 1898 a table showing the population of the principal cities of the Union and the equipment of each of said cities for protection against fire. Of these cities, San Francisco, Cleveland, Buffalo, and Pittsburg approximate the District in population. The other cities named in the following table do not equal in population the District:

City.	Population.	Engine companies.	Hook and ladders.	Chemical engines.	Members.
San Francisco	298,997	19	6	7	404
Pittsburg	263,312	19	6	2	239

It not unfrequently happens that when a general alarm has called the entire fire department to one section of the city other fires have occurred in parts of the District remote from the scene of the first alarm, and it may well be expected that such a concurrence of fires may exist as to divide the available resources of the department so as to render it, as it now consists, incapable of meeting the demands upon it. A better equipment of the District fire department is, therefore, imperatively demanded by the commonsense precautions which would govern any business man in regard to his own affairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the fact that several other cities of above 200,000 population have as many as 20 fire engines, while Washington, with a population of 280,000, has only 10. The additional one which this gives will make the total number 11. I call attention further to the statement of the Commissioners in their report, that "it not unfrequently happens that when a general alarm has called the entire fire department to one section of the city other fires have occurred in parts of the District remote from the scene of the first alarm, and it may well be expected that such a concurrence of fires may exist as to divide the available resources of the department so as to render it, as it now exists, incapable of meeting the demands upon it."

I certainly think, Mr. Chairman, that with that statement of the Commissioners before us, we ought to pass an amendment giving 5 additional engines. If we do that, Washington will then have only 15 engines, while the city of New Orleans, with a population of 242,000, has 25, and Detroit, with a population of 205,000, has 20.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to have five minutes more.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In this connection, I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk the interview with Chief Parris on this subject which I referred to the other day. It was published in the Star of December 20, 1896, just a day or two after the big fire which destroyed the lumber yard down near the Government Printing Office.

The interview was read, as follows:

That the facilities of the fire department of this city are wholly inadequate to cope with a conflagration of any size is readily recognized upon a comparison of the force of the department in this city and the forces in other cities of the same size throughout the country. The danger from a number of fires breaking out at the same time is especially great from this cause, and it is safe to say that the city is constantly placed at great risk because of the very limited facilities that Congress has given to the fire department.

Chief Parris, of the fire department, talked at some length to-day to a Star reporter regarding the lack of facilities with which he is supplied to cope with fires that may break out in the city.

"Take the cities of Cincinnati, San Francisco, Cleveland, Buffalo, Pittsburg, and New Orleans," said Mr. Parris, "and compare the force of the fire departments there with the force in this city. The population of these cities range from 242,000 to 298,000, while the population of this city is placed at 230,000, which is a very low estimate and probably considerably below what the actual figures should be.

"Our fire department consists of 169 members, with 10 engine companies, 4 hook and ladder companies, and 2 chemicals, and there are 1,757 fire plugs scattered throughout the city. Comparing this force with other cities, we find that we have scarcely more than half the facilities that are given elsewhere to cope with fires.

"In New Orleans, for instance, where the population is 242,000, there are 25 engine companies, 8 hook and ladder companies, and 9 chemicals, with 273 men on the force. In Pittsburg, with a population of 263,000, there are 19 engine companies, 6 hook and ladder companies, 2 chemicals, and 239 men. In Buffalo, with a population of 255,000, there are 23 engine companies, 9 hook and ladder companies, 4 chemicals, with the additional facilities of 1 water tower and 1 fire boat, with 245 men. Cleveland, Ohio, has a population of 261,000, yet its fire department consists of 287 men, organized in 25 engine companies, 9 hook and ladder companies, 4 chemicals, and 2 fire boats. San Francisco, with a population of 298,000, has a fire department organized into 19 engine companies, 6 hook and ladder companies, 7 chemicals, with 1 water tower and 1 fire boat, and with a total force of 404 men. Cincinnati has a population of 296,000, and it has 26 engine companies, 10 hook and ladder companies, 3 chemicals, and 298 men in the department.

POOR SHOWING FOR WASHINGTON.

"This is a very poor showing for a city like Washington, where the improvements are exceedingly costly and where, if a destructive fire should break out, there is possibility of tremendous loss of property. Now, take the cities that are much smaller than is Washington. Detroit, Mich., with a population of only 205,000, has a fire department with 300 men, organized in 20 engine companies, 10 hook and ladder companies, 6 chemicals, with 1 water tower and 1 fire boat. This force is about twice as strong as that in Washington, where the population exceeds Detroit's fully 25,000. There is Milwaukee, with a population of only 204,000, yet they have 15 engine companies, 7 hook and ladder companies, 7 chemicals, with 1 water tower and 1 fire boat, and 253 men. Even Minneapolis, with only 164,000 population, has a fire department nearly twice as strong as that existing in Washington. It has 18 engine companies, 5 hook and ladder companies, 8 chemicals, and 266 men. St. Paul, with only 133,000 population, but little more than one-half the population of Washington, has a force of 30 more men than we have, organized in 13 engine companies, 10 hook and ladder companies, and 8 chemicals. Kansas City, with but 132,000 population, has 18 engine companies, 5 hook and ladder companies, with 1 water tower. Even Indianapolis, with but 105,000 population, considerably less than one-half of the population of this city, has a larger fire department than have we. That city has 14 engine companies, 4 hook and ladder companies, and 3 chemicals. I think that these facts are strong enough to indicate a pressing demand for additional facilities for the fire department of this city without comment.

NO RESERVE FORCE.

"Should a very large fire occur and a general alarm be sent in," continued Mr. Parris, "there would be no reserve force to protect the lives and property of citizens left wholly unprotected by the necessity of calling out all the companies to one fire. This was demonstrated last evening. While the fire at the Rink was burning another alarm was sounded, and the one engine not in use was sent out on the Brentwood road. It would have been exceedingly unfortunate if another fire had broken out at that time, because I do not see how we could have sent anything to it.

"Another forcible example of this condition was had at a recent fire on Louisiana avenue and B street, between Ninth and Tenth streets. It will be remembered that a large fire started there about 8 o'clock in the evening, and in less than ten minutes it had spread to such proportions that it was absolutely necessary to call upon the entire fire department to subdue the flames. The fire occurred immediately after a severe electric storm, and had another fire started in another section of the city it would have been necessary to send aid from this fire. As it was, with the entire department doing service at this fire, we experienced the greatest difficulty in confining the flames, and not until twenty-three buildings had been completely gutted was the fire gotten under control. Had there been ten more companies at that fire, they could have been used to the best advantage.

DANGERS THAT THREATEN.

"The great success we have had in handling this department seems to have led some of our legislators to believe that it is impossible for a fire to get away from us in this city. This is far from the case. At any time, with our present limited force, we are liable to sustain losses that would partially paralyze the business of the city. In addition to the property owned by the people of this city, we have to contend with the many public buildings and their valuable contents, which are being increased year by year. Another thing of much importance to us, which makes the handling of fires in this day a hazardous and perilous undertaking, is the manner in which business and dwelling houses are erected. Houses are erected in rows after rows, and instead of being two stories, as in former times, they go up four, five, and six stories in height.

"In my estimates I have asked Congress to give us an engine company to be located in Anacostia, and one in the section bounded by Eighth and Tenth and D and E streets NW. There are over 1,100 buildings in Anacostia, scattered over 1 square mile and inhabited by 6,000 persons, and this does not include the churches, schools, and outbuildings, yet this suburban town is without any protection from fire whatever. An engine company is located on North Carolina avenue between Sixth and Seventh streets SE., and that is the nearest company to that suburb, which is 1¼ miles from the nearest fire-alarm box. Then there is the St. Elizabeth Asylum for the Insane and the German Orphan Asylum, which receive but slight protection from our department. The bridge across the Eastern Branch at Eleventh street can not always be depended upon, and it is easy to see that if a fire should break out in Anacostia much damage might be done before a company could reach it.

"The business portion of our city is constantly increasing, and there is great necessity for another fire company in the center of the city. The buildings going up are larger and more costly than have ever been erected and are stocked with valuable inflammable goods.

"While this is what I have asked for, because we have to be pretty modest in making requests of Congress, I think there should be a very material increase in the strength of our fire department before the people of this city can feel perfectly safe. We are far behind other cities in the strength of our department, and I hope we will not wait to learn this fact by any experiences in addition to those we have had. This question should awaken the people and cause them to work hard in order to give this city proper fire protection."

During the reading of the extract the time of Mr. RICHARDSON expired; and, on motion of Mr. PITNEY, it was extended to permit the reading to be completed.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, just a word with reference to this amendment. I stated the other day that the fire department of this city could not properly be compared with that of other cities because of the much greater facilities which the streets here afford for the assembling of the forces of the department. Washington is unparalleled in that respect.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he intends to follow this amendment with another, making an appropriation of $100,000 at least, to provide houses and hose carriages to accompany these five new engines which he wants us to give. That should follow logically, and also a provision for manning those engines, which would increase the fire force to the number of 20 men for every 2 engines, and would call for a further large appropriation. I want to ask him, also, why he persists in saying that there are but 10 fire engines in this city, when I informed him on Saturday, and if he had looked at the hearings before the committee he could have learned for himself, that there are 12 engines in the city of Washington—10 in service and 2 in reserve—and this bill carries an appropriation for manning the 2 additional engines provided for last year, which will make the number in service 12. Not only that, but this bill provides for still another engine, making a total of 13. Last year the Commissioners estimated for 3 new fire engines. The committee gave them 2, and we are now providing for manning those engines, so as to make them effective. They have asked for 2 new engines in this year's estimate, and only 2. Why, sir, the gentleman outruns the estimate of the Commissioners. The Commissioners asked for only 2 new engines. We have given them 1. We thought that under the present circumstances they would be able to get along with what we proposed to allow them. I believe that the fire department in this city is really much better provided for than certain other departments are. I hope we shall vote down this amendment without further discussion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Vermont asks why——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move, then, to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. The gentleman asks why I persist in the proposition I have submitted on this subject. I do so because the District Commissioners in their annual report for the year ending June 30, 1896—the last report we have from them—put down the number of engines at 10; hook and ladders, 4; chemical engines, 2. Now, I grant that, counting the chemical engines, we have 12. But I have asked the committee to make a comparison of the equipment of the fire department of this District with that of other cities. Detroit, for instance, with 205,000 population, against 280,000 in Washington, has 20 engines and 6 chemical engines, making 26. I did not count the chemical engines in referring before to the city of Detroit.

Mr. GROUT. And we do not count the chemical engines in making the 12. There are 12 fire engines——

Mr. RICHARDSON. The District Commissioners in their report say——

Mr. GROUT. But have I not told the gentleman that the Commissioners report 10 fire companies, and this bill provides for two additional companies to man two other engines.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let it be conceded, then, that there are 12 fire engines here, as against 20 in the city of Detroit. I am informed at this moment by a gentleman on my left that in a little town of Georgia, with 30,000 inhabitants, they have 4 engines. Then, again, Minneapolis, with 164,000 people, has 18 engines.

But, Mr. Chairman, passing over that matter, I call attention to the statement of the chief of the fire department of this city, who says that the facilities for fighting fires here are utterly inadequate and that he can not with the present equipment successfully fight the fires that are likely to occur. He refers to the immense loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property in the late fire at or near the Center Market. He refers also to the fire at the Lansburgh establishment, about the first of the year, and the fire at the lumber yard, which I have already mentioned, about the 19th or 20th of December. The District Commissioners say that they need more engines; the chief of the fire department says that they need more engines. These official statements are what govern me in my action.

The gentleman said the other day in his closing remarks that perhaps I had visited with the chief of the fire department. I want to say that I do not know that gentleman. If I have ever seen him in my life, it was when he was passing rapidly in his buggy, chasing a fire.

But regardless of any such question as that, I have read the report of the District Commissioners. I have read in an evening paper, the Star, the striking and startling interview with the chief of the fire department, saying that he has not the proper facilities for fighting fires, and having seen also the statement that in almost all the cities of the Union of anything like a population equal to Washington the facilities for fighting fires are almost twice as great as they are in this city, it occurred to me that the Government of the United States, owning $200,000,000 worth of property in this city in public buildings, ought to make a better arrangement for fighting fires than now exists. That is the reason I offered the amendment. I do not personally know any man connected with the fire department, nor do I own any property in Washington that can burn. I have no personal interest in this matter in the world. I am simply urging that we should heed the demands of the District Commissioners for additional facilities for extinguishing fires.

If the gentleman asks me what I would do in the way of manning the five additional engines, I reply that I presume the Committee on Appropriations could report an appropriation of $100,000, if that amount were required, to provide for this extra expense. There is no difficulty about that. If it requires $100,000 of additional appropriation in order to give Washington City the best and most efficient fire department in the United States, I think Congress ought to make such an appropriation. I believe we ought not to hesitate a moment in taking proper measures to make the fire department of this, the capital city of the nation, the most efficient in the country. The idea of permitting a little city like Detroit, with one-third less population than the city of Washington, to have better facilities for the extinguishment of fires is, it seems to me, neither right nor reasonable.

Mr. GROUT. I wish to say a word, and only a word, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. The gentleman has referred to the extent of the fire department in the city of Detroit. I believe that if we had full information on that subject it would be found that there are in that city more old and second or third class engines than in the city of Washington. The engines on duty here are good engines.

Mr. CORLISS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS]?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir; for a question.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I can not sit here and allow the city of Detroit——

Mr. GROUT. Wait a moment. I did not yield for a speech. The gentleman can make his speech in his own time if he has something to tell us about the engines in the city of Detroit. I do not claim to have any knowledge as to the engines in the older cities of this country. But the city of Washington having attained its present proportions mainly within the last few years, the engines here are probably of more modern construction than they are generally in the older cities. Without having any personal knowledge on the subject, I venture to affirm that in the older cities of the country the engines will not compare in efficiency with those in this city to-day. Now, then, the gentleman says he would have $100,000 provided for manning the engines. But $100,000 would not do it, I can tell him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say whatever is necessary.

Mr. GROUT. But $100,000 will be entirely insufficient. And then there is an increase in the fire force to be provided for; and the engines and all will cost over $200,000. Why, the Commissioners ask for only two; and yet the gentleman in his extravagance proposes five new fire engines.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Do not you appropriate, or propose to appropriate, $4,200 to buy the new engine?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then how is it that five would cost as much as $200,000? They would cost only $20,000.

Mr. GROUT. If I said that would be the cost of the engines, of course it is a mistake. I intended to refer to the entire expenditure. I say that it will cost over $200,000 to meet the entire expense of the amendment—the increase of the department, the purchase of the engines, and the preparation of houses, the hose carriages, and so on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The expense of providing the engines would be only $20,000.

Mr. GROUT. Yes; but to equip and serve them would very materially increase the expense. You must have engine houses, costing not less than $100,000; the engines, new hose carriages, and the help to man the increase; in all, surely over $200,000.

Now, if I really thought that the House was seriously contemplating agreeing to this amendment, I would submit a statement of the estimated receipts and expenditures, showing the total revenues of the District for the coming year, and would show where we would be left if even the estimates of this bill were carried into effect. And yet the gentleman proposes to run far beyond them. It seems to me unnecessary, however, to discuss the proposition. Members generally know that we have got a reasonably large and very efficient fire department here. It is sufficient to meet all the requirements of the city at the present time. It should be increased, as it is being increased by the bill, as occasion warrants, for the purpose of meeting in a reasonable way the growth of the city. Beyond that it should not be increased, not even on the fancied necessities of the chief engineer of the fire department. You never knew of a commander of an army who did not want more men, whether he was to fight a great battle or not. So it is with the chiefs of the fire departments. They want, necessarily, more engines and men. It is in the very nature of things the province of the head of a department like this to magnify his own work and ask for more, so as to increase the size of his force; but it becomes necessary for prudent men—and I hope the House will exercise prudence in dealing with this matter—to consider the matter and appropriate according to what the reasonable wants of the city require.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Am I correct in supposing that the estimates as they come to Congress provide for but two new engines, and that the committee recommend one?

Mr. GROUT. That is correct, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And this amendment proposes five new engines?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Well, why not vote it down?

Mr. GROUT. We are going to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the gentleman who has just come on the floor, and who is the protector of the Treasury, if he heard the argument that was submitted in favor of increasing this to five engines?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, when we meet the estimates of the District Commissioners, and sufficiently, it strikes me that it is not the part of wisdom to go far beyond that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Commissioners ask for more engines. Does the gentleman understand that they say the fire department in its present form is inefficient; and that the chief of the fire department says he has not enough force?

Mr. CANNON. The committee deals only with official sayings.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is an official saying. It is in the annual report of the Commissioners.

Mr. CANNON. But it is not in the estimates. That is the point that we are to consider.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But it is in the reports.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, there are reports and reports, prayers and sermons——

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman evidently does not know what is in the report.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, we have the estimates to show what is required. There is no official estimate submitted for this work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CORLISS. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, to the amendment pending.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope my friend from Michigan will be permitted to rise to a question of privilege. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have withdrawn the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the discussion here has developed a considerable degree of ignorance on the part of the members of the District Committee with reference to the subject-matter now under consideration, and in their ignorance they have attempted to slander and belittle the fair name of my city.

Mr. MEREDITH. You refer now to the Appropriations Committee, not the District Committee.

Mr. CORLISS (continuing). The gentleman from Tennessee refers to my city as the "little city of Detroit" having but "two-thirds the population of the capital city." The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] refers to the fire department of Detroit as composed of a lot of "old and broken-down engines."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the House and to these gentlemen that the beautiful city of Detroit surpasses in population the capital city of the nation, surpasses in beauty and grandeur in every way this city, and it is managed at an expense to the people of less than one-half of the money that is expended in the District of Columbia. [Applause.] I want to say that the city of Washington, in all of its departments, in my judgment, needs to be investigated by this House. The fire department of my city surpasses in every possible way the fire department of Washington, and I think it is maintained at half the expense. The city of Detroit is lighted by a plant which costs but one-quarter as much per light as is paid in this city.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. CORLISS. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman says that the city of Detroit is maintained at a much less expense. I will ask him if the fire department of the city of Detroit does not cost about $1,000,000 a year?

Mr. CORLISS. It does not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much?

Mr. CORLISS. It costs less than half a million.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does not the last census show that it is a city of only about 200,000 inhabitants?

Mr. CORLISS. It has greatly increased in population since that time. It has the most efficient fire department of any city in this Union, and its equipment is perfect. I want to say that there has not been a large fire in that city for many years, because of the efficiency of that department, maintained at a much less expense than the fire departments of most cities in the Union. I hope that the committee, in considering measures for this District, will take into consideration many other improvements, which, it seems to me, are manifestly necessary in this city.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORLISS. I will if my time can be extended.

Mr. POWERS. I understand that your city has been under the administration of Governor Pingree.

Mr. CORLISS. It has been under the administration of a reform mayor who is now a reform governor, and I want to say to you that, while eccentric in many things, he has done that for the people of the city of Detroit for which they have honored him repeatedly by overwhelming majorities.

Mr. POWERS. Could his services be procured in Washington?

Mr. CORLISS. I think they might, and I think with benefit to the people of the District. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CORLISS. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. I should like to ask if you have any statistics as to the amount of potatoes raised in Detroit?

Mr. CORLISS. Yes; and I have no doubt that the gentleman and other members have received the statistics of the Pingree potato patch for the last year, an industry which gave employment and food to thousands of people, and such an industry as should be developed in every section of our land while we are under the present unfortunate Administration, which has driven people into want, idleness, and misery. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MEREDITH. Are these potatoes raised in the streets of Detroit?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. CORLISS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to have it stated from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, in line 1, strike out the word "one" and insert "five."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE SERVICE.

For superintendent, $1,600; electrician, $1,200; 3 telegraph operators, at $1,000 each; 3 telephone operators, at $900 each; expert repairman, $960; 2 repairmen, at $720 each; 2 laborers, at $400 each; in all, $10,800.

For general supplies, repairs, new batteries and battery supplies, telephone rental and purchase, wire for extension of the telegraph and telephone service, repairs of lines and instruments, purchase of poles, tools, insulators, brackets, pins, hardware, cross arms, ice, record books, stationery, printing, purchase of harness, washing, blacksmithing, forage, extra labor, new boxes, and other necessary items, $11,000.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, after the word "dollars," in line 23, page 29, the following:

"That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person or any telephone company doing business in the District of Columbia to charge or receive more than $50 per annum for the use of a telephone on a separate wire; $40 for each telephone, there being not more than two on a wire; $30 for each telephone, there being not more than three on a wire, and $25 for each telephone, there being four or more on the same wire."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I think that changes existing law, and I make that point of order against it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It was admitted in the last bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] make the point of order?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I presume it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Writs of lunacy: To defray the expenses attending the execution of writs de lunatico inquirendo and commitments thereunder, in all cases of indigent insane persons committed or sought to be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane by order of the executive authority of the District of Columbia, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1877, $2,000.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, my attention was occupied at the time when the preceding paragraph was reached. I ask unanimous consent to make a motion to strike out the clause at the top of page 31, line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] asks to return to line 2, page 31, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. GROUT. I do not think we had better go back at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont objects; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR CHARITIES.

For the relief and care of the poor and destitute, and for such charitable and reformatory work, and such care and medical and surgical treatment of poor and destitute patients in the District of Columbia as have been heretofore usually provided for by direct appropriations to private institutions, and as the District Commissioners may deem necessary, the sum of $94,700, to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners, either under contract with responsible and competent persons or institutions or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of said District, where practicable: Provided, That no such contract shall extend beyond the 30th day of June, 1898, and that no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which compensation shall be provided in said contract; and that said Commissioners shall report to Congress on or before the first Monday of December in each year a detailed statement of their expenditures theretofore made under this appropriation, and of all contracts made by them hereunder, giving the names of the persons and institutions contracted with, and stating what further expenditures will be required thereunder.

For the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, maintenance, $20,000.

For subsistence, $22,500;

For salaries and compensation of superintendent, who shall reside at the hospital, not to exceed $3,000; assistant superintendent, $900 (this position to be filled by a nonmedical graduate or student); five internes, at $120 each; superintendent of nurses, clerk, engineer, matron, nurses, laundresses, cooks, teamsters, watchmen, and laborers, $16,000;

For rent of hospital buildings and grounds, $4,000;

For fuel and light, clothing, bedding, forage, transportation, medicine and medical and surgical supplies, surgical instruments, electric lights, repairs, furniture, and other absolutely necessary expenses, $11,500;

In all, $54,000.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that this paragragh—because this is the one to which amendment has been proposed and on which some discussion may arise—be passed until the reading of the bill be finished.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts desires to offer an amendment to the paragraph. That amendment can be offered.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman from Vermont desires to pass the entire paragraph and return to it after the completion of the reading of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GROUT. There is no objection to offering the amendment now, and then let the paragraph go by with the amendment pending.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amendment will keep.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

On page 38, at the end of line 6, insert:

"Provided further, That the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended under the conditions and limitations imposed in the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1897, page 411, volume 29, Statutes at Large of the United States."

Mr. MORSE. I do not desire to discuss the amendment at this time, but simply say that this amendment reaffirms existing law.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph, with the amendment, be passed over until we complete the reading of the bill, and then we will return and consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the amendment be passed over for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reform School for Girls: Superintendent, $1,000; treasurer, $300; matron, $600; two teachers, at $480 each; overseer, $720; engineer, $480; night watchman, $365; laborer, $300; in all, $4,725;

For groceries, provisions, fuel, soap, oil, lamps, candles, clothing, shoes, forage, horseshoeing, medicine, medical attendance, hack hire, freight, furniture, beds, bedding, sewing machines, fixtures, books, horses, stationery, vehicles, harness, cows, stables, sheds, fences, repairs, and other necessary items, $6,000;

In all, $10,725.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of eliciting some information from the gentleman in charge of the bill. I find there is here an appropriation for this school of $10,725. I understand, also, there are only 21 inmates in that school, 3 of whom are upward of 20 years of age. There seems to be 9 persons to take care of that small number of girls that are supposed to be undergoing the process of reformation.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is for the Reform School for Girls of the District.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Yes; and I also understand that while there is a capacity for 27, yet only colored girls are admitted. It does seem to me this appropriation is quite extravagant, and I would like to have information from the gentleman showing the necessity for this large force in connection with this institution. Mr. Chairman, the expense of this institution exceeds the cost of such institutions as Vassar, Wellesley, Smith, and other first-class boarding schools of the highest character in the United States. For board, lodging, and tuition in the highest collegiate courses the cost in those institutions is only $400 per capita, while here, saying nothing of the cost of the buildings and repairs, the per capita cost is over $500. Certainly this is an extraordinary state of facts, which requires some explanation from the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I hardly see the force of the comparison by the gentleman of this school with Vassar and other equally fine boarding schools. This is a boarding school of a compulsory order that requires gratings on the windows and a police force to guard it. It is true there is a large expense per capita incurred for the number of inmates in this institution. That is a fact. It ought to be obviated; and this is the way to obviate it: To increase the capacity of the institution, because the force that is there now is requisite for the number of inmates, and it would be quite sufficient for a larger number if the building were completed as the Commissioners estimate. This ought really to be done; and by an appropriation of $50,000 the capacity of the institution would be increased so that the expenses per capita would be largely reduced. It would provide then for 100 inmates, and the per capita cost would be just about cut in two.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If the gentleman will allow me, before passing from that, I will say they are not utilizing the capacity they now have. You have a capacity for 27 inmates, while there are only 20 or 21 inmates, and 3 of those are upward of 20 years of age, and have been there ever since the institution was started.

Mr. GROUT. I would like to know the source of the gentleman's information. The president of the institution was before the Committee on Appropriations on the investigation of the matter and urged this enlargement and a reduction of the consequent per capita expense. He said the number of inmates is 27. He was before the committee only a few days ago.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I think the gentleman will hardly find that given in the report. The capacity is 27. I am credibly informed that there are only 21 inmates, and of these 3 are upward of 20 years of age.

Mr. GROUT. Then, Mr. Chairman, one further thought in connection with this. A committee is investigating this whole subject of charities, and it is thought we may get light from them as to what it is wise to do. The gentleman says that only colored girls are put in this institution. There is no legal prohibition against white girls being placed there. It is only a question of some official discrimination on the part of the court in sending these girls to this school, while some other institutions in the city are allowed to care for white girls. The institution is open to white and colored alike, and when it is enlarged as is proposed, by the addition of a wing to cost $50,000, there will be room for a ward that will be separated from the colored portion of the building, so as to satisfy the fastidious taste of the women who may be sent there or of those who are interested in them and in the administration of the law.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for a treasurer and for two teachers to take care of these few girls, and also the necessity of an engineer and overseer in addition to a laborer? There are too many officers and salaried people for a small institution which cares for only colored girls.

Mr. GROUT. We must have an engineer whether there are 20 or 200 inmates in the building. We must have a matron and an entire outfit, and the gentleman knows it. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made no motion, and unless he desires to do so, I shall ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the formal amendment, and move to strike out, in line 5, the words "treasurer, $300."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I feel sure that the gentleman offering it has not looked sufficiently into this matter. I introduced the bill establishing this school. The school is still in its infancy, and I believe it to be one of the best institutions in the District of Columbia. Before it was created we had a reform school for boys, but none for girls, and when girls, for petty crimes or for other causes, were brought before the courts, they had to be sent to the common workhouse, where they were surrounded by every kind of evil influence. I remember visiting the workhouse with a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and when Mr. Breckinridge (now our minister at St. Petersburg) and I went through the building we were greeted from behind the bars with the most brutal and loathsome remarks from the low creatures who were imprisoned there.

That condition existed until the civilization of the District cried out for a reform school for girls, and I introduced the bill at the instance of that element in this District, and, after one or two sessions, it was passed. Efforts have been made before to cripple this school, but never in this House, and I am sure that no such effort would be made here now if my friend from Nebraska had considered the delicacy of the blow that he was about to strike. There is no discrimination in the school against any class of women, but I am sorry to say that it so happens that colored girls are those who appear most frequently in the courts and who have to be sent to the reform school. I have visited this school. The last time I visited it there were thirty-four inmates, a number greater than the capacity of the school. It is not merely a prison, but a school. They teach the girls industrial work. I have been all through the building and I have seen them teaching the girls to make dresses, simple garments, and to do other such work.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Does the gentleman speak from information?

Mr. HENDERSON. I speak from personal knowledge, having been in the school.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I want to say to the gentleman that only a few days ago I talked with one of the teachers, and there is no teaching of that kind being done there.

Mr. HENDERSON. I speak whereof I personally know. I have not been there for two years.

A MEMBER. Where is this school situated?

Mr. HENDERSON. Above Georgetown, on the road to the Great Falls. After great trouble we found a Government reservation there, which was appropriated for the purpose. I have visited the school and I have seen the sewing machines at work, the girls sitting in rows and being taught to sew, and they are also taught to read and write. Those girls are taken from the purlieus of sin and crime, and are surrounded by the influences of Christian civilization in this school, and if gentlemen striking at these institutions in the District would personally visit them and see what orphans and unfortunate girls are having done for them there, they would go slow before proposing to strike a blow at any of these institutions.

This school is still in its infancy, and we ought to be giving it greater facilities instead of less. The establishment of this school was a move in the direction of the Government taking charge of this work. It is not in any sense a private institution. It is under Government supervision, and I hope to see the time when the Government will take charge of all the unfortunates in this community, and when public money will be appropriated only to institutions belonging to the Government and controlled by it. Give us more money for these institutions. You have got to equip them properly in order to secure efficiency. A treasurer for this school is needed. The salary is petty. This lady is the widow of Mr. Mills, the real founder of the institution, who died only within a year. This woman, carrying in her heart the inspiration of her husband for good, works for a petty compensation and devotes her heart and her life to this work. I never saw her but once, when she was brought and introduced to me by some Christian women of the District. I regret that the committee has not seen fit to recommend an appropriation for increased facilities for this school. There is not an officer of the institution who can be spared, and I want to see the time come, as soon as the condition of the Treasury will permit, when a hundred girls can be sent there and cared for by those who would lift up humanity and not allow it to go into the purlieus of the slums or of the common prisons of our city.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is the ownership of this property in the United States?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir, it is; and the whole thing (unless the direction has been changed—the gentleman in charge of the bill is more familiar with the facts than I am now) is under the charge of the Attorney-General's Office.

Mr. GROUT. No; the institution is in charge of the Interior Department.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is under the Interior Department, as the gentleman from Vermont now informs me.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] does not raise any question as to the usefulness of this institution.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Of course not.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amendment simply proposes to strike out the provision for a new office which this bill proposes to create. The proposition here is to pay a salary of $300 for disbursing a little more than $9,000. This disbursement, as I understand, has been made heretofore by the District Commissioners.

I will not pursue this matter further, because I understand the pressure in favor of this appropriation. But I do not think the appropriation for this salary is a proper one to be made. The expenditure is too large for the service rendered. I believe that the appropriations we make for institutions in this District should go to the benefit of the people for whom they are intended, and not be expended along the lines of an expensive administration.

Now, I do not think this institution is successful. I am in sympathy, however, with the object which was in view in the introduction of the bill creating this school. I shall not support any motion to cripple the institution at this time, inasmuch as it is understood that this, with similar questions, will be reviewed by a joint commission of Congress. By means of such an examination we may be able to arrive at some conclusion in respect to this and other institutions so as to enlarge the scope of their operations, while at the same time decreasing the cost of administration. Hence, I repeat, I shall not at this time support any proposition to cripple the institution.

But the office which the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska seeks to strike out is entirely new. The amount to be disbursed by this treasurer is about $9,000. Heretofore the disbursement has been made, I believe, by the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. GROUT. I wish to correct the statement of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], that this office is wholly new. Let me remind him that the deficiency bill of last year carried an appropriation for the payment of this salary to the amount of $600. That appropriation was made on the ground that this woman had a vested right in this salary. She had been appointed by the Commissioners to discharge this duty.

I said a moment ago that this institution was under the charge of the Interior Department. I was wrong in that statement. It is under the control of the Commissioners of the District. The officers of the institution desire that it be placed under the control of the Attorney-General along with the other reformatory institutions of the District.

But this woman is rendering this service under appointment of the Commissioners of the District, and she is entitled to the salary. The law creating the institution expressly authorizes the appointment of the officer. This lady holds the appointment. In the District bill a year ago an appropriation for this salary was refused; but in the deficiency bill we properly made the amount good. The present bill cuts down this salary from $600 to $300. I repeat, that the office is not new, as this House a year ago appropriated $600 for the payment of this lady. In my opinion, she is entitled to that sum, which was in fact the compensation stipulated between herself and the Commissioners. I think she has a legal right to that amount; I believe she could go into the Court of Claims and recover it. The incidents which I have stated will remind the gentleman from Missouri that this appropriation is not wholly new.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. GROUT] is correct in the statement he has just made. I had forgotten that an appropriation for this salary was made in the deficiency bill of last year. At the same time the appropriation, if made at all, should have been carried in the District appropriation bill.

Mr. GROUT. One word more. I admit that the expenditure for the support of this institution is large in comparison with the small number of persons cared for. The trouble is that the institution is not as large as it ought to be. It is held back in its work by a refusal of adequate appropriations for buildings. There is where the trouble lies. Enlarge this institution so that it will accommodate 100 persons, as an appropriation of $50,000 would enable it to do, and then the proportion of expense would be reduced nearly one-half.

A MEMBER. Why did you not propose such an appropriation?

Mr. GROUT. I have brought in this bill as the representative of the opinion of the committee. Since the matter has been brought before the House, however, I will say that personally I resolutely favored in the committee an appropriation of $50,000; but I was voted down. I shall not now propose an increase of the appropriation. But when a proposition is presented to cut out this salary, I am simply astonished. I can not believe such a proposition would have been offered if the facts had been fully in possession of the gentleman offering the amendment.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in proposing this amendment was to call attention to a very vital fact connected with this matter of charities. I especially invite the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who, with his big heart bubbling over with sentiment (too often at the expense of practical judgment), has gone wide of the mark.

The fact is, there has grown up in the District of Columbia a custom of ladies (of both sexes, dilettante very largely) gossiping over their little cups of tea and organizing societies to dispense so-called charity at the expense of the Government. They organize themselves into boards of high-sounding names, but whose power and effectiveness for the accomplishment of good are very small indeed; and practically the bulk of the evidences of it we have in connection with carefully prearranged visits to the particular institution by some influential and big-hearted Congressman like the gentleman from Iowa.

Here we have in this institution twenty-one girls—all of them colored. No white girl is permitted to remain in the institution. The white girls are sent to other institutions, also thus far in large part sustained by the Government. I have already called the attention of the committee to the fact that three of these inmates are more than 20 years of age. Just think of it; keeping them there at this expenditure! Children may well be taken for reformation, but is it a wise or even proper expenditure of money to keep them at $500 per annum after they are full grown and over 20 years of age? Do not the facts tend at least to prove that a few inmates are kept to maintain a useless force in positions? It seems to me one might well say the institution is for the purpose of supplying places, and not for the purpose of reforming erring children. The administrative features of this school are most in need of reformation. Where is the practical judgment of gentlemen?

Now, as to the expense of keeping up that school. We buy the property, keep it in repair, and appropriate $10,000 and over annually for its maintenance, or an amount equal to an expenditure of $500 per annum for each inmate; and of that we expend $4,725 for the administrative branch of the school. Do you not see that the District of Columbia has gone mad on this board management?

This tender-hearted lady, the treasurer, "who bears in her heart the mighty work," sits in her comfortable parlor in the city of Washington, doing what? Simply signing checks. Does she audit the accounts presented to her? Not one of them. That is done by others. When the accounts come in, she simply charges herself with the gross appropriation of $10,000, and then signs the checks for the payment of the various expenditures that have been incurred, and for that duty is appropriated the sum of $300 as a salary, and the gentleman from Vermont in charge of the bill wants to make it $600. Her work is perfunctory. The institution has no more need of a salaried treasurer than a wagon has for five wheels.

Now, I know that the treasurer of this institution is doing just about as much work as the average treasurer on the various boards of these institutions in Washington. We ought to abolish all of these little subboards and put the entire matter in the hands of some special board, to take charge of all the charitable institutions of the District and make them capable of accomplishing the great good so eloquently described by the gentleman from Iowa a few moments ago.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation accomplishes nothing: it is simply wasting the money of the District and of the United States in pretending to accomplish something that is not accomplished in fact. This is not a reform institution in the real sense of the term. It is an inefficient attempt, well meant, doubtless, to do a needed work; but nothing worth mentioning will come of this and kindred efforts until the entire subject of the charities of the District is reorganized and put upon a solid, businesslike, and sensible foundation.

Now, having said this much, I have accomplished all that I desired to accomplish. I withdraw my amendment, hoping that the committee which will investigate the entire subject of charities, under the legislation already had, will have their attention directed especially to the abuses, which, in my judgment, have grown up, and in their wisdom present some proper remedy which will provide the necessary correction; and that, too, in the near future.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the joint select committee, authorized by the act making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, to make inquiry and report concerning the charities and reformatory institutions of the District of Columbia, are hereby continued during the Fifty-fifth Congress, with all the powers and duties imposed upon them by said act. And any vacancies which may occur in the membership of said committee by expiration of service or otherwise of any Senator shall be filled by appointment by the presiding officer of the Senate, and any vacancies which may occur by reason of the expiration of service of any House members of said committee shall be filled by appointment to be made by the Speaker of the present House of Representatives from members-elect to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fifth Congress; and any vacancies which may occur by reason of death or resignation of any House member shall be filled by appointment to be made by the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being; and said committee shall have authority to sit during the recess, and shall make report as soon as practicable after the beginning of the first session of the—

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 41, in the fourteenth line, after the last word in said line, amend by adding:

"And the said committee shall pursue such inquiries with diligence and expedition, to the end that a full and complete report may be prepared at the opening of the Fifty-fifth Congress."

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the joint committee appointed at the close of the last session of Congress has held no meetings and have done absolutely nothing in pursuance of the inquiry intrusted to them under order of the Congress; and to the end that the work of the committee shall be of utility, it is absolutely necessary that they shall pursue their inquiries with diligence and dispatch.

The amendment I have proposed imposes upon them the mandatory duty of pursuing the investigation with such energy and diligence that the matter which is intrusted to them may be prepared and ready for consideration at the opening of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will not complain of the motive of that amendment, but simply desire to say, being one of the members of the joint commission selected for the purpose of making the investigation referred to, that the reason why nothing has been done up to this time is this: The provision of law which established the commission was passed on the last day, I think, of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress. It provided for the appointment of a joint commission consisting of three Senators and three Members of the House of Representatives. The Vice-President made the selection of the three Senators after the Senate had adjourned for that session. The senior Senator of the three declined to enter upon the discharge of the duties of the commission, and therefore the Senate committee could not organize. and of course the joint committee could not organize.

Since the opening of the present session the vacancy referred to has been filled and the joint committee has organized and is ready now to proceed with the investigation contemplated. But it would be a perfect farce, Mr. Chairman, to adopt an amendment requiring them to make a report on that investigation at the opening of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. You mean in the event of an extra session of that Congress?

Mr. PITNEY. I am taking it for granted that there will be an extra session, for I do not know of any suggestion from any responsible quarter which would seem to controvert that idea.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Well, make it for the regular session.

Mr. PITNEY. But the amendment does not say so.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I will modify the amendment——

Mr. PITNEY. I have the floor at present.

I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the joint committee have organized and are ready to carry out the duties assigned to them under the law, and for the purpose of enabling them to do so, the provision is carried in the present bill, which has been read and adopted, to fill the vacancy on the House side, occasioned, I regret to say, by reason of the failure of our friend from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] to be reelected. But we do not like to be put under peremptory orders, when the committee have not been guilty of delay or negligence in the matter. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining about the committee appointed by this House. I know that there is no member more diligent than my colleague [Mr. PITNEY] and the fault lay with the committee appointed by the Senate. I ask to modify the amendment, so that it will read:

At the opening of the regular session of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] that the provision would be unwise, because if we are to have an extra session of Congress, which seems to be generally conceded, I assume that this joint committee would proceed with its work with all due diligence, and probably be able to report to the Fifty-fifth Congress in extra session.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I will leave the amendment as it is.

Mr. GROUT. I would suggest that the amendment, as the gentleman proposes it, would really defer the report, because the language of the bill, as it now reads, is:

And shall make report as soon as practicable after the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I will leave the amendment as I originally offered it.

Mr. PITNEY. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the amendment be reported as it is now offered. Has it been modified in any way?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman withdrew his modification.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad to have the amendment reported as it now stands.

The amendment as originally offered was again read.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment having been referred to as "the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey," I wish it understood that I am not the member who offered it. I am opposed to it, and hope it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to come in as section 3 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the United States Electric Light Company, or any other electric-light company doing business in the District of Columbia, shall not charge or collect from the United States or any other consumer of electric arc or incandescent lights, or electricity for power, prices exceeding 75 per cent of the prices charged for such lights and power on the 1st day of January, 1897, in the said District of Columbia.

Mr. PITNEY. What is the percentage of reduction?

Mr. DOCKERY. It provides for a reduction of rates to 75 per cent of what they were on the 1st day of January, 1897.

Mr. PITNEY. That applies to private consumers as well as public?

Mr. DOCKERY. It does. This is in the interest of the people.

Mr. PITNEY. It applies to private consumers, does it?

Mr. DOCKERY. It does.

Mr. PITNEY. Throughout the District?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. PITNEY. It applies to all companies?

Mr. DOCKERY. It does.

Mr. PITNEY. That is all right. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BLUE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] that there may be some question as to whether that would reach a company that was not in business, and not therefore charging consumers anything on the 1st day of January. If we wish to adopt this amendment, let us put it in such form that it will catch them all.

Mr. PITNEY. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will accept the modification of the amendment which I now suggest. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter no electric-light company doing business in the District of Columbia shall charge or collect from the United States or any other consumer of electric arc or incandescent lights, or electricity for power, prices exceeding 75 per cent of the prices charged for such lights and power on the 1st day of January, 1897, in the said District of Columbia.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to lose any parliamentary advantage, but I will accept the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY]. We have been making some reduction in electric lighting for the benefit of the Government, and we ought to make a corresponding reduction now for the benefit of the people of this District.

Mr. PITNEY. The amendment in the form in which it is now offered is satisfactory to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. I accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. This completes the reading of the bill.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph on page 7 of the bill, relating to street sweeping, was passed for the time being at the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], whom I do not see present now. But there is one other paragraph which has been passed which we can recur to, on page 37, relating to charities.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes, that I may explain my amendment?

Mr. GROUT. Wait just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont desires to recur to pages 37 and 38, on the subject of charities.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment which I have offered to this section may be read.

On page 38, at the end of line 6, insert:

"Provided further, That the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended under the conditions and limitations imposed in the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1897, page 411, volume 29, Statutes at Large United States."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the House that this amendment simply reaffirms the existing law; but in order that there may be no mistake or misunderstanding about it, it is desirable to take the matter out of the domain of construction and make the prohibition and use of any money appropriated by this bill for sectarian charities clear and positive. That matter was fought out here last year, and I believe fought to a successful issue, and I believe and hope that the appropriation of public money for sectarian charities will never be again raised or entertained. Such use of public money is against the genius of our institutions that divorce church and state and against public policy. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in charge of the bill offers no objection to this amendment, I do not think I shall take the time of the House any further.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, at this time it is not my purpose to object to this amendment or to raise a point of order; but I wish to say in this connection that in my opinion there is no more necessity for this than there is for a fifth wheel to a wagon. It is mere surplusage, is an incumbrance to this bill, and necessarily in that respect it is vicious in its character. It is not entitled even to the respect to say that it is placed there in the abundance of caution. If that were true, then it would be necessary, practically, in legislation upon appropriation bills to continue this upon every measure to which there might be objection made. These provisions that have become permanent law can not be considered as applying to the appropriation of last year alone, because by their very terms they show that they are for all time, for the future, declaring what shall be and what is the settled policy of this Government, and further providing in regard to future appropriations. Hence I say that this is not only mere surplusage, but it is bad in its character, and ought not to go upon this bill. Still, for the purpose of avoiding discussion on this bill, I will not make any question upon it.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman says he does not object. I do not object, and I hope we may have a vote upon it without further discussion.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 7 there was a paragraph passed over. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] does not seem to be present. I will submit, in that connection, to be printed in the RECORD, a letter from the superintendent of the street-sweeping department, which will explain the matter fully, and with which I think the gentleman from Iowa will be entirely satisfied when he sees it.

Mr. MORSE. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to yield to me for the purpose of making a request to have the section of the law of last year printed in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that I may print, in connection with my remarks, a quotation from the law of last year—a single paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the matter that he sends to the Clerk's desk may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the paragraph on page 7. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

STREET AND ALLEY CLEANING DEPARTMENT,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 5, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to report, in reference to the proposed reduction in the number of inspectors in this service, that to reduce to the extent proposed would be false economy and simply in the interest of the contractors. There are four inspectors in charge of cleaning the paved streets and avenues, and every one of them is needed. Each day or night when work is done we sweep about 55 miles of streets, or an area of about 1,400,000 square yards. There are 17 machines, divided usually into four gangs. Can that work be properly looked after by less than two men, who must necessarily travel not less than 30 miles each during a day or night? They not only note the sweeping, but all obstructions, barricades, etc., in order to make the proper deductions. There are 50 hoe and broom men, divided into 8 gangs, and 36 carts, into 9 gangs. These are at work in various sections of the city covered by that particular route. Can this work be looked after as it should be by any less than 2 more men? The cost of inspection for this branch of the work is about 6¼ per cent. That is to say, we pay out on this contract about $85,000 annually, and inspection costs $5,900—including pay for horse keeping. I earnestly request that no reduction be made on this branch of the force, as the present men not only earn their pay, but save the District annually all they are paid.

I have four gangs of laborers, one for each of the four sections of the city, cleaning the unimproved streets, keeping the gutters clean, free of weeds and grass, and attending to all complaints in their respective sections. Would it be economy to work these men without some one in charge to lay out the work for them and see that they rendered a day's service? Rather than reduce their numbers it would be better to stop the work entirely if there is not to be direct supervision over each gang. The territory these gangs cover is large; for instance, the southeast gang, all that portion of the city south of Maryland avenue east, to the river on the south, east to the boundary, and west to First east.

The northeast gang, all north of Maryland avenue, east to the boundary, and west to Seventh street road as far as Whitney avenue, including Le Droit Park and West Eckington. The southwest gang, all south of Pennsylvania avenue to the river, east to New Jersey avenue, and west to Thirty-sixth street, including Anacostia. The northwest gang, all north of R street to Columbia road, east to Seventh street road, and west to Thirty-sixth street, including Washington Heights and a portion of Mount Pleasant. Could any one man properly supervise more than one of these sections? A fifth gang has all the cobble and rubble paved streets in the city, that are so rough and broken that they can not be machine swept—amounting to about 270,000 square yards. This work is scattered from Georgetown to the Navy-Yard, and from the river to the boundary. It would seem that one inspector was needed upon this work.

There is one gang engaged on unimproved alley work, cleaning away the filth that so naturally finds its way to those out of the way places. The area of these alleys is about 260,000 square yards and scattered throughout the entire city, many of them small shafts and arms that receive all the refuse that can not well be thrown into the improved alleys adjacent. We get round once in about eight days, averaging about 36,000 yards per day. Eight men and 2 horses and carts do this work, at a cost of $11.47 per day. Inspection costs $6, or 50 per cent—1 inspector and assistant. That seems pretty high, but how can it be avoided; can the gang be permitted to roam at will? To get round and to expedite the work, a couple or three men, with a horse and cart, are often detached to catch up the small shafts, etc. Without this thorough inspection the work would be slighted and many of the worst places left untouched.

The improved alleys are in charge of 3 inspectors; the area of these alleys is about 602,000 square yards, divided into 18 routes, 3 cleaned each day; average area each route, about 33,500 yards; work done under contract, 40.9 cents per 1,000 yards; cost of work per day, about $44; inspection, including pay allowed for horses, about $12.18, or 28 per cent of cost. Without reflection, this looks high; but in what other way can the work be properly supervised? The three separate routes require separate inspection; without such inspection it is hardly supposable that the contractor's men would clean them as they should be, or clean them all. Pennsylvania avenue and other streets, now cleaned under a patrol system during the day, cost for work $22 per day. Inspection costs $8, about 37 per cent, there being 1 inspector in charge, with 2 assistants.

With every desire to conduct the work as economically as possible, I can not spare one of these inspectors. Work of this kind must be watched closely by competent and efficient men or else the work will be slighted and contractors often paid for work they did not do. The work in this city is beyond question done much cheaper, and I believe as a whole much better, than in any other city. The percentage for inspection is not a correct guide in this case. If the work cost more to do it, it would not take any more inspectors, but the percentage of cost for supervision would be less. The average cost of supervision is 20 per cent, including pay for horses. I think it much better to pay good prices for inspection than to pay contractors for bad work.

Respectfully,

A. G. MCKENSIE,
Superintendent Street and Alley Department.

Gen. WILLIAM W. GROUT,
Chairman Subcommittee District of Columbia Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that a paragraph of the law of last year may be printed in the RECORD in connection with his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORSE. Since the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOWARD] objects, I think the gentleman from Vermont will allow me to read it in my own time, and I will thus get it in the RECORD. I ask the gentleman to give me a minute to read this paragraph.

Mr. GROUT. Yes; I yield a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. MORSE. I ask the Clerk to read the paragraph I send to the desk, and to which I referred in my remarks as passed in connection with the District bill of last year and reaffirmed by the amendment I offered a few moments since and which the House has adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government of the United States to make no appropriation of money or property for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church or religious denomination, or any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control; and it is hereby enacted that, from and after the 30th day of June, 1897, no money appropriated for charitable purposes in the District of Columbia shall be paid to any church or religious denomination, or to any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Fifty-first Congress upon these old claims against the District be printed in the RECORD, in explanation and justification of the amendment added yesterday to the bill repealing the law under which they are being allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the report made in the Fifty-first Congress in reference to the statute repealed by this bill be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 3727, Fifty-first Congress, second session.]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred Senate bill 3061, would respectfully report:

This bill seeks to refer to the Court of Claims, for rehearing, ten claims against the District of Columbia. The claimants did work and furnished materials for divers public improvements in this city, under contracts made with the board of public works, which was established by the act of 1871 (16 U. S. Stats., 419 et seq.). Under this act the board had control, in accordance with the provisions set forth in the statutes, of improvements of the streets, avenues, etc., in the District of Columbia, and the making of contracts therefor.

These claims are based upon different grounds. Some of the claimants contend that work was done by them under oral contracts, or which was necessary for the completion of improvements specified in written agreements, but not included therein; and although this work resulted in a substantial benefit to the city, their claims were denied by the Court of Claims because their contracts were not in writing, in accordance with section 37 of the statute referred to. Others claim that they received a price for the work done lower than certain so-called board rates which had been fixed by the board as a fair payment for the different kinds of improvements made. Others aver that conclusive proof was brought forward on their behalf, showing them entitled to larger compensation than they received, but that this proof was disregarded by the Court of Claims.

Numerous cases besides those included in this bill have been recently brought to the attention of the committee, the owners of which allege that they have similar valid claims against the District and that their names should be included in this bill, or a general bill be substituted for it, by which all persons who had contracts with the board of public works, under which claims exist similar to those of the parties referred to, can be again heard by the Court of Claims.

The auditor of the District of Columbia, in a list prepared, estimates the amount of these claims at $116,000, but large amounts of additional claims not included in the list have been brought to the attention of the committee.

Nearly all of these claimants brought suit in the Court of Claims under the act of June 16, 1880 (21 U. S. Stats., 284), by which it was provided that persons having claims against the District of Columbia should have the right, within six months from the passage of the act, to bring suit in the Court of Claims. The act further provided that unless suit was brought within that time claims arising from transactions with the board of public works should be forever barred. In some of these cases decisions were rendered. In most of the decisions a small balance was found due to the claimants, which they accepted. In others the suits, although brought, were never pressed to trial, but were dismissed by the claimants on the ground, as it is now alleged, that the Court of Claims had, in similar cases, made adverse decisions, and that the further prosecution of these suits would have been useless. It is, however, maintained by the claimants, and this point is important in its bearing upon the merits of this bill, that in later decisions the Court of Claims reversed its former rulings and made decisions the principles of which would, if applied to these claims, have compelled their payment.

These claims arise under contracts made and performed in the years 1871, 1872, and 1873. It will be conceded that unless it appears that material injustice has been done to the claimants by the rulings of the Court of Claims, these controversies should not again be submitted to the court.

In order to ascertain the merits of this question, members of the committee have given considerable time to the arguments of counsel on behalf of the claimants, and have examined the printed records of testimony in all of these cases but one, which was not furnished by counsel.

The first claim, that of James W. Walsh and Andrew Gleeson, is for the removal of the material constituting the old pavement or sidewalk on East Capitol street, between the Capitol Grounds and Lincoln Square. Walsh and Gleeson made a written contract, under date of July 3, 1872, by which they were to make the grade and lay the foot pavement along the street referred to, between First and Eleventh streets east; also, to make the parking, and set the curb at the line of the roadway. In order to do this it was necessary to take up and haul away a large amount of material included within the limits of the proposed improvement, which had been used for pavement, curbstone, etc. No question of board rates can arise in this claim, except in fixing the rate of compensation to which they are entitled, if they are entitled to any.

The contractors wish to present to the Court of Claims their demand for the removal of the old material which had to be displaced in order to complete the improvement described in their contract. The contract has been presented to the committee and is somewhat voluminous, including a large amount of printed matter in which the blanks are not filled. It is, however, distinctly stated in the contract "that the said parties of the second part (namely, Walsh and Gleeson) shall receive the following prices as full compensation for furnishing all the materials and labor which may be required in the prosecution of the whole of the work to be done under this agreement, and in all respects completing the same."

Then follow the prices for the grading and other work.

While there is some ambiguity as to the meaning of the contract, arising from the number of provisions included in it which do not seem to have been fully considered at the time, we think this provision is sweeping, and precludes all compensation for the claim for the removal of the old material.

One of the claimants, in a deposition taken on the 7th of May, 1881, admits that this material was in his way and he could not have complied with his contract without removing it. It does not appear that any demand was made for compensation for the removal until years after the work was done and pay had been accepted, in which no compensation was made for taking away the old material. In reply to the contention that the Court of Claims in later cases allowed pay for the carting away of this old material, we think the claimants are in error. In two or three cases, which were intrusted to referees to find the facts and the law, such compensation was allowed, but the court merely confirmed the referees' report, apparently without any consideration of the legal principles involved in it. Also in one or two cases settlements made by the board of public works and the board of audit, in which a similar allowance was made, were not interfered with; but whenever the question was presented to the court and argued, the decision was against any such allowance.

The claimants are equally in error in asserting a uniform rule of the board of public works making allowance for such work. In an order upon this subject, issued January 25, 1873, we find the following:

JANUARY 25, 1873.

SIR: Referring to the letter of R. C. Phillips, esq., late chief engineer, asking whether accounts for taking up materials, such as pavements, curb, etc., preparatory to laying new work or constructing sewers, etc., are generally to be accepted as proper charges against the board, and stating that some accounts of this nature have already been paid; and in reference also to your indorsement on said letter, stating that the practice of allowing for removing old material obtained in August last, and expressing the opinion that for all such work done since that time, and which can be clearly established, this allowance will have to be paid, but not on any such work done prior to that date, and that in future the practice should be stopped altogether, I have to instruct you to stop this practice entirely. Those claims that have already been paid must of course stand; but you will allow no more accounts of this description, whether the work was done prior or subsequent to the date referred to.

By order of the board.

CHARLES S. JOHNSON,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. A. CLUSS,
Engineer in Charge.

The claimants voluntarily dismissed their suit in 1884. Their intention at that time clearly was to abandon their claim. It would be carrying the right to prosecute claims against the District too far to give again the right to litigate a claim after it is barred by the statute of limitations when the claimants, anticipating the decision would be adverse to them, declined to further prosecute; this, too, when, if the decision had been against them, they would have still retained the right of appeal to a higher court. If they have suffered injustice, it was because of their own omission to take advantage of the provisions of the statute by which the rights of all parties were carefully guarded.

The second claim, that of Peter P. Little, administrator of Michael Shiner, against the District of Columbia, seems to us to have no possible basis of equity. The claimant intestate on the 16th and 20th days of September, 1871, made two contracts in writing, by the terms of which he was to receive 20 cents per cubic yard for the grading of Eleventh street east from Pennsylvania avenue to H street north. By the contracts it was stipulated that the work should be commenced on or before the 21st and 25th days, respectively, of September, 1871. It was also provided that unless the work was suspended by order of the officers of the District it should be completed within ninety days from the date fixed for its commencement. Of the work required to be done by this contract, 6,833 cubic yards were finished before the 8th day of January, 1872, and 12,758 cubic yards after January 8, 1872. For the work done after January 8, 1872, it is claimed 30 cents per cubic yard should be paid, because on the 22d of January, 1872, the board of public works made the following order:

"Ordered, That the prices of grading be fixed at 30 cents per cubic yard, including hauling, etc."

This order was not made until the month following the date fixed by the contract for the completion of the work.

It is alleged that on the 6th of September, 1872, Mr. Shiner received a note from the assistant secretary of the board directing him to cancel his two contracts and to prepare a new one dated after the adoption of prices under the above order and in accordance therewith. This contract, however, it seems, was never made. We can hardly understand the conduct of a board an officer of which would invite a contractor to cancel subsisting contracts and invite him to prepare a new one dated months after the work was to have been finished under his agreement, and in which a much higher price was to be paid. What was the reason for this very material advance in price we are not informed, but it can not be denied that if the price of grading had been diminished the contractor would have received the benefit of his contract, which, by this change, would be a favorable one. We can see no reason for the application of a different rule when the price had been increased. This case was carefully considered by the Court of Claims, and in the opinion Chief Justice Drake says:

"We are not able to discover any foundation for such a claim. Every fact in the case is against it. The grading was all done before claimant's contracts were canceled, and at a time when there was not the least ground for claiming it to have been done under any other contracts. The order of January 22, 1872, increasing the rates for grading, was not retrospective in its operation; did not refer to contracts previously entered into on other rates; did not mention Shiner or his contracts."

The claim of Owen O'Hara is based upon an alleged error in the measurement of the excavation in sewer trenches. This case was fully considered by the Court of Claims and a decision rendered adverse to the claimants. In this case, also, a balance was found due to O'Hara, which he accepted, presumably in full settlement of all his claims.

The case of Frank H. Finley and T. A. Brown, his assignee, presents a question of the validity of the action of the Court of Claims in detaining on final settlement certain overpayments by the board of audit. Finley made his contracts for grading at 20 cents per cubic yard. Thereafter, when a measurement was made, he was allowed payment at the rate of 30 cents per cubic yard, notwithstanding his contract. He also was allowed for hauling away material, in addition to the price for grading, 15 cents a yard for 30,640 cubic yards of earth. He receipted for this amount in full on the 2d of June, 1873. Afterwards, when the board of public works had ceased to exist, on September 23, 1875, he presented to the board of audit a claim for additional compensation for depositing this earth in the canal. The board of audit were induced to allow him 15 cents per cubic yard for earth deposited in the canal in addition to the price for hauling.

On this subject the Court of Claims say:

"The claim was also presented long after the authority of the board to receive claims had expired, and its action thereon was ultra vires, and voidable, if not void. Besides, the claim had no foundation in fact. The board of public works never did agree to pay 15 cents or any other price for depositing earth in the canal, the hauling of which they were to pay for according to distance hauled. Such an agreement was not expressed in any of the writings or facts set forth in the findings, and it is not to be presumed, so closely would it border upon absurdity. When a contractor agrees to excavate earth and haul it away, and prices are expressly fixed for the excavation and for the haul, it is hardly to be conceived that it could be understood that he was to have extra compensation for emptying his carts. And yet such was Finley's claim, and the board of audit fell into the mistake of accepting it."

On trial of the case in the Court of Claims this erroneous payment was set up by the District as a counterclaim. The court, on full consideration of the facts and circumstances, allowed the counterclaim and gave to Brown, the assignee of Finley, a judgment for the balance found due on all his accounts, namely, $2,422.71.

Upon another claim made by Finley for extra sewer work, the Court of Claims say:

"On the 13th of June, 1874, the board of public works stated a final account with Finley for sewer work on K street, under contract No. 795, allowing him the increased prices named in the extension of June 9, 1874, and the previous correspondence upon which it was founded. (First finding.) This showed the amount due him to be $14,395.02.

"Of this sum the board of public works paid him part, and he receipted on the back of the account without objection to the prices. After that board was abolished the board of audit paid him the balance, and he receipted for the same on the account 'in full settlement of the above-stated claims.'

"Finley never claimed anything more, but by some means, not explained, the board of audit, without any demand or presentation of claim by him, allowed to Finley $1,741.66 for extra excavation, on account of quicksands and other matters, upon an old bill which somebody other than Finley had exhumed from the archives of the board of public works, and which had been compromised, settled, and abandoned long before the board of audit came into existence. The facts about that old bill seem to be these:

"In April, 1874, he had sent his claim for extras to the board of public works. Soon afterwards, on the 23d of May following, he wrote to the board, appealing for better rates of compensation than his contract specified, on account of the difficulties that beset him in accomplishing the work. The board took into consideration his appeal and the bill for extras which he had presented, and they very largely increased the prices for work under his contract, No. 795. These prices were allowed for all work included in the final settlement, and were intended to cover all the items of the bill which the board of audit afterwards allowed, and were a discharge and satisfaction thereof. Finley so understood it, for he never thereafter claimed the same as due him, and never presented any such demand to the board of audit. He took the money not because it was due him, nor because he had set up any claim to it, but merely for the reason that the board had mistakenly allowed it to him. It was, in fact, forced upon him.

"It would be a perversion of justice, when he comes into court and asks for a final settlement of his accounts and for payment of the balance due him, if he could retain money of the District thus wrongfully obtained from it. We can not do otherwise than hold that the allowance and payment being made in mistake of fact, the defendant may set up the same against Finley by way of counterclaim."

We see no possible reason why these claims should be opened at this late day. Indeed, if either party was the sufferer by the adjustment of the accounts, we think it was the District, rather than Finley or his assignee.

The claim of William Schooler, as originally filed in the Court of Claims on the 20th of September, 1880, was for the removal of old material and excavation. The rules which should govern in determining the validity of this claim have been already sufficiently set forth in the mention heretofore made of other claims in which similar demands are made. It is true that he now in a petition filed with the committee lays claim to higher compensation for work done under his contracts. No mention whatever of any additional compensation being due him was made in his petition filed more than ten years ago. There does not seem to be any merit in this claim.

The claim of Patrick Brennan was for damages suffered in the construction of work at the intersection of T and Eighteenth streets. It was claimed by him that, notwithstanding his contract made him responsible for all damages from the action of the "elements," the refusal of the engineer in charge of the work to allow him to put in a culvert caused him damage to the amount of $2,508.44. He demanded this amount because of alleged arbitrary interference of the engineer. It was proved that by the engineer's refusal he was not prevented from adopting such measures of precaution as might have avoided the loss. He also presents other claims to the committee, which were set forth in a suit brought in the Court of Claims in 1880, but were abandoned by him on trial of the case. The Court of Claims gave him a judgment for the amount due him on his accounts, namely, $1,495.56, with interest from June 1, 1875. He received this sum, and we regard that as a full settlement of all his claims.

The claim of John J. Shipman was tried with a degree of thoroughness seldom exhibited in lawsuits. A very large amount of testimony was taken, and the court elaborately reviewed the facts and law pertaining to the claim. The claimant filed his original petition, and later filed two separate amendments thereto, and his case was carefully presented by counsel; so that evidently nothing was left undone to secure the full compensation due to him. Allowances were made by the Court of Claims on counterclaims by the District for certain overpayments which were probably mistakes of fact made by the board of public works or the board of audit in measurements. There is no reason which would apply in favor of a reopening of this case which would not apply to any lawsuit thoroughly tried, carefully examined, and decided ten years ago.

The claim of Lipscomb, administrator of Eslin, is for an alleged overcharge made by the officers of the District for certain material furnished to Eslin and used by him in performing his contracts. It is maintained that Eslin was charged 75 cents per yard for a quantity of blue rock, when the charge should have been 75 cents per load, each load containing about 3 yards. Payment was received by Eslin's attorney on a basis of 75 cents per yard, and no complaint made, nor does it appear that the decedent during his lifetime objected to the adjustment of his accounts on that basis. An effort was made during the trial to establish by testimony that the rate charged in other cases was 75 cents per load. We think this effort signally failed.

Three witnesses were examined, two of whom testified that 75 cents per yard was charged, and the other 75 cents per load; but, aside from the comparative credibility of the witnesses, the memoranda taken at the time decidedly favored the price of 75 cents per yard. It appears that the price allowed for paving was $1.50 per yard when the contractor furnished both the labor and material, and 75 cents per yard when the District furnished the material. This would leave the difference between the two 75 cents per yard for material, and would apparently establish that as the price charged in transactions between the District and contractors.

Several general considerations seem to be conclusive of the merits of these claims. First, every one of the claimants had opportunity to obtain his just dues. The work was done under the supervision of the board of public works. Later the statute of June 20, 1874, created a board of audit, composed of the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury, aided by skillful accountants, and directed that they should promptly investigate and settle these similar claims. Afterwards, in 1880, the statute referred to was passed, giving the right within six months to bring suit in the Court of Claims and providing that claims not presented during that time should be forever barred. In this statute the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States was also given. In most of the claims included in this bill a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs, which they accepted, and in several cases the judgment specified that unless the claimants accepted the amount named therein judgment should be entered against them. In these cases the amount was accepted. The aim of the two statutes creating the board of audit and giving the jurisdiction to the Court of Claims is manifest. It was to adjust and finally dispose of transactions which had been marked by an unusual degree of looseness and haste.

There is nowhere any evidence of any lack of vigilance on the part of claimants in asserting their claims, or of unwillingness on the part of the tribunals in question to give to them all their just dues; second, there is not such a preponderance of evidence in favor of the claimants in any of the cases as to justify a court to reopen the case, even if the application for a new trial or rehearing had been made at the time; third, all the objections which apply to the reopening of controversies and the investigation of transactions long remote apply with special force to these cases. It would now be practically impossible for any court to examine these claims and ascertain their merits with that degree of accuracy which was possible at the time jurisdiction was given to the board of audit and the Court of Claims. In making a defense the District of Columbia would be subjected to a very great disadvantage, as not only have the officers having the matter in charge been changed for the most part, but the form of government has also been changed.

The contention of the claimants is that they should have the most favorable terms in making settlement which were granted to any parties making contracts with the District, so that even if a material mistake were made, and too much was allowed to anyone, everyone should have the same advantage in obtaining compensation. This intention is clearly set forth in a bill introduced in the Forty-eighth Congress (H. R. 7489), in which section 2 provides that—

"Whenever the board of public works or the Commissioners of said District by general orders or rules have fixed or established higher or increased prices or rates for work or labor performed or material furnished under such written or oral contracts than the price mentioned, such higher rates shall be deemed and taken to be the rates of compensation applicable to said contract, with like effect as if inserted therein."

We can not approve a bill which seeks to ignore the written contracts made by the parties, and gives the option of claiming a higher rate of compensation for the work than that for which it was agreed to be done. The decisions indicate that the Court of Claims examined these cases with care and marked ability, and if there is any evidence of insufficient consideration it is rather in the cases which the claimants seek to establish as precedents than in the decisions upon the claims in controversy.

The committee accordingly recommend that Senate bill 3061, together with House bill 2448, which is of similar import, be laid on the table.

Mr. GROUT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe the bill is completed. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendments and the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROUT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 243) providing for the printing of the Consular Regulations of 1896;

A bill (H. R. 9799) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Chattanooga Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Chattanooga;"

A bill (H. R. 1524) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of William B. Isaacs & Co.;

A bill (H. R. 2985) granting an increase of pension to Lemuel J. Essex;

A bill (H. R. 6539) to increase the pension of Richard C. Enright;

A bill (H. R. 3688) to pension James L. McKinney for services in Oregon Indian wars;

A bill (H. R. 3939) to pension Daniel Giles for services in Oregon Indian wars;

A bill (H. R. 2189) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Freeman;

A bill (H. R. 4099) to increase the pension of Mary S. Higgins;

A bill (H. R. 2257) to increase the pension of Charles H. Twomey;

A bill (H. R. 7740) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Keiser;

A bill (H. R. 1168) to increase the pension of Joseph P. Hill, late of Company F, Eighty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion;

A bill (H. R. 2725) granting increase of pension to Henry Slaughter;

A bill (H. R. 6166) granting a pension to Minnie Parker, widow of Col. and Bvt. Brig. Gen. Ely S. Parker, late of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 10012) relating to the improvement of Eastchester Creek, State of New York; and
A bill (H. R. 4985) to permit a part of the Fort Lyon Military Reservation to be occupied, improved, and controlled for a Soldiers' Home by the State of Colorado.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, the widow of the late Brigadier and Brevet Major General Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HILL, and Mr. SHOUP as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:
A bill (S. 757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris;
A bill (S. 684) granting an increase of pension to Marion McKibben; and
A bill (S. 905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keeffe.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. BAKER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:
A bill (H. R. 897) for the relief of James Stewart;
A bill (H. R. 3494) granting a pension to Frances M. Roberts;

A bill (S. 3636) to increase the pension of the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:
A bill (S. 3191) granting a pension to Milton T. Bedford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 2576) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha L. Bohannon, of Lynchburg, Va.—to the Committee on Pensions.
A bill (S. 2674) granting a pension to Levi R. Long—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 3509) to increase the pension of Gen. James W. McMillan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 3350) granting a pension to Susan A. Paddock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 1302) granting a pension to Thomas Madden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 2910) granting a pension to Mrs. Essie E. Powell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Samuel Shaffer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 355) granting a pension to Rhoda A. Van Niman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
A bill (S. 3636) to increase the pension of the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812—to the Committee on Pensions.
Joint resolution (S. R. 121) to amend an act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth reservations, in the State of Minnesota—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.
Joint resolution (S. R. 191) relative to the improvement of the waterway between Birmingham, Ala., and the Black Warrior River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.
A bill (S. 3239) for the relief of the estate of Richard Lawson—to the Committee on War Claims.

JAMES STEWART.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 897) for the relief of James Stewart, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if some gentleman would tell us what there is in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill can be referred to a committee, if that is the will of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I move that it be referred.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment, which is a mere correction of the phraseology of the bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has moved to refer this bill to a committee. I hope that will not be done, because the Senate amendment is merely formal. The bill as it went to the Senate from this body contained the words "for wages he has earned."

The Senate amended that so as to read, "for wages which he is alleged to have earned."

Mr. CANNON. What are the facts about the bill?

Mr. BROMWELL. It is the Stewart case that passed through the House a short time ago. The gentleman from Illinois took part in the debate upon it. It is a longevity pay claim. The bill passed the House and went to the Senate containing the language I have stated, and the Senate has amended it so as to read, "for wages which he is alleged to have earned." It is a merely formal amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I made my fight against that bill with as much vigor as I could command when it was under consideration here, but the House passed the bill, and I have nothing further to say.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion to refer the bill to a committee?

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw the motion..

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. POWERS. I rise to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to dispose of the public business which is on the Speaker's table.

HUDSON RESERVOIR AND CANAL COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9029) to grant to the Hudson Reservoir and Canal Company a right of way through the Gila Indian Reservation, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is a bill which was up for consideration in the early part of this week, when the statement was made that it had been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. It is.

Mr. TERRY. What effect does the Senate amendment have?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. The Senate amendment strikes out section 10, providing that "the provisions of this act shall be in force from its passage." The Senate evidently regarded that as surplusage.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7469) providing for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in his seat, but I think he wishes to have that bill referred to his committee, and I move that it be so referred.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MRS. MARY A. VIEL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6902) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Viel, with an amendment of the Senate thereto, reducing the pension from $25 to $12 per month.

The amendment was concurred in.

CLARA L. NICHOLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6528) to increase the pension of Clara L. Nichols, with an amendment of the Senate striking out $75 and inserting $50, making the pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment was concurred in.

MIRIAM V. KENNEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3927) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenney, with an amendment striking out $25 and inserting $12, making the pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if the reading clerk is not making some mistake. Is the Senate really reducing these pensions? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Clerk is reading correctly. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. It seems impossible.

The SPEAKER. Well, it may seem so.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to; and the amendment was concurred in.

FRANCES M. ROBERTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3494) granting a pension to Frances M. Roberts, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

On motion of Mr. OTJEN, the Senate amendment was concurred in.

JAMES L. WING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3481) granting a pension to James L. Wing, with an amendment of the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate striking out "thirty" and inserting "twenty," to make the rate of pension $20 a month, was read.

Mr. BLUE. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN LONG.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 9666) to correct and amend the military record of John Long, late private Company H, Thirty-first Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. STEELE. Is not this a case where the House bill provided that the amendment of the soldier's military record should carry no additional pay or emolument?

Mr. LOUD. Let us have the House bill read.

The bill as passed by the House was read.

Mr. TRACEY. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

TITLE TO PUBLIC LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 9345) to enable certain persons in the State of Mississippi to procure title to public lands.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. LACEY. I move the reference of this bill, with the amendments of the Senate, to the Committee on Public Lands. These amendments are very voluminous, and we have had no opportunity to examine them.

Mr. KYLE rose.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. KYLE] prefers it, the bill might, by unanimous consent, remain on the Speaker's table until the amendments can be examined.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS], who introduced this bill, is not present just now. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the bill, with the amendments, be permitted to remain on the Speaker's table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MRS. MARY GOULD CARR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased; which was read.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with the amendment of the House nonconcurred in, and the request of that body for a conference.

The amendment of the House striking out $75 and inserting $50 as the amount of the proposed pension was read.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. CROWTHER, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. LAYTON as conferees on the part of the House.

FRANCES M. ROBERTS.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the House agreed to an amendment of the Senate to a bill pensioning the dependent daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812—House bill 3494, to pension Frances M. Roberts. When the amendment was concurred in, I did not catch fully its purport. I desire to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in that amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BLUE. I now move that the bill, with the amendment of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to reconsider the several votes by which bills on the Speaker's table have been disposed of, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURTS IN UTAH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2037) to provide times and places for holding terms of United States courts in Utah; which was read.

The SPEAKER. This bill, having been amended by the House, has been returned from the Senate with the amendment disagreed to and a request for a conference.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BRODERICK, Mr. BURTON of Missouri, and Mr. BAILEY as conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], who wishes to bring up a matter of public business.

Mr. LOUD. I do not desire to disturb any arrangement which may have been made, but I call for the regular order.

Mr. EVANS. I desire to call up a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8190) to provide an American register for the bark Ceres;

A bill (H. R. 9707) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898;

A bill (S. 1356) to increase the pension of Elizabeth L. Larrabee, widow of Col. C. H. Larrabee, late of the Twenty-fourth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers;

A bill (S. 638) granting an increase of pension to John Nichols;

A bill (S. 1017) granting a pension to Robert Kiracofe;

A bill (S. 1310) granting an increase of pension to Shubael Gould;

A bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Dudley F. Brown;

A bill (S. 3622) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough;

A bill (S. 895) for the relief of Christopher Ellis;

A bill (S. 3320) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Arena, Mendocino County, in the State of California;

A bill (S. 146) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Towne;

A bill (S. 905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keeffe;

A bill (S. 757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris;

A bill (S. 684) granting an increase of pension to Marion McKibben;

A bill (S. 2133) granting a pension to Mary E. Ely;

A bill (S. 1949) granting an additional pension to Capt. Bradbury W. Hight; and

A bill (S. 1787) granting a pension to Nancy T. Duncklee.

SALE OF FORFEITED OPIUM.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for present consideration a report from the Committee on Ways and Means on the bill (H. R. 10203) to amend section 40 of "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, so as to authorize the sale of forfeited domestic smoking opium to the highest bidder.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 40 of an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, be amended by adding at the end of said section the words "and may be sold to the highest bidder."

The Committee on Ways and Means recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Add to the bill: "Pursuant to the provisions of section 3460, Revised Statutes, if not valued as therein provided at over $500; but if valued at more than $500, the sale shall be made pursuant to the judgment of the court in the proceedings for condemnation or forfeiture."

The SPEAKER. This is a bill, the Chair will state, that is before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. EVANS. I think if the report is read there will be no objection to its consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. EVANS. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. EVANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, having carefully considered the bill (H. R. 10203) to amend section 40 of the act of October 1, 1890, to reduce the revenue, etc., recommend that the same be passed when amended by adding thereto the words following, viz:

"Pursuant to the provisions of section 3460, Revised Statutes, if not valued as therein provided at over $500, but if valued at more than $500 the sale shall be made pursuant to the judgment of the court in the proceedings for condemnation or forfeiture."

They do so upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the letters which are appended, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated the 18th instant, stating the embarrassment under which that office labors from the absence of specific statutory authority permitting the sale by a collector of internal revenue, to the highest bidder, of forfeited domestic prepared smoking opium, similar to the authority given collectors of customs by sections 3074 and 3077, Revised Statutes, in the case of imported smoking opium or other goods seized as forfeitable under the customs laws.

As a remedy the Acting Commissioner suggests an amendment of section 40 of the act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 621), relating to opium, by the addition of the words "and may be sold to the highest bidder."

I respectfully recommend the passage of the proposed amendment.

Respectfully, yours,

W. E. CURTIS, Acting Secretary.

Hon. NELSON DINGLEY,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1897.

SIR: Your attention is called to an embarrassment under which this office labors from the absence of specific statutory authority permitting the sale by a collector of internal revenue, to the highest bidder, of forfeited domestic prepared smoking opium, similar to the authority given collectors of customs by sections 3074 and 3077, Revised Statutes, in the case of imported smoking opium or other goods seized as forfeitable under the customs laws.

Under section 3334, Revised Statutes, amended, and other sections, goods taxable under the internal-revenue laws, sold by order of court or by the collector, under warrant of distraint or under section 3460, Revised Statutes, are required to be sold subject to tax. Usually in the case of spirits, tobacco, cigars, etc., the sale can be effected for an amount at least equal to the tax. In the case of domestic smoking opium, however, the tax of $10 per pound is prohibitory of such sale. The duty on imported smoking opium being but $6 per pound, it is impossible to sell the domestic article for $10.

Crude opium is on the free list, and it was no doubt anticipated, when the internal-revenue tax of $10 was imposed on domestic smoking opium, that there would be some lawful production of the domestic manufactured article. Such has proved, however, not to be the case. Not a single lawful manufactory of domestic smoking opinion has ever been established, nor an ounce of the article produced. The unstamped smoking opium seized (on the Pacific Coast almost exclusively) is said often to be made from a small portion of the foreign article mixed with yen she, or the ashes of opium from pipes. It is of course inferior, but this office understands that it might, notwithstanding, be usually depended upon to sell for $3 or more per pound.

There are now in the hands of Collector Welburn several thousand 5 tael cans of domestic smoking opium liable to forfeiture, if it could be disposed of under the law. There is no specific authority for destroying it in case it will not bring a price equal to the tax. And it would seem that it would not be good policy to require such destruction. Its discovery and seizure have been attended with considerable expense which it is desirable should be reimbursed out of the proceeds. In my opinion no valid objection can be urged to a specific provision of law authorizing the sale of such property to the highest bidder in view of the situation. The goods so sold will not take the place of lawfully manufactured domestic smoking opium, there being none.

I therefore suggest that an act of Congress be sought amending section 40 of the act of October 1, 1890, relating to opium, by the addition of the words "and may be sold to the highest bidder."

If such amendment should be enacted by Congress, it would be practicable to use the opium stamps heretofore prepared (none of which have ever been used) with a proper indorsement across the face of each stamp used upon a box of forfeited opium by the collector, showing the facts and date of the forfeiture, sale, etc.

Respectfully, yours,

G. W. WILSON,
Acting Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called for, which is the call of committees for report. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

The Committee on Elections No. 2 was called.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider at this time in the House, as in Committee of the Whole House, the Report No. 1974, reported from Committee on Elections No. 2——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman indicate the nature of the report?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It is a bill to repeal the statutory limitation of $2,000 allowed to contestants and contestees in election cases.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, let us have that bill read.

Mr. LOUD. This is on the Union Calendar?

Mr. PAYNE. If it is on the Union Calendar, it will require unanimous consent.

Mr. LOUD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I insist on the regular order.

Mr. SAYERS. I object to its consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman from Texas will hear the reading of the report.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask for the reading of the bill first, and then we can have the report, reserving the right to object.

Mr. LOUD. The Speaker has uniformly suggested that during the call of committees for reports we should confine ourselves to the consideration of measures on the House Calendar, and has invariably suggested to members who asked unanimous consent that it was not desirable to interrupt that order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this is not a proposition to interrupt the order. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to rise before the call of committees was commenced. The Chair, of course, does not like to interrupt either the business on the Speaker's table or the call of committees. But between them, as this is a matter of public business, the Chair thought it might be submitted to the House if there was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I had risen, Mr. Speaker, before the call of committees was commenced.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and it could only be considered now by unanimous consent.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Printing, which I think is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman submits a privileged report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It relates to the RECORD, and I think is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the matter presented by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 237) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to supply to each newspaper correspondent whose name appears in the Congressional Directory, and who makes application therefor, one copy of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the same to be sent to the office address of each member of the press, or elsewhere in the city of Washington, as he may direct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to furnish a copy of the RECORD to the paper or papers represented by the newspaper men in the gallery here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think this is privileged, but will submit the matter to the House. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It relates to the RECORD, and I thought it was privileged.

Mr. LOUD. If it is not privileged, I hope the gentleman will allow it to go over.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is quite late in the session, as the gentleman knows, and if any action on this is to be taken at all, it should be taken promptly.

Mr. LOUD. That is true, but it will break the rule that we have adopted with reference to unanimous consents. If it is given in one case it would have to be given in other cases, and I feel called upon to object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will you hear my statement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on the question of privilege.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It must be in the nature of a privileged matter, because it refers to the publication of the RECORD. But I ask its present consideration.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). I think there should be no exceptions, I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee, in unanimous consents. If it be granted to the gentleman from Tennessee, it should be granted to all other gentlemen who desire it. If it is extended to one, it should be extended to all. I think we had better proceed with the regular order first, and then go on with unanimous consents afterwards.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only want to say a word, then. I think this is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will state his ground, the Chair will be glad to hear it. The Chair had the impression that these reports were privileged when they related to printing to be done for the members.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When they relate to printing for the two Houses or for either House or for the members, but not under that provision of the rules, Mr. Speaker. I think it is privileged under the provision of the rules that matters relating to the proceedings of the House, to the integrity of those proceedings, and questions of that kind, are privileged. This resolution relates to the printing of the daily RECORD of the proceedings of the House, and my idea was that inasmuch as the resolution disposed of the daily RECORD, directed where it should be sent, it would be in order for the House to decide at any time when presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hardly thinks it could come up as a question of privilege, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman later, as the objection is only as to the time. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the legislature of Minnesota, praying for the passage of House bill No. 4339, to establish a national military park at Vicksburg, Miss.; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

A joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to establish a new national military park at Vicksburg, Miss.

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill (H. R. 4339) to establish a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg; and

Whereas the operations that culminated almost simultaneously at Gettysburg and Vicksburg in July, 1863, not only mark the turning point in the war of the rebellion, but also constitute one of the greatest epochs in the history of our country, and should both be commemorated in the most impressive and enduring manner possible; and

Whereas the establishment of a national military park at Vicksburg will be a most fitting and appropriate monument to the great commander whose genius planned these operations and directed them to a successful issue; and

Whereas the State of Minnesota has an especial interest in this bill for the reason that of her gallant soldiers three regiments of infantry and one battery of artillery participated in the operations it is intended to commemorate: Therefore

The legislature of the State of Minnesota, by this concurrent resolution, asks that the above-named bill (H. R. 4339) be passed during this session of Congress, and requests the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Congress from Minnesota to labor earnestly for its passage; and the secretary of state is hereby directed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from Minnesota; to the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs.

J. D. JONES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN L. GIBBS,
President of the Senate.

Approved this 5th day of February, 1897.

D. M. CLOUGH, Governor.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of State:

I, Albert Berg, secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy with the original act in my office, H. R. No. 59, a joint resolution memorializing Congress to establish a new national military park at Vicksburg, Miss., duly approved February 5, 1897, and that said copy is a true and correct transcript of said original act and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at the capitol in St. Paul, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1897.

ALBERT BERG,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Congregational and Christian churches of Carthage, S. Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 3232, known as the discriminating-duty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PHILADELPHIA MARITIME EXCHANGE.

Protest against the passage of the bill (S. 3232) known as discriminating-duty bill.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

The Philadelphia Maritime Exchange respectfully and most earnestly memorialize your honorable body against the passage of a certain bill, to wit, S. 3232, known as the discriminating-duty bill.

This bill provides that a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, in addition to the duties now imposed by law, shall be levied on all goods imported in ships not of the United States, and that any and all clauses in existing treaties in contravention thereto be abrogated and repealed.

In the opinion of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange the provisions of this bill, if enacted into law, would be disastrous to American shipping, and, instead of having the effect sought to be accomplished, would destroy rather than build up the American merchant marine. The discriminating duty would encourage importations into the United States by rail, and thus not only build up foreign lines running to Canadian and Mexican ports, but also, by shutting out foreign steamers at San Francisco, drive traffic from the American transcontinental railways to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The abrogation of some thirty-seven treaties with foreign nations, for it is reasonable to assume that no government would consent to strike out one section and allow the balance of the treaty to remain in force, would disrupt our trade relations with the maritime powers of the world, and the disastrous effect of such disturbance can not be overestimated. Should foreign governments retaliate, which seems not unlikely, by putting a tax, say, of 10 per cent on all goods imported into their countries in vessels of the United States, the loss on outward cargoes, now carried by American vessels, would more than offset the gain on any probable amount of homeward cargo, as it is well known that the most profitable freights to the shipowner are the eastward, and not the westward ones. Many steamers come to this country in ballast, depending entirely upon the eastward-bound cargo for their voyage earnings.

The protection sought to be given to the American shipowner by the proposed tax of 10 per cent on the value of the merchandise carried would be most unequally distributed. On a cargo of iron ore the tax would amount to about 20 per cent of the freight, while on a cargo of sugar or tobacco it would be fully 300 per cent; on corn it would be 50 per cent; on provisions, 200 per cent, and so on, discriminating between shipowners in the first instance to the extent of giving fifteen times as much protection to one as to the other. In high-valued merchandise, such as silks, etc., this unjust discrimination would be still more appalling.

For reasons set forth, the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange believes that the proposed legislation would inure to the detriment of American shipowners and work harm to American commerce, and therefore most earnestly petitions your honorable body against the passage of bill S. 3232.

By order of the board of directors.

GEO. E. EARNSHAW, President.

Mr. TILLMAN presented a petition of the legislature of South Carolina, praying Congress to recognize the independence of Cuba; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

Whereas it is proper that this State, founded in revolution and owing its liberties to the devotion and sacrifices of rebels against foreign and royal rule, should declare itself upon the struggle of an American people for relief from oppressions far greater than those against which Marion, Sumter, and Rutledge contended:

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), 1. That the general assembly of South Carolina expresses its hearty sympathy with the people of Cuba in their gallant contest for independence.

2. That in the opinion of this body the successful maintenance of the cause of the republic for two years, resulting in its present practical control of the entire island outside of the heavily garrisoned cities and towns, warrants its recognition as a sovereign power, holding the territory it claims and administering its government.

3. That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives of South Carolina in Congress.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S. C., January 23, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit to you the inclosed concurrent resolution adopted by the general assembly of South Carolina at its present session.

Very respectfully,
J. W. GRAY,
Clerk of the House.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the two amendments submitted by himself on the 2d and 4th instants, intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9101) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.," approved March 1, 1893, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MANTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CANNON on the 5th instant, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Select Committee on International Expositions, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN TEXAS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. DANIEL. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. 9469) to constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for holding the terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court, and the objections of the President thereto, to report it back with the recommendation that the bill do pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. I submit a written report thereon. It is a privileged matter, and I ask that the question be now taken.

Mr. MILLS. It is a question of privilege, and I ask that it may be submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass——

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the veto message read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first state the question. Shall the bill now pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The bill and message will be read at length.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message of the President will be read at length.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House bill No. 9469, entitled "An act to constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court."

It appears that terms of court are now held at four different places within the eastern judicial district of Texas, and that parties having business in the courts are not seriously inconvenienced under present arrangements.

Both the Federal judge and district attorney in this district express themselves in opposition to the bill as unnecessary and an interruption to the transaction of the large volume of business now pending and constantly coming before the court.

I have before me certificates of the clerks of the present divisions of the courts showing that during the last five years the counties which it is proposed shall constitute the new division have contributed but forty-two cases to the calendars of the court.

Conclusive proof is also before me that the additional terms of court provided for in this bill would so interfere with the terms already appointed in the existing divisions that the proper administration of the civil as well as the criminal law would be impracticable.

The criminal docket of the terms held at Paris is so large that under present arrangements and with the utmost industry trials can not now be as promptly disposed of as the ends of justice require. This condition would be further aggravated if terms of the court should be held at Beaumont on the dates proposed in this bill, since they are fixed at such times as to necessarily curtail the period now devoted to the Paris terms.

On the grounds stated, and because I am unable to discover how the public interests can possibly be promoted by the proposed legislation, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill under consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 14, 1897.

Mr. MILLS. Let the report be read. There is a report submitted by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report this day submitted by Mr. DANIEL, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration House bill 9469, "To constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court," and report the same to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

This bill was passed by the House of Representatives after a unanimous report in its favor by the Judiciary Committee of that body. It was sent to the Senate and referred to the Judiciary Committee, from which it was reported favorably and passed the Senate. It was then presented to the President for his approval and returned to the House with objections. It was again referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House for reconsideration; and having been reconsidered, was again reported favorably, and the House on reconsideration passed the bill by the constitutional majority of two-thirds. It again came to the Senate with the objections of the President, and was again referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate for reconsideration; and the committee report that they have carefully considered the objections of the President and report the bill back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. Beaumont, the point at which the court is to be held, is in the southeastern part of the State. It is in the eastern judicial district of Texas. There are now four places of holding courts in that district—one at Paris, on the northern border of the State; one at Jefferson, on the eastern border in the northern part of the district; one at Tyler, in the central portion of the north half of the district, and one at Galveston, in the southwestern part of the district. There are nine counties of the district where process is now returnable to Galveston, and the persons who may be required to attend that court—from most of them—must go through Beaumont to reach Galveston either by land or water. Two of the eleven counties are returnable to Tyler under existing law, and they would be accommodated by the change proposed. The committee believe that, among other considerations, the convenience of the people who are compelled to attend the courts, either as parties, witnesses, or jurors, ought be to consulted, and while it may be true that up to the present time there has not been a large amount of litigation arising in the counties made returnable to Beaumont, it would be a convenience to the people of those counties. Besides, within a few years there has grown up a very considerable industry at Beaumont and in its vicinity. The removing of obstructions to the navigation of Sabine Pass has opened a way to market for the product of the immense pineries of southeast Texas, and that section of the State is increasing in population and wealth as a consequence of the improvement of its commercial facilities. The people in the locality of Beaumont who now have to attend court must go either to Tyler or Galveston. The first is 175 miles and the other 135 miles distant. There can be none, or a very trifling additional expense incurred, and the committee think that the convenience of the people interested outweighs the objections interposed by the President.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I wish to have the attention of the Senate for a few moments, and for only a few moments. I will state that this is a bill authorizing the judge of the eastern district of Texas to hold a term of court at Beaumont. The bill when introduced in the House of Representatives was referred to the Judiciary Committee, indorsed by that committee, reported to the House, and passed by the House of Representatives. It was sent here. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee of this body, and was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee. It passed this body, and was sent to the President.

The President returned the bill to the House of Representatives with his objections. The House referred his objections and the bill again to the Committee on the Judiciary of that body. The bill was reconsidered with the President's objections, reported back favorably, and notwithstanding those objections the House by the constitutional majority passed the bill. It was again sent to the Senate, and the Senate referred it again to its Judiciary Committee for reconsideration. The Senate Judiciary Committee this morning, after having reconsidered it, report it back with the recommendation that the bill should pass, notwithstanding the President's objections.

Mr. President, the burden of the President's objection is that the judge of the court, the marshal, the district attorney, and the clerk are opposed to the bill. When I first came to Congress, twenty-four years ago, there were three Federal courts in the State of Texas, with 274,000 square miles of territory in the State. I began to ask Congress to pass bills to distribute the courts, to place them nearer to the people. I think in every single instance where I and the other Representatives of Texas asked that that should be done we met the opposition of the judge, the marshal, the district attorney, and the clerk, who think that their convenience ought to be consulted instead of the convenience of the people. It is strange to me that the President does not consult the fifteen members sent here by Texas, thirteen in the other branch and two in this, but consults alone the interests of the people of Texas as they are represented to him by the judge, the district attorney, the marshal, and the clerk.

I hope that the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas does great injustice to the President in stating that the President's reason for opposition to the bill is that the judge, the district attorney, and the clerk do not like it. The President's reason for opposition to the bill is a very strong one indeed. It is that in the district where the court is to be held there have been but forty-two cases in five years for decision in the United States court. I think that is a good, strong, honest reason, which ought to be considered, and considering it as a good, strong, honest reason, I propose to support the bill, and why? I propose to support the bill because, while there is not a great deal of business, there is a rapidly growing community where there must be a great deal more. There are important railroads now starting; there are business interests arising under United States laws, and there are controversies likely to come up there of importance, where the impartiality which the Constitution secures in the interests of citizens of the different States ought to be preserved.

I think also, as the Senator from Texas has said has been his own action, that it is very important indeed, as a matter of public policy, that the United States courts should be multiplied within reasonable bounds; that they should be brought close to the people. I understand (the Senator from Texas will correct me if I am wrong) that the nearest place to this town where a United States court is now held is about 130 miles off.

Mr. MILLS. One hundred and thirty-five miles.

Mr. HOAR. It is 135 miles off.

Mr. MILLS. And the next one is 175 miles.

Mr. HOAR. Now, it is not wise to compel persons charged with small offenses, it is not wise to compel persons who are accused of violating patents, it is not wise to compel persons who, if we have a bankruptcy law, will be interested in bankrupt estates, to have to travel that distance from their homes to get justice. The United States ought, within reasonable limits, to carry its justice to every man's door, as we carry the mails to every man's door.

The prejudice against the great constitutional power and the prejudice against the great constitutional rights created by the United States Constitution in many quarters and in many parts of the country, when you come to find out its origin, arises from the fact that the people do not like to be dragged for justice, especially by their antagonists, over great spaces to places that are strange to them. The United States ought to have its trials in the vicinage.

And so, not sharing the objection of the Senator from Texas to the President's reasons, I think the President's reasons are outweighed by better and stronger reasons on the other side, and I shall earnestly support the bill.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Massachusetts has supported what I said. The President did make his objections to the bill because the judge was opposed to it, because the marshal was opposed to it, because the district attorney was opposed to it, and because the clerk was opposed to it; and he did add the additional reason which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks of. But the Senator from Massachusetts has shown that he knows more about that part of the country than the President, and that the President's objection was not a very strong one.

I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but my only reason for rising was because I thought it was fair that the fact as to the small number of cases there should be understood by the Senate, and that the Senate should understand that in spite of it there were good reasons for the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. Understanding that he would vote "yea" on this bill, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. As he is absent from the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my own.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). As I have no direct information as to how the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] would vote if present, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nay 1; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is passed, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill to remove doubts as to the power of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to provide for a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The bill (S. 3666) to remove doubts as to the power of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to provide for a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in case of a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia the supreme court of said District may fill the same, and the person appointed by said court shall serve until an appointment is made by the President and the appointee is duly qualified, and no longer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTESIAN WATERS OF THE DAKOTAS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 23d ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of an extract from the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, entitled "Preliminary report on artesian waters of a portion of the Dakotas," for distribution by the Geological Survey.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back with an amendment a resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on January 12, 1897, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the stenographer reporting the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce under the resolution of the Senate of December 9, 1896, and also the hearings pending before the Committee on the Census, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was, in line 4, after the date "1896," to insert "and in relation to bills pending before said committee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CALL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3667) to enable individual bondholders to increase the volume of national-bank notes of a special form, without charge, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 3668) granting an increase of pension to Maj. John H. Geurkee; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 3669) relating to the landing of foreign submarine telegraph cables within the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3670) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts, widow of the late Gen. Benjamin S. Roberts, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3671) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Pekin, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3672) granting a pension to John Deming; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ROACH (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

On motion by Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That the Secretary request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia.

INVESTIGATION BY JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized in the case of Charles F. Amidon to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer; and that the expenses thus incurred be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

FOREIGN RELATIONS, 1896.

Mr. HALE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in red cloth 1,000 copies of Foreign Relations, 1896, including the last annual message of the President of the United States and the last annual report of the Secretary of State, for the use of the Department of State.

RECALL OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 3590) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I rise to morning business. I have a concurrent resolution to offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina submitted a request, which the Chair will state.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Before that is done, I wish to submit a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from South Dakota will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill No. 3328, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes.'"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. HILL. What is the ground for that resolution, Mr. President?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The resolution refers to a bill which has passed both Houses and gone to the President, but which contains an error which I think will defeat the purpose of the bill. I therefore offer the resolution for the purpose of recalling the bill and correcting the error.

Mr. HILL. I simply suggest to the Senate whether it is customary to recall a bill from the President of the United States for the correction of a substantial error. An error of engrossment is one thing, but an error of fact or the amendment of a bill is an entirely different thing. What is the exact fact in this case?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is customary, I am informed by the older members of the Senate, to pass such resolutions, and it has been done very many times, both for the purpose of amending a bill and correcting an error in its enrollment.

Mr. HILL. I, of course, will bow with respect to the statement of the Senator, if he is correctly informed, but I was not aware that it had been customary in the Congress of the United States to ask for the recalling of a bill sent to the President and in his hands for approval or disapproval, in order to have the bill amended, but it has been customary, where it was alleged that an error had been made in the enrollment of a bill, to ask to have it returned, simply to correct the error of enrollment.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I think he will find that there is a rule of the Senate on the subject, and that the resolution is in accordance with the custom.

Mr. HILL. Can the Senator refer me to the rule?

Mr. SHERMAN. There can be no doubt of the power of the House which has originated a bill to recall it from the President at any time before he has actually approved or disapproved it.

Mr. CULLOM. For any reason.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have known several cases of that kind where, in the enrollment or in the preparation of a bill for the President, some mistake had been made by inadvertence. It is certainly within the power of the Senate to recall a bill originating in this body.

Mr. HILL. As to any mistake in enrollment, any mistake in printing, any mistake per se, I agree with the Senator. The only query I start is whether, when there is an allegation of a mistake of that character, it is proper to recall a bill from the President of the United States in order to amend it in the matter of substance. If that is so——

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not only so, but when a bill has been recalled motions to bring it back to the condition in which it was when reported from the committee are usually put—motions to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed and all the other motions which are proper in the ordinary course of procedure on a bill, until we reach the stage when it is open to amendment.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts call my attention to the rule to which he has just referred?

Mr. HOAR. I find I was wrong about the rule.

Mr. HILL. Is not the Senator from Massachusetts also wrong as to the fact?

Mr. HOAR. I find the rule applies only to bills sent to the House of Representatives, and not to bills sent to the President. I was wrong in my recollection of the rule.

Mr. HILL. I have no doubt that it would be a very agreeable practice at times, and very beneficial in order to prevent a veto to recall a bill, and the President in the last stages of a session, if a bill could be amended, might desire to approve it; but I am not aware that it has been the practice of the Congress of the United States to recall a bill once sent under the Constitution to the President of the United States simply and solely for the purpose of amending it in a matter of substance, and not to correct an enrollment, a typographical error, or anything of that kind; and I suggest the question as to the power of Congress to do it. If there is no rule providing for the recall of a bill for amendment, it can not be done, it strikes me.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota to let the resolution go over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am perfectly willing that the resolution shall lie on the table until the Senator from New York has gained the information he desires upon this very important subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 4th instant approved and signed the act (S. 878) granting a pension to Jared S. Chamberlain.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 6th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 738) authorizing the establishment of a pier-head light at or near South Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin; and

An act (S. 3555) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations, in the State of Nebraska," by extending the time for the construction of said railway.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

The message further announced that the bill (S. 1682) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah B. Leet, having been presented to the President on January 26, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.

INTERSTATE REGULATIONS CONCERNING LIQUORS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I now renew my request for unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3590) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending that request, I rise to submit a privileged motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed to the request of the Senator from South Carolina, the bill will go over.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 10203) to amend section 40 of an act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes, approved October 1, 1890, so as to authorize the sale of forfeited domestic smoking opium to the highest bidder, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PASSPORT REGULATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State and accompanying reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries. In view of the evident value of the information contained in these reports, especially to American citizens going abroad and sojourning or traveling in foreign lands, I approve the recommendation of the Secretary that Congress authorize the printing of a special edition of 3,000 copies of the work, to be distributed by the Department of State as indicated in the Secretary's report.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 8, 1897.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith submit the Thirteenth Annual Report of the Civil Service Commission, containing a detailed statement of its important work, and exhibiting the present condition of the classified service of the Government.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1897.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 8, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

COPIES OF ELECTORAL CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House letters from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, copies in full of certificates of the ascertainment of the electors appointed in the following States: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky (two certificates), Kansas, Massachusetts, Missouri, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, Michigan, Maine, North Carolina, Nevada, New York, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, Wyoming, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these documents will remain on the Speaker's table, as that seems to be the only accessible point.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I will inquire if that is the usual course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the usual course. The Chair supposes that the object of the copies is comparison, as one set is sent to the Senate and one set to the House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER announced that the Committee on Invalid Pensions would be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 3004, and that it would be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Printing, I ask for the present consideration of House concurrent resolution No. 69.

The resolution was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the Department of the Interior, 3,000 additional copies of the report of the Assistant Secretary for 1896, relative to the administration of the pension laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAJO INDIANS.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY] has a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives what action is being taken, or has been taken, if any, to enforce the terms of the treaty or agreement with the Navajo Indians, entered into June 1, 1868, under which treaty or agreement said Indians are required to remain within the limits of their reservation.

The report (by Mr. FISCHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution No. 511, after having had the same under consideration, report back said resolution and recommend it be adopted.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CUBAN INSURRECTION.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that a resolution of the legislature of the State of South Carolina, which I send to the desk, may be read, placed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is not a resolution addressed to Congress.

Mr. TALBERT. It is a resolution adopted by the legislature of South Carolina, and I will ask to have read the letter of the clerk of the house transmitting it, which will explain itself. I ask that the letter and resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. It is a request to read a resolution directed to the Representatives of the State of South Carolina.

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

Mr. TALBERT. In regard to the Cuban insurrection.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, demands the regular order.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

FRATERNAL BENEFICIARY SOCIETIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a fraternal beneficiary association is hereby declared to be a corporation, society, or voluntary association, formed or organized and carried on for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit, having a lodge system, with ritualistic form of work and representative form of government, making provision for the payment of benefits in case of death. Each such association may make provision for the payment of benefits in case of sickness, temporary or permanent physical disability, either as the result of disease, accident, or old age: Provided, That the period in life at which payment of physical disability benefits on account of old age commences shall not be under 70 years, subject to their compliance with its laws. The fund from which the payment of such benefits shall be made, and the fund from which the expenses of such association shall be defrayed, shall be derived from assessments or dues collected from its members. Payment of death benefits shall be to the families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband, or affianced wife of, or to persons dependent upon the member. Such associations shall be governed by this act, and shall be exempt from the provisions of insurance laws of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, and no law hereafter passed shall apply to them unless they be expressly designated therein.

SEC. 2. That all such associations coming within the description as set forth in section 1 of this act, organized under the laws of the United States relating to said District, or any State, province, or Territory, and now doing business in said District, may continue such business: Provided, That they hereafter comply with the provisions of this act, regulating annual reports and the designation of the assessor of said District as the person upon whom process may be served as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That any such association coming within the description as set forth in section 1 of this act, organized under the law of any State, province, or Territory, and not now doing business in said District, shall be admitted to do business within said District when it shall have filed with the assessor a duly certified copy of its charter and articles of association, and a copy of its constitution and laws, certified to by its secretary or corresponding officer, together with an appointment of the assessor of said District as the person upon whom process may be served as hereinafter provided: Provided, That such association shall be shown to be authorized to do business in the State, province, or Territory in which it is incorporated or organized, in case the laws of such State, province, or Territory shall provide for such authorization; and in case the laws of such State, province, or Territory do not provide for any formal authorization to do business on the part of any such association, then such association shall be shown to be conducting its business in accordance with the provisions of this act; for which purpose the assessor may personally, or by some person to be designated by him, examine into the condition, affairs, character, and business methods, accounts, books, and investments of such association at its home office; which examination shall be at the expense of such association, and shall be made within thirty days after demand therefor; and the expense of such examination shall be limited to $50.

SEC. 4. That every such association doing business in said District shall, on or before the 1st day of March of each year, make and file with the assessor of said District a report of its affairs and operations during the year ending on the 31st day of December immediately preceding, which annual report shall be in lieu of all other reports required by any other law. Such report shall be upon blank forms to be provided by the assessor, or may be printed in pamphlet form, and shall be verified under oath by the duly authorized officers of such association, and shall be published, or the substance thereof, in the annual report of the assessor, under a separate part entitled "Fraternal beneficiary associations," and shall contain answers to the following questions:

First. Number of certificates issued during the year or members admitted?

Second. Amount of indemnity effected thereby?

Third. Number of losses or benefit liabilities incurred?

Fourth. Number of losses or benefit liabilities paid?

Fifth. The amount received from each assessment for the year?

Sixth. Total amount paid members, beneficiaries, legal representatives, or heirs?

Seventh. Number and kind of claims for which assessments have been made?

Eighth. Number and kind of claims compromised or resisted, and brief statement of reasons?

Ninth. Does association charge annual or other periodical dues or admission fees?

Tenth. How much on each $1,000, annually or per capita, as the case may be?

Eleventh. Total amount received, from what source, and the disposition thereof?

Twelfth. Total amount of salaries paid to officers?

Thirteenth. Does association guarantee in its certificates fixed amounts to be paid, regardless of amount realized from assessments, dues, admission fees, and donations?

Fourteenth. If so, state amount guaranteed and the security of such guaranty.

Fifteenth. Has the association a reserve or emergency fund?

Sixteenth. If so, how is it created, and for what purpose, the amount thereof, and how invested?

Seventeenth. Has the association more than one class?

Eighteenth. If so, how many, and the amount of indemnity in each case?

Nineteenth. Number of members in each class?

Twentieth. If voluntary, so state, and give date of organization.

Twenty-first. If organized under the laws of said District, under what law and at what time, giving chapter and year, and date of passage of the act?

Twenty-second. If organized under the laws of any State, province, or Territory, state such fact and the date of organization, giving chapter and year, and date of passage of the act.

Twenty-third. Number of certificates of beneficiary membership lapsed during the year?

Twenty-fourth. Number in force at beginning and end of year; if more than one class, number in each class?

Twenty-fifth. Names and addresses of its president, secretary, and treasurer, or corresponding officers?

The assessor is authorized and empowered to address any additional inquiries to any such association in relation to its doings or condition, or to any other matter connected with its transactions relative to the business contemplated by this act, and such officers of such association as the assessor may require shall promptly reply in writing, under oath, to all such inquiries.

SEC. 5. That each such association now doing or hereafter admitted to do business within said District, and not having its principal office within said District, and not being organized under the laws of the United States relating to said District, shall appoint, in writing, the assessor and his successors in office to be its true and lawful attorney, upon whom all lawful process in any action or proceeding against it may be served, and in such writing shall agree that any lawful process against it which is served on said attorney shall be of the same legal force and validity as if served upon the association, and that the authority shall continue in force so long as any liability remains outstanding in said District. Copies of such certificate certified by said assessor shall be deemed sufficient evidence thereof, and shall be admitted in evidence with the same force and effect as the original thereof might be admitted. Service upon such attorney shall be deemed sufficient service upon such association. When legal process against such association is served upon said assessor, he shall immediately notify the association of such service by letter, prepaid and directed to its secretary or corresponding officer, and shall, within two days after such service, forward in the same manner a copy of the process served on him to such officer. The plaintiff in such process so served shall pay to the assessor at the time of such service a fee of $3, which shall be recovered by him as a part of the taxable costs, if he prevails in his suit. The assessor shall keep a record of all processes served upon him, which record shall show the day and hour when such service was made.

SEC. 6. That the assessor of said District shall, upon the application of any association having the right to do business within said District, as provided by this act, issue to such association a permit in writing, authorizing such association to do business within said District, for which certificate and all proceedings in connection therewith such association shall pay the said assessor the fee of $5.

SEC. 7. That any nine or more persons, at least one-third of whom shall be residents of the District of Columbia, being desirous of forming a fraternal beneficiary society, order, or association for the purpose set forth in section 1 of this act, may associate themselves together and effect such organization as hereinafter prescribed, and not otherwise. Such persons shall make, sign, and acknowledge, before any officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds in this District, and file in the office of recorder of deeds of said District, a certificate or declaration in writing, to be recorded in a book kept for that purpose and open to public inspection, in which shall be stated the name or title by which said institution shall be known to law; the mode and manner in which the corporate powers granted by this act are to be exercised; the name and official title of the officers, trustees, representatives, or other persons, by whatever name or title designated, who are to have and exercise the general control and management of its affairs; the place of doing business defined; the limit as to age of applicants for beneficiary membership, which shall not exceed 55 years, and that medical examinations are required of applicants for life benefits, together with the sworn statement by three of said corporators that at least 100 persons, eligible under the proposed laws of such society, order, or association to membership therein, have in good faith made application in writing for membership. The recorder of deeds, upon the filing of said declaration, shall deliver to such society, order, or association a certified copy of the papers so filed and recorded in his office, together with a certificate to such association, order, or society, stating that the provisions of this act relative to incorporation have been complied with and that said society, order, or association becomes thereby authorized to carry on the work of a fraternal beneficiary society. Upon filing the certificate or declaration, as aforesaid, the persons who shall have signed and acknowledged the same and their successors and associates shall, by the provisions of this act, be a body politic and corporate by the name and style stated in the certificate, and by that name and style shall have perpetual succession, and may have and use a common seal, and the same may alter and change at pleasure, and may make and alter at times or from time to time such laws, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or the laws in force in said District, as they may deem necessary for the government of said association. And they and their successors, by their corporate name, shall, in law, be capable of creating, maintaining, and disbursing a reserve or emergency fund, in accordance with its laws, and of taking, receiving, purchasing, and holding real and personal estate necessary for the purpose of said society, and may let, place out at interest, or sell and convey the same, as may seem most beneficial for said association. The association shall elect from its members trustees, directors, or managers, by whatever title known in its laws, at such time and place and in such manner as may be specified in its laws, who shall have the control and management of the affairs and funds of said association, a majority of whom shall be a quorum for the transaction of business; and whenever any vacancy shall happen among such trustees, directors, or managers, by death, resignation, or otherwise, such vacancy shall be filled in such manner as shall be provided by the laws of said association.

SEC. 8. That the officers, trustees, directors, or governing body of any existing fraternal beneficiary society may, by conforming to the requirements of the several provisions of this act, reincorporate themselves or continue their existing corporate powers under this act, or change their name, stating in their certificate the original name of such corporation as well as their new name assumed, and all the property and effects of such existing corporation shall vest in and belong to the corporation so reincorporated or continued.

SEC. 9. That any subordinate body of any fraternal beneficiary society, order, or association incorporated under the provisions of this act, or of any such society, order, or association now doing business or may hereafter be admitted to do business in this District under this act, where the laws of the governing body of said society, order, or association do not prohibit the incorporation of their subordinate bodies, may become a body corporate in the manner following: At some regular meeting of such subordinate body a resolution, expressing the desire of such subordinate body to be incorporated and directing its officers to perfect such incorporation, shall be submitted to a vote of the members present, and if two-thirds of the members present and voting therefor, the president and secretary of such subordinate body, or the officer holding relative offices therein, shall prepare articles of association under their hands and the seal of such subordinate body, setting forth, first, the number of members of such subordinate body then in good standing; second, the name by which said subordinate body is known; third, the date of its organization and the period for which it is to be incorporated, not exceeding thirty years. A copy of such articles of association shall be filed with the recorder of deeds, and shall by him be recorded, together with the affidavit hereafter named, in a book to be kept for that purpose. On the execution of said articles of association, and before the filing thereof with the recorder, the secretary of such subordinate body shall annex thereto his affidavit stating that he is a member in good standing in such subordinate body and occupies the position of secretary, or the office corresponding therewith, therein, and that the resolution, a copy of which shall be set forth at length, was regularly passed at a regular meeting of said subordinate body and received the vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting, and that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the statements made in the articles of association are true, and that such subordinate body is organized and acting under the laws of its respective society, order, or association, giving the name by which such society, order, or association is incorporated. When the foregoing requirements are complied with, such subordinate body shall be a body corporate by the name expressed in such articles, and by that name shall be a person in law capable of suing and being sued in the courts and taking and holding property of every kind the same as natural persons, and a copy of said articles of association, duly certified to by the recorder of deeds, in whose possession they are, shall be prima facie evidence in all courts and places of the existence and the due incorporation of such subordinate body.

SEC. 10. That no contract with any such association shall be valid when there is a contract, agreement, or understanding between the member and the beneficiary that the beneficiary, or any person for him, shall pay such member's assessments and dues, or either of them.

SEC. 11. That the money or other benefit, charity, relief, or aid to be paid, provided, or rendered by any association authorized to do business under this act shall not be liable to attachment by trustee, garnishee, or other process, and shall not be seized, taken, appropriated, or applied by any legal or equitable process, or by operation of law, to pay any debt or liability of a certificate holder or of any beneficiary named in a certificate, or any person who may have any right thereunder.

SEC. 12. That any such association organized under the laws of said District may provide for the meetings of its legislative or governing body in any State, Province, or Territory wherein such association shall have subordinate bodies, and all business transacted at such meetings shall be valid in all respects, as if such meetings were held within said District; and where the laws of any such association provide for the election of its officers by votes to be cast in its subordinate bodies, the votes so cast in its subordinate bodies in any State, Province, or Territory shall be valid, as if cast within said District.

SEC. 13. That any person, officer, member, or examining physician who shall knowingly or willfully make any false or fraudulent statement or representation in or with reference to any application for membership or for the purpose of obtaining any money or benefit in any association transacting business under this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or imprisonment in the United States jail in said District for not less than thirty days or more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall willfully make a false statement of any material fact or thing in a sworn statement as to the death or disability of a certificate holder in any such association for the purpose of procuring payment of a benefit named in the certificate of such holder, and any person who shall willfully make any false statement in any verified report or declaration under oath required or authorized by this act, shall be guilty of perjury, and shall be proceeded against and punished as provided by the statutes of the United States in relation to the crime of perjury.

SEC. 14. That any such association refusing or neglecting to make the report as provided in this act shall be excluded from doing business within said District. Said assessor must, within sixty days after failure to make such report, or in case any such association shall exceed its powers, or shall conduct its business fraudulently, or shall fail to comply with any of the provisions of this act, give notice in writing to the attorney for said district, who shall immediately commence an action against such association to enjoin the same from carrying on any business. And no injunction against any such association shall be granted by any court except on application by the attorney for said district at the request of the assessor. No association so enjoined shall have authority to continue business until such report shall be made, or overt act or violations complained of shall have been corrected, nor until the costs of such action be paid by it: Provided, That the court shall find that such association was in default, as charged, whereupon the assessor shall reinstate such association, and not until then shall such association be allowed to again do business in said District. Any officer, agent, or person acting for any association or subordinate body thereof, within said District, while such association shall be so enjoined or prohibited from doing business pursuant to this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment in said jail not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 15. That any person who shall act within said District as an officer, agent, or otherwise for any association which shall have failed, neglected, or refused to comply with, or shall have violated any of the provisions of this act, or shall have failed or neglected to procure from the assessor a proper certificate of authority to transact business as provided for by this act, shall be subject to the penalty provided in the last preceding section for the misdemeanor therein specified.

SEC. 16. That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to any corporation, society, or association carrying on the business of life, health, casualty, or accident insurance for profit or gain, and shall only apply to fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations as defined by section 1, and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect any grand or subordinate lodge or branch of any such fraternal beneficiary societies, order, or association which limits its certificate holders to a particular religious denomination or to the employees of a particular town or city, designated firm, business house, or corporation, nor the grand or subordinate lodges of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, nor any grand, subordinate lodge, or other body of Free and Accepted Masons, nor the grand or any subordinate lodge of the Knights of Pythias, or similar orders, associations, or societies that do not have as their principal object the issuance of benefit certificates of membership in case of death or the payment of sick, funeral, or death benefits exceeding in amount $100.

SEC. 17. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to nor apply to any association or individual who shall, in the certificate filed with the recorder of deeds, use or specify a name or style the same as that of any previously existing incorporated body in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 18. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] who reported this bill.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, this is quite a lengthy bill, and is a bill to regulate and define the duties and powers of fraternal beneficiary societies doing business within the District of Columbia. It defines how such organizations shall be formed and their powers. This, or a similar law to this, has already been adopted in the States of Michigan, Illinois, and Iowa and with some slight variations in the States of New York, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. It is asked for by over forty of the leading beneficiary societies of the United States of America. I understand it is exactly similar to laws already upon the statute books of the States of Michigan, Illinois, and Iowa. Unless some debate is asked upon the bill, I shall ask for the previous question.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. On the top of page 5 the tenth question to be submitted by the assessor is as follows:

How much on each $1,000, annually or per capita, as the case may be.

The question in itself does not seem to be complete. I presume it refers to the preceding question. If that is what is intended, I think the words "if so" should be put in before the word "how." I repeat the question in itself does not seem to be complete.

Mr. MILNES. I think the words "if so" would be very proper there, and the committee will accept that amendment if the gentleman desires to offer it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I move, Mr. Speaker, to insert at the top of page 5, line 29, after the word "tenth," the words "If so."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 29, after the word "tenth," insert the words "If so."

Mr. MILNES. That is entirely satisfactory, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then, Mr. Speaker, on page 6 I find that there is a requirement that each of these associations shall appoint the assessor of the District of Columbia its attorney. That seems to be a very peculiar provision—that the association shall appoint as their attorney the officer who, by the bill, is to supervise them and to see that they exercise their various duties under the bill.

Mr. MILNES. I would like to say to the gentleman that that officer is named simply for the purpose of having some person upon whom process can be served, and the District Commissioners designated the assessor as the proper person for that purpose.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I think the general statutes of the States and of the United States in this regard generally require that the company shall designate an attorney and report his name and residence to the officer. It seems to me to be much more advisable than the way it is in this bill. I simply make this suggestion to the committee.

Mr. MILNES. The duties of the assessor as the attorney of the company are expressly limited. He has nothing to do with the process except to notify the grand secretary of the society. That is about the only duty it requires him to perform as attorney.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I do not insist upon anything in that regard. Then, on page 14, in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, there is this provision:

And no injunction against any such association shall be granted by any court except on application by the attorney for said District, at the request of the assessor.

Mr. MILNES. On what page is that?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. On page 14, lines 10, 11, 12, and 13. It seems to me that is a provision which would work injustice. Supposing two-thirds of the members of the beneficiary association should serve an injunction——

Mr. MILNES. The gentleman must be mistaken about the page and line. I can not find any such language in the bill I have before me.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Look at the bottom of page 14, in section 14, where it says:

And no injunction against any such association shall be granted by any court except on application by the attorney for said District, at the request of the assessor.

Now, suppose that two-thirds of a beneficiary association should have just cause for getting an injunction, and the assessor or some of his friends should happen to belong to the other one-third, and he should therefore refuse to make the request, this bill by its terms would in that way work an injustice.

Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words which I have just quoted, beginning on line 10 and ending on line 13, on the fourteenth page of the bill.

Mr. MILNES. Let me suggest to the gentleman from New Hampshire whether it would not be better to amend it so as to read in this way: "And an injunction against any such company shall be granted by any court on application by the attorney for said District."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Well, I will leave it to the gentleman to frame the amendment.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in section 14, page 14, line 10, the word "no," and insert the word "an;" so as to make the sentence read: "And an injunction against any such association shall be granted by any court," etc.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that the provision amended in that way would not make good sense. The amendment would interfere with the sense of the paragraph, as the gentleman will see if he reads it through. The bill says now: "And no injunction against any such association shall be granted by any court except on application by the attorney for said District, at the request of the assessor;" and it seems to me that there ought to be no objection to the language as it stands.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. As the provision stands in the bill, it takes away the right of each member of any of these associations to have legal process, and that does not seem to be a proper thing to do.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That provision is in the interest of all persons who may have benefit certificates, and it is not to be supposed for one moment that an officer of the District, the assessor, for instance, designated by the District Commissioners, will be partial in the administration of the law in connection with these fraternal societies. I do not see any objection whatever to the text of the bill as it stands.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there will be any difficulty in administering the law as the statute now reads. The assessor's duties are specifically prescribed. He is an officer who stands between the corporation and the beneficiaries.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes; and as this bill reads he stands between the officers of the association and its members. This provision as it stands takes away a legal right to which each member of such associations is certainly justly entitled. That seems to be wrong.

Mr. MILNES. Well, I do not think there would be any trouble in getting the permission of the assessor of the District, an officer who would be entirely disinterested.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It is very true that he may be disinterested, but very frequently officers who are entirely disinterested neglect the performance of their duties, and this provision says that an injunction shall not be granted except upon the affirmative action of the assessor; that is, upon his request to the attorney of the District.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit to the gentleman from New Hampshire that if any public officer refuses to do his duty the remedy is perfectly plain; it is simply to get a writ of mandamus to compel him to do his duty. The gentleman is assuming that an officer of the District is going to fail to do his duty. He can make the same objection to all laws and regulations prescribing the duties of public officers if he will assume in each case that public officers will not do their duty. I assume that this officer will do his duty; but if he does not, then, as I have said, a writ of mandamus will lie to compel him to do it, and such a writ can be issued on the application of any party in interest.

Mr. MILNES. Furthermore, the assessor, being entirely disinterested, would have no object in refusing.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But this bill goes beyond the point made by the gentleman from Tennessee, which applies in ordinary matters. The gentleman says a mandamus may issue to require the assessor to request the attorney to apply for an injunction. That is, if this bill should become a law and the assessor should neglect or should refuse to request an injunction, the complaining member must first apply for a mandamus and have a hearing upon that application, and then, if he succeeds in that, he must proceed to apply for an injunction, a right to which he is entitled as a citizen of the United States without having to encounter such obstacles.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of this provision is that the assessor must request the attorney of the District to take this action. The object is evidently to prevent vexatious litigation, and if it becomes the duty of the assessor to ask the attorney to apply for an injunction and he refuses to make that request, then a writ of mandamus will lie, at the instance of any party in interest, to compel him to do his duty. That is all there is in it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But it puts upon a man's hands two lawsuits to get his rights, when he should be able to get them by one.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is assuming that the man is not going to do his duty. I am assuming that he will. I do not think there ever will be the necessity for a mandamus.

Mr. MILNES. Let me ask the gentleman from New Hampshire whether he would be satisfied with an amendment making the bill read in this way:

An injunction against any such association may be granted by any court on application by the attorney for said District at the request of the assessor.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Well, I will accept that.

Mr. MILNES. I think that would obviate entirely the objection raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 of section 14 strike out the words "and no" and insert the word "an;" in line 11 strike out "shall" and insert "may;" in the same line strike out the word "except;" so as to make the clause read:

"An injunction against any such association may be granted by any court on application by the attorney for said District at the request of the assessor.'

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I should be glad if the gentleman in charge of this bill would explain section 17. What purpose is it intended to accomplish?

Mr. MILNES. The section to which the gentleman refers reads as follows:

SEC. 17. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to nor apply to any association or individual who shall, in the certificate filed with the recorder of deeds, use or specify a name or style the same as that of any previously existing incorporated body in the District of Columbia.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, the object is to prevent the duplication of corporate names and to insure that corporations already incorporated and doing business in the District of Columbia shall not be disturbed in their rights by this act.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That purpose is an entirely proper one; but it seems to me that this section would not accomplish it. It does not prohibit any company from adopting a corporate name already in use, but it says that if any company should do so the provisions of this bill shall not apply to them; in other words, they would be entirely outside the laws. I suggest to the gentleman that this section needs considerable amendment.

Mr. MILNES. They would not be outside the law, because the corporation would be left in existence as it is now.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That is very true; but the second corporation—the one assuming the name of an existing corporation, a name which it ought not to be permitted to use—would find itself, under the language of this section, entirely outside the provisions of this bill. Consequently such a company would go scot-free from the requirements herein provided. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that there should be some amendment to improve this defective phraseology.

Mr. MILNES. As I understand, if such a company should be formed it would have no standing whatever in the District; it would be entirely outside of the law, and it could not do business in the District.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That could not be so, because there is now no law to prevent it from doing business. The only law which would prevent such a company from doing business is the pending bill.

Mr. MILNES. But in the case supposed the new company would not comply with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. There is another matter to which I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES]. I ask his attention to the language in line 20 of page 2, "affianced husband or affianced wife." This language occurs in the recital of the beneficiaries under a policy which may be taken out under this act. Now, I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether he does not think that this language might lead to very great difficulty in determining who should have the benefit of a policy? What would be the status of an affianced husband or an affianced wife under this provision, supposing that the deceased should leave a father or mother, or brothers and sisters? Would all these parties share alike?

Mr. MILNES. I suppose that by this language the parties referred to are intended to be made beneficiaries.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. But suppose the deceased party who was insured should leave no affianced wife or affianced husband. Does the gentleman think that this language is clear enough to indicate who would be the beneficiaries in such a case? Would that matter depend upon the statements of the persons themselves?

Mr. MILNES. I think that it would depend altogether upon the language of the certificate. The persons named in the certificate would be the beneficiaries, and no others.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. But the bill does not so provide, does it?

Mr. MILNES. It provides that the claim for the death benefits shall be made by these persons named.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Suppose that the father should be named in the certificate, and at the time of the insured party's death the father had died, then would the affianced husband or wife be entitled along with the other heirs to the benefits of the policy?

Mr. MILNES. I do not think so, unless so specified in the certificate.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. But in the event that the person mentioned in the certificate is dead, the insurance must go to the heirs or legal representatives, or some other person. Why would not the affianced husband or wife, as the case may be, become the beneficiary under this provision of this bill? That is the point.

Mr. MILNES. They would not be the beneficiaries unless the other heirs were dead.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. But the point is that the bill itself in this provision puts them in precisely the same category and makes them successors to the insurance.

Mr. MILNES. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that this is precisely the same provision that is found in the laws of several of the States of the Union, notably in the State of Michigan, the State of Illinois, the State of Iowa, and several other States, upon this subject.

Mr. PITNEY. What is the provision in the exact terms as appears in the bill? Let us hear the provision read.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. It is suggested that I read the provision as it appears in the bill. It is as follows:

The fund from which the payment of such benefits shall be made, and the fund from which the expenses of such association shall be defrayed, shall be derived from assessments or dues collected from its members. Payment of death benefits shall be to the families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband, or affianced wife of, or to persons dependent upon the member.

Now, all of these persons mentioned in this paragraph of the bill are placed in the same order, and all would be entitled to participate in the benefits, provided that the person named in the policy was actually dead.

Mr. MILNES. I think the gentleman will find on a close examination that this covers precisely the ground that is sought to be covered by these associations in such matters.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I understand the language——

Mr. MILNES (continuing). And this is the shape that these associations desire the provision to be placed in.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand the language, Mr. Speaker, in the limitation placed here, it would provide that the beneficiary would be any one of that class named——

Mr. MILNES. Precisely.

Mr. PITNEY. But if the beneficiary is not of that class?

Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). And is simply a limitation upon a class of persons who shall have the benefit of the policy or certificate. That is to say, it is practically a provision against what may be termed speculative insurance. But the classes of persons who can have the benefit of the policy or certificate are expressly named in this provision, that is to say, the family, the heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband or affianced wife, or to persons dependent upon the member. And any of these persons would become beneficiaries under the provision of this section.

Mr. MILNES. That is the intention.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But of course that would not deny to the person holding the beneficiary certificate the right to name any person or persons of this class or in this class who should have the benefit of the policy.

Mr. PITNEY. Ought not the bill to provide in terms who shall have the benefit if the person named as beneficiary dies before making such disposition of it?

Mr. AITKEN. As a rule, this is regulated by the by-laws of the association itself. These fraternal associations all provide in their laws who shall take if the beneficiary named dies before the insured. But the member is compelled to name some one in the first instance who is entitled to be a beneficiary under the law.

Mr. PITNEY. But should it not prescribe some one who shall become the beneficiary in direct succession in the event of the death of the party who takes out the certificate?

Mr. AITKEN. It provides, as a rule, that it shall go in the rotation named in the law. But they are required to name some person in the first instance, because otherwise it might be in the nature of a speculative insurance.

Mr. PITNEY. But unless the act enables the association to specify to whom the benefit shall go in the event of the death of the original beneficiary, ought there not to be some fixed rule to determine that question of succession?

Mr. AITKEN. They have a right to provide and do provide for that under their laws.

Mr. PITNEY. How?

Mr. BARHAM. The charters of the associations authorize them to provide by-laws for such contingencies.

Mr. AITKEN. The laws of the association would enable it to do that; but of course they can not go outside of the law that limits this provision.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Besides, Mr. Speaker, this provision is now in the shape as recommended by the fraternal congress which is composed of forty-two of these organizations. They were united in this particular measure, and I can not see that it would work injustice or injury to anybody. I hope it will not be amended in this respect.

Mr. MILNES. As stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, it is exactly in the shape provided by these associations themselves, and there is no danger of working any harm to them. Besides, these associations number some 1,600,000 persons, and they have agreed on this particular provision.

If there be no further question, I ask the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILNES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUNISHMENT FOR IMPERSONATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person in the District of Columbia to falsely represent himself or herself as being an inspector of the health department of said District, or an inspector of any department of the District government; and any person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the police court of said District shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $50 for the first offense, and for each subsequent offense by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100, or imprisonment in the jail of the District not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, let the report be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CURTIS].

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Iowa) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report the same to the House, with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The bill makes the impersonation of inspectors of the District a misdemeanor, punishable by a maximum fine of $50 and a minimum fine of $10, and providing severer penalties in the way of fines or imprisonment, or both, for subsequent offenses.

The bill is recommended by the health department of the District and by the Commissioners.

The need for such legislation has frequently been demonstrated, recently in a case where a veterinary surgeon represented himself to a certain dairyman as the official veterinarian of the health department, examined the cattle on the premises and charged a fee therefor, which he collected.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TRANSCRIPTS FROM RECORDS OF HEALTH DEPARTMENT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9821) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to charge a fee for the issuance of transcripts from the records of the health department.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to collect a fee of 50 cents, to be paid to the collector of taxes, for each transcript from the records of births, deaths, and marriages in the health department of said District: Provided, That no one transcript shall be made so as to apply to more than one birth, death, or marriage: And provided further, That no fee shall be charged for transcripts furnished the various Departments of the United States Government for official purposes.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect thirty days after its passage.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] if the fees carried in this bill are covered into the Treasury?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if the fee of 50 cents does not seem exorbitant? These transcripts are made out on printed blanks. They do not, ordinarily, occupy the attention of a clerk for ten minutes. There are a great many of them issued for purposes that are semipublic, and it seems to me that 25 cents ought to be ample.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the sum of 50 cents was recommended by the health officer, approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and accepted by the Committee on the District of Columbia as the proper amount. The Commissioners in their letter fully set forth the advisability of this legislation, and if any gentleman desires to hear the letter read it may be read by the Clerk.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. There is no doubt about the advisability of the legislation. The only question is as to the exorbitance of the fees which we are called upon to authorize.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call for a vote on the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the immigration bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon considering the conference report at this time. He has the floor at all times, and the Committee on the District of Columbia have the floor only to-day.

Mr. DANFORD. Upon the suggestion of the gentleman, I am entirely willing to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw the report?

Mr. DANFORD. I withdraw the report for the present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is privileged and can come in at any time.

Mr. DANFORD. I will call up the conference report immediately after the Committee on the District of Columbia surrender the floor.

GRACELAND CEMETERY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894, is hereby amended as follows:

"The said board of officers are hereby authorized and empowered to convey the said property by mortgage or deed of trust to secure a loan, which they are hereby authorized to make, at such time and at such rate of interest as may be practicable, not exceeding 6 per cent per annum, which money so raised shall be used by them for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of the said act, and for which they shall be accountable as for other moneys coming into their hands as such officers under the said act."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply authorizes the cemetery association to borrow money and to mortgage their property for the purpose of removing the bodies now interred there. They have exhausted all of their means and still have some 6,000 bodies to remove. They have no other way of getting the money to do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the bill approved by the District Commissioners?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, yes. There is a long report here in favor of it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC FLATS RESERVATION.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9770) providing that the Potomac Flats shall be reserved and improved for park purposes under the name of the Potomac Park.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the entire area known as the Potomac Flats, in the District of Columbia, and now being reclaimed, together with the tidal reservoirs, be, and the same are hereby, made and declared a public park, under the name of the Potomac Park, and to be forever held and used as a park for the recreation and pleasure of the people.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order that that bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, if the point of order is sustained by the Chair, I suggest that the bill be laid aside. It has not been put on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DOCKERY. It disposes of public lands.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no; it is just to change the name.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, well, Mr. Speaker, it dedicates certain land within the District of Columbia for use as a park.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no; if the gentleman will read the bill, it says:

That the entire area known as the Potomac Flats, in the District of Columbia, and now being reclaimed, together with the tidal reservoirs, be, and the same are hereby, made and declared a public park, under the name of the Potomac Park, and to be forever held and used as a park for the recreation and pleasure of the people.

Mr. BLUE. That is a dedication of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not a dedication of it.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a dedication of public property in the District to park uses. The Government has spent several million dollars in the reclamation of these flats, and now it is proposed to give them away.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is to be kept from being used for anything else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the bill is subject to the point of order. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the bill for the present.

Mr. BABCOCK. I withdraw it for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 178) granting a pension to Betsey J. Webber;

A bill (S. 1323) granting a pension to Mary Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat;

A bill (S. 1495) granting a pension to Hans Johnson;

A bill (S. 2126) granting a pension to Mrs. Laura A. Nelson;

A bill (S. 2347) for the relief of Laura C. Dodge;

A bill (S. 2913) granting an increase of pension to Nettie A. Cheeks; and

A bill (S. 1806) granting a pension to George B. Custer, late sergeant Company H, Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1694) to increase the pension of Maj. Gen. Julius H. Stahel, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. PRITCHARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. SHOUP, Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, and Mr. CANNON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. ROACH, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. PEFFER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1968) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company;

A bill (S. 2791) for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of the Northern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota;

A bill (S. 1350) to make Commodore William P. McCann, of the Navy, a rear-admiral on the retired list;

A bill (S. 3244) to amend an act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea;"

A bill (S. 2071) for the relief of Mary A. Swift;

A joint resolution (S. R. 165) relating to the St. Johns River, Florida, and bar at the entrance to the river;

A bill (S. 3481) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Joplin, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (S. 3492) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy;

A bill (S. 3493) for the relief of Pay Clerk Charles Blake, United States Navy;

A bill (S. 1604) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2588) for the relief of George S. Simon; and

A bill (S. 1178) conveying to Rafael Seguro, of Iberia Parish, La., the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in said parish of Iberia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of an extract from the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, entitled "Preliminary report on artesian waters of a portion of the Dakotas," for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The message also announced that the President of the Senate had appointed Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. LODGE tellers on the part of the Senate, authorized by the concurrent resolution relating to the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate, having reconsidered the bill (returned by the President without his approval) (H. R. 9469) to constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas and to provide for the holding of terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court, had repassed the same, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

RELIEF OF FARMERS AND TRUCKMEN.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I present for consideration the Senate joint resolution (S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the ordinance of the city of Washington approved May 27, 1857, requiring the clerks of the several markets to lay off and mark in convenient spaces the several pavements adjoining and bordering on the market squares, which spaces may be used for the sale or exposure for sale of vegetables or other country produce, and extending the powers of the clerks to 15 feet of the streets, measuring from the curb line on which said squares front, shall apply to the south front of Center Market, and to the clerk of the said market; that the law passed in 1871 by the District legislative assembly exempting from license "persons bringing marketing to the District" shall be and remain in full force; and that the said ordinance and law shall be applicable to farmers and truckmen raising produce doing business on the north side of B street north along the south front of the Center Market in said city of Washington.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report which accompanies the joint resolution.

The report (by Mr. SHANNON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the resolution (S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, after carefully considering the same, beg leave to submit the following report:

The original cause of this measure was the action taken by the District Commissioners in November, 1895, when they sought, by an order issued to the superintendent of the Metropolitan police, to forcibly remove the farmers, gardeners, and truckmen from the north side of B street north, between Seventh and Ninth streets west—a place where on market days they had always been allowed to bring "produce of their own raising" and station their wagons, backing them up to the curb, and making sales from both the wagons and the sidewalk.

This privilege the farmers have always enjoyed without paying any license fee whatever, upon the theory, evidently, that they were rendering to the community an important public service and should be encouraged in it.

The custom, it appears, is an ancient one, having existed since the establishment of public markets in this city; that is, since the beginning of the present century. Being, therefore, so to speak, a part of the common law of the District, it is not surprising that the farmers themselves had come to look upon it as somewhat in the nature of a vested right, and that they vigorously resisted the attempt of the Commissioners to deprive them of it.

As numerously signed petitions by the patrons of the market and the farmers and gardeners had been presented to the Commissioners, asking that the order be rescinded, and as the Commissioners in their report made no reference to these petitions, your committee thought it advisable to give the farmers a special hearing, at which they might freely express their sentiments in regard to the matter. Of this they eagerly availed themselves, and 75 persons of both sexes attended the hearing, giving their testimony as to the old-time privilege they had so long enjoyed, and protesting against the order of removal, which they claimed would, if carried out, practically deprive them "of their only means of livelihood." Representatives of the Washington Market Company were also heard, since they claimed that the threatened order of eviction would impair the completeness of their market, and so injure, if it did not seriously cripple, their business. The Commissioners also were heard several times upon the subject, and their statements and explanations had full and careful consideration.

Thus, after a thorough investigation and inquiry into the matter, your committee are of the opinion that the action of the Commissioners in ordering the removal of the farmers and gardeners from the place where they had been so long and so satisfactorily serving their patrons, and with so much advantage to themselves, was not only unjust, but very impolitic and ill advised.

The committee therefore report favorably S. R. 148, for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C., and unanimously recommend that it do pass, with, however, the following amendments:

Strike out, in line 12, the words "the clerk of the said market," and insert in lieu thereof the words "a clerk who may be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Amend by adding at the end of the resolution the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as extending the boundaries of the grounds occupied by the Washington Market Company beyond the limits defined in the charter of said company, or as affecting the issues in any pending litigation in the courts of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That no charge, license fee, or assessment of any kind for occupancy of a space on a market day and the evening previous thereto shall be levied upon any farmer or producer of vegetables or provisions bringing the same to market, except 10 cents for a single team and 15 cents for a double team; nor shall any fine or fee be assessed or punishment imposed upon any farmer or producer for selling at any time within the District during market hours any article of provision or vegetables grown or produced by him and sound and fit for use."

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, the views of the committee, expressed in the report just read, of the action taken by the Commissioners in November, 1895, do not materially differ from those expressed in the report of the Senate District Committee. Their report concludes as follows:

After full and careful consideration of the subject, and a visit of a subcommittee, during market hours, to the locality in question, your committee do not deem it necessary to discuss the matters more especially in litigation between the District and the Washington Market Company. From the evidence before us we are satisfied that the usage in the District of Columbia of allowing farmers and gardeners selling produce of their own raising to sell without license or license fee during market hours, at or near the markets, from wagons backed up to the sidewalks, is too ancient to be disturbed without better reasons than appear in the present case; also, that there is no existing necessity for the expulsion of these classes from B street north, between Seventh and Ninth streets. We recommend, therefore, the adoption by Congress of the accompanying joint resolution, S. R. 148, "For the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C."

While thus in accord with the general purpose and object of the resolution, and after hearing the District Commissioners several times upon the subject, since they claimed that no hearing had been granted them elsewhere, your committee were of opinion that the resolution ought to be amended.

For instance, the ordinance of 1857, referred to in the resolution, was passed at a time when every market in this city was a public market. Of the seven markets now existing three only are public markets, and the other four are private markets—the Washington Market being one of them. It was considered of doubtful propriety to give to the clerk of a private company or corporation powers that were originally intended to be executed only by an official of the municipality. Hence the amendment suggested in line 12 makes that portion of the ordinance cited apply to "a clerk who may be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

One of the provisos also suggested by way of amendment appeared necessary to your committee in view of the litigation now pending between the Washington Market Company and the District, while another proviso is suggested as a further protection to the farmers, by which they shall only be charged a reasonable fee, to cover the necessary expense of policing, sweeping, and cleaning up the sidewalk and street after the market is closed.

With these explanations of the report submitted by the committee, I now move the previous question.

Mr. BLUE. I trust that that will not be done until a further opportunity for debate is given.

Mr. SHANNON. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BLUE. I desire to be heard a moment on this matter.

Mr. SHANNON. I yield to my friend from Kansas.

Mr. BLUE. This seems to be an effort, Mr. Speaker, to restore a very ancient custom in this city. The Commissioners have been clothed with power to make and execute proper sanitary regulations within the limits of this capital. Under a wise discretion they made such regulations as have been adopted by them for the better protection of the streets and the cleanliness of the city. This resolution is intended to override the regulations of the Commissioners, simply because there existed here an ancient and hoary custom which gave to them who produced vegetables and other wares of that character the right to stall room which occupied a part of the streets of the city. As I recall this matter, when it was before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, the custom carried with it a demand for the farmers to clear away the débris that was left by them in the sale of their wares at their expense. Out of that regulation had grown up an abuse to the effect that they used some of the parties who were required to clean the market place in the discharge of a duty that had been thrust upon them, and paid those employees of the District for that duty of also clearing the streets which they had left littered and obstructed.

The whole business is irregular. It is unworthy of the sanitary conditions of this city, and it appears to me that this resolution is simply in the interest of those who desire to sell their wares upon the streets. It has sprung from the plea that they have made and the prayer that they have offered urging that this abuse might be restored. I am not able to gather from this resolution as I have heard it read whether these parties are required to pay into the Treasury the fees that are charged or not. If they are not, they should be placed there, if the resolution is to become a law. But I trust the House, interested in the cleanliness, sanitary condition, and welfare of this great city, will vote down this proposition. If those producers of these commodities desire to sell them upon the market, that is all right. Let them be sold under civilized, modernized, and liberalized regulations. There are too many things already in the laws of the District that have no other claim on earth than that they are hoary and ancient. There are too many relics of bygone days in the laws upon the statutes of this District. I am told that there are some laws upon the statute books of this District that fix the fines in some misdemeanors to be paid in tobacco. This is a new enactment to revive a custom as old and as effete as that.

Mr. MILNES. It is a custom that now prevails and always has prevailed.

Mr. BLUE. It is a custom, as I understand, which does not now prevail and has not prevailed since the regulations made by the Commissioners. If it does prevail, what is the necessity of this resolution?

Mr. MILNES. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas if he does not know now that these people have been allowed to stand there all this time, do stand there now, and have from time immemorial?

Mr. BLUE. I do not so understand it. They have been removed to another place. If such is not the case, Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for the resolution, so far as they are concerned, and the only purpose it can have is to extend still further this ancient custom to other portions of the sidewalk. I may be mistaken, but if I remember the action of the Commissioners correctly, they had taken steps to abrogate this custom, and if that has not been done, it certainly is what I understood to be the wish of the Commissioners at the time when they were before the Subcommittee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILNES. That is correct.

Mr. BLUE. This resolution appears to be chiefly in the interest of the revival and extension of an effete custom in this great metropolitan city, in which we all delight so much and take so much pride, and I trust that we shall not permit the revival of a custom that belongs to a past condition of things when this country was half slave and half free.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I confess that I have not been able so far to understand just what this joint resolution proposes, and I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas what is intended to be accomplished by it.

Mr. BLUE. I have merely heard it read here, but from what I gathered from the reading I understand that this resolution attempts to override a regulation adopted by the Commissioners and to revive and extend this effete custom to other portions of the sidewalk north of Market Square.

Mr. STEELE. May I ask the gentleman a question for information? My understanding is that the Commissioners have sought to move the people who bring in country products to another part of the city, so that persons going to the city market will be compelled to go also to the place, the ultimate object being to establish another market on a Government reservation. That is my understanding, and I shall be glad if the gentleman from Kansas will tell me whether it is correct.

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHANNON] has charge of this matter, and can probably answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I will make a brief statement in reply to my friend the gentleman from Kansas, who says that this joint resolution proposes the revival of a hoary custom that has too long prevailed and should in his opinion be discontinued. I would say to the gentleman that the joint resolution does not propose the revival of any custom whatever; it simply provides for the continuance of a custom which has prevailed in this city during the whole of the present century, and under the conditions and for the reasons mentioned in the report of the committee.

Mr. BLUE. Is it not true that the Commissioners have sought to regulate that custom, and that you are seeking by this joint resolution to modify their regulation?

Mr. SHANNON. I was about to state briefly the history of this matter. On November 2, 1895, the Commissioners of the District issued an order to the superintendent of the Metropolitan police instructing him to move the farmers and truckmen from the place which they had always occupied to another point farther west. Immediately there were protests from the farmers and others, and finally, upon the opening of Congress in December, 1895, the matter was referred to this House by a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON]. The Committee on the District of Columbia were instructed to investigate the matter and to report by bill or otherwise. At the same time a similar resolution was introduced in another place and a report by resolution made thereon. That resolution is now under consideration by the House.

The conclusion reached by our committee after hearing the Commissioners, the farmers, and all parties who were in any wise interested in the matter, was that the order for the removal of the farmers which the Commissioners had issued was unjust, impolitic, and ill advised. The same conclusion was reached by the Senate committee, and I may say that there is nothing in what the gentleman from Kansas has said that would seem to affect that point.

As to the necessity of securing proper sanitary conditions, the proviso that the committee propose to insert at the close of the joint resolution by way of amendment is for the very purpose of securing such conditions, and therefore, for my part, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to discover on what ground the opposition of the gentleman from Kansas is based. We simply propose to continue a state of things which has existed here for years to the manifest advantage of the farmers and of the patrons of the market, and which the District Commissioners themselves now have no disposition to alter, for they distinctly stated before your committee that, in view of what had occurred, they should not insist upon the enforcement of their order. The joint resolution, therefore, seems to be satisfactory to all concerned, and I trust the gentleman will withdraw his opposition.

Mr. BLUE. Is it not true that this business obstructs the streets at certain hours of the day?

Mr. SHANNON. No, sir. A subcommittee was appointed to go there and inquire into that very question, and there is no obstruction or congestion of traffic at these hours, none whatever, because the work of the market is over at 11 o'clock. This whole measure refers to the south front of Center Market, on B street north, between Seventh and Ninth, a locality where the farmers have been accustomed to go almost from time immemorial to sell their products. As I have already said, the custom has existed for a great many years, and it has also the sanction of the laws of 1871. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this House ought to be the last body to do anything to restrict these small farmers, gardeners, and truckmen in their opportunities for gaining a livelihood, especially in this city.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Is it not a fact that if these farmers were driven to seek places in the market house, it would be impossible for them to find accommodations there because the market house is now crowded to its utmost capacity? And does not this licensing of farmers to sell on the outside lessen the pressure for accommodations in the market house?

Mr. SHANNON. I will say in reply to my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that this does not refer to the interior of the market; that is occupied by stalls.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So I understand; but the gentleman does not understand me. My proposition is that if these farmers were driven from the places they now occupy, they would have no other places to go and would practically be driven out altogether.

Mr. SHANNON. Quite right; but the proposition was to remove them to another point farther west.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact that the rentals of market stalls are so high that many dealers who wish to dispose of the products of their farms in a small way would find it impossible to pay those rentals if they were required to do so?

Mr. SHANNON. Those are very just considerations.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me say that while the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHANNON] has given some light upon certain phases of this matter, I am utterly at a loss to understand why this resolution is necessary if the law of 1871, in connection with the custom which has grown up, is ample. If that is the fact, this resolution would seem to be mere surplusage, unless the Commissioners still refuse to rescind the order they have heretofore made in reference to this business. If the object of this resolution is to abrogate the order of the Commissioners and direct their action in this matter, it appears to me it would be much wiser to leave the responsibility with the men who have been chosen to perform the executive duty of governing the city than it would be for Congress to undertake to regulate matters about which members in general can know but little. What the gentleman states proves either that there is some need for a resolution overriding the action of the Commissioners, or that there is no sufficient law upon the statute books to authorize what it is sought to accomplish. In either view, the matter is one appealing to this House for examination and careful consideration.

I have not gathered from the statements of the gentleman from New York where these people now sell their wares. I have a recollection of what the evidence before the Appropriations Committee showed.

The argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] falls short of the mark. If the disposition of these wares by these people in the manner in which it has been carried on is not in the interest of good government and proper sanitary regulations—if it disturbs the proper arrangements, the good government, the cleanliness of this city—then it is no argument to come here after the existence of this custom for nearly a century and say that the stalls in the market house cost too much, and that the sidewalks, the approaches to the market house, should be devoted to the use of people who pay practically no license for such use, and whose operations are prejudicial to the welfare, the cleanliness, the beauty, and the good government of the city.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to indorse the position of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE]. I do not know whether the Commissioners are right in respect to this controversy, or whether the Committee on the District of Columbia is right. But I believe it to be unwise, and a mistake on the part of Congress at any time to attempt to exercise administrative functions. And that is what is proposed by this legislation.

Now, it may be that the judgment of the Committee on the District of Columbia and of this body is superior to that of the Commissioners of the District; but the fact is that by this resolution, as stated so ably by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE], you are raising solely and purely an administrative question—a question which ought to be left to the discretion of the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HULICK. Is it not the special object of this bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Commissioners as to the appointment of the clerk who shall assign these places to these farmers?

Mr. DOCKERY. That brings up another issue.

Mr. HULICK. That is the point; there is where the trouble has originated between the farmers and the market people.

Mr. DOCKERY. That brings me to the second proposition. I am obliged to the gentleman for the interruption. Possibly the committee is right; I do not say that it is not right; but by the enactment of this legislation we not only seek to exercise administrative functions, but also to create a new office.

Mr. HULICK. No, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. You provide for a clerk to be appointed by the Commissioners; and my friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has an amendment prepared, I understand, which he will offer in due time—I see by the smile on his face that he is intending to do so——

Mr. SHAFROTH. The gentleman is right.

Mr. DOCKERY. An amendment providing that the salary of this official shall not exceed $1,000. So that the proposition is that we shall perform executive functions and at the same time create a new office, the salary of which, if the amendment of my friend from Colorado prevails, will not exceed $1,000.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman is mistaken. It is not proposed to create any new office. The duty to be performed by this officer may not occupy more than one hour in the whole year. The Commissioners can designate a policeman or any other existing officer to perform the duty.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the chairman of the committee [Mr. BABCOCK] is right, I am clearly in error. It seems to me that a new office was to be created, and I knew that my friend from Colorado had an amendment prepared to limit the salary. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains, and that is really the grave defect, that Congress by joint resolution is going to take upon itself executive duties which ought not to be done. We ought not, Mr. Speaker, to do that even if we knew that we were absolutely right and the Commissioners were in error, because the remedy lies with the executive department and not with the Congress.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, a moment more and I will yield the floor.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Will my colleague allow me a moment?

Mr. BLUE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether it is not a strange condition of affairs that my colleague from Kansas [Mr. BLUE], who is a lawyer, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who is a doctor, should assume to instruct the House as to what ought to be done to the farmers surrounding the capital? Now, I have understood that there were a great many farmers of the farmers in Washington, but this is the first time I have ever understood that there were real, genuine farmers here, and I submit to the House if there are any such, they should have every advantage that is possible accorded to them, and if they wish to use the streets around the capital for the display of their products, they ought to be permitted to do so. As a representative of the farmers, I claim and insist that this bill should go through.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to my colleague from Kansas for the suggestion that he has made in reference to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and myself. Coming from the great metropolis of Kansas City, Kans., a Representative of the State of Kansas, and being a lawyer, he is doubtless qualified to speak on this subject. [Laughter.]

But I have no other purpose, so far as I am individually concerned, than simply to see that this legislation is thoroughly understood by the House. The gentleman from Missouri has well stated the condition. He is right, in my judgment, about it, as he is so many times when it comes to questions of this character.

I wish to say further, Mr. Speaker, in this connection, that the very fact that this is a resolution, instead of a bill, is in itself an argument going in the direction of indicating that it was thought best to give instructions by this character of legislation rather than the establishment of some permanent provision of law.

Mr. BABCOCK. You think it is suspicious on its face?

Mr. BLUE. Well, the gentleman suggests—and he is from the committee that framed the resolution—that it is suspicious on its face. Perhaps he ought to know; it comes from his committee. I have not said so; I have not charged anything of the kind. I did not say that it was a suspicious circumstance. But it is the usual form of legislation, if it is designed to redress a wrong or establish something that is good law for the upholding of right, or providing for a condition with reference to which the legislative power must take action—the regular way for the accomplishment of such legislation is by a bill, and not by a resolution, unless there is some hasty and inconsiderate action to be taken.

Mr. MILNES. What is the difference and effect between a joint resolution and a bill?

Mr. BLUE. Oh, I understand that the effect of their operation is the same. Practically the same thing is accomplished. But it has been the practice, as I understand it—I am new here and not so old as some other gentlemen in this business—but it has been the practice where a matter is to be accomplished in the way of a direction to an executive officer, in the correction of an irregularity, in the expression of a legislative policy, or something of that character, to accomplish it largely by resolution and not take the regular and orderly way of a bill. Of course, a resolution has the same effect, but it is not the practical way of legislation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLUE. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I simply want to derive information in reference to this matter, and I know the gentleman from Kansas has given it very much consideration.

Mr. BLUE. No; I have not given it full consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I supposed that I was asking a question of some one who had information. But, as I understand it, in the resolution, or under the legislation heretofore adopted in 1857, an ordinance was passed permitting hucksters, so called—small farmers—to bring vegetables, chickens, and produce of various kinds to the city for sale, and they were permitted to occupy certain defined spaces, and parts of the sidewalks in some places, for the display of their wares, for which privilege they paid 10 cents for a single wagon and 15 cents for a double, and were allowed to sell their wares on the sidewalk. The people who desired to purchase direct from the farmers could do so, while at the same time the farmer paid only this small amount, paying no market tax, did not have to hire a stall, and did not even have to use a counter. In 1895 the Commissioners made an order to vacate the sidewalks, driving the farmers away from the stands they had theretofore been allowed to occupy. The object of this provision is simply to restore the old conditions, as I understand it.

Mr. BLUE. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who suggested that I had given a great deal of consideration to this matter, I can only say that I have about the same opportunity as other members on the floor to give these questions careful study. We all know what our opportunities in that regard are—that they are very limited when the measures do not come from the committees upon which we serve. I have sought to understand the questions that are presented here in the restricted opportunity given.

I have somewhat the same view as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as he has stated it, and I think it will be found that that at least is the essence of the measure, going a little further and directing the Commissioners to do that which will bring back this antiquated condition after the Commissioners have taken certain steps, as I stated, to change or modify it for the better government of the city, and that is all I have to say with reference to the matter.

I am simply speaking upon this question from the standpoint of what I regard to be proper legislation. I think it ought to be very carefully considered, and that we ought to have appropriate legislation in a matter involving so much, as far as the interests of the city of Washington are concerned.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I have heard the discussion concerning this bill, but it seems to me that there is one important element which has not been considered. I take it that the real intention of this bill is to provide competition in the sale of market produce, so that the people who desire to buy food can have an opportunity of purchasing the same from the farmers direct, and so that the farmers can sell their products without having to pay a large amount for stall rent. In other words, it authorizes the purchase of food from the producer direct, and thus saves the large amount that usually goes to the middleman.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the bill is clearly in the interest of the people. The farmer raises his produce and brings it here, and he has a right to have a market for it. The privilege of selling from his wagon on the street adjoining the Center Market has been enjoyed by him for years. For a limited time he has been deprived of that right. It is a matter of justice to him that the right should be restored, and a matter of economy to the people of the District. There can not be any question of sanitary regulation in this matter. I am informed by the Committee on the District of Columbia that the Commissioners are perfectly content with this bill. It is true that it requires a clerk to provide where these farmers' wagons shall stand, but that, as has been explained by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHANNON], is simply to prevent the clerk of the market, which is a private market, from placing these farmers in a disadvantageous position.

Mr. BABCOCK. This simply takes from the clerks of the private market the control over a certain space in the street and puts it under the control of a clerk to be designated by the District Commissioners.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The present arrangement has a tendency to place these farmers at a disadvantage in the location which they occupy. For that reason, some disinterested person, to be designated by the Commissioners, is the proper one to do it. It seems to me that it is nothing but fairness and justice to these farmers, and at the same time it is a proper measure of economy in the interest of the people who buy food. It prevents combinations to raise prices in the market, and the bill should be passed.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then you think this resolution is favorable to the farmers?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, I do.

Mr. McCORMICK. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] should be the last man on the floor to interfere with the time-honored rights of the farmers of this District and vicinity. I had no idea that he, the representative of farmers, would take such a position at any time. He talks about an "antiquated practice." It may be ancient, but, at the same time, it is honorable and advantageous to the people. Nor is it so much out of fashion as the gentleman thinks, for in the city of New York and in the city of Brooklyn it is to-day largely followed, and the custom is liked by the people. The farmers are permitted to come into the cities with their wagons and to sell in certain streets, and to stay for a number of hours. Many people in those cities are in the habit of buying directly from the wagons, and the practice is greatly favored, as the vegetables and fruits are bought at first hands, without paying tribute to middlemen. Let the honest and worthy farmers have the privileges in Washington which they have so long enjoyed and seldom, if ever, abused.

Mr. SHANNON. And in all the great cities of the Union the farmers have the same consideration.

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes; in all the great as well as in the smaller cities of the United States. Hundreds of wagons enter New York City and Brooklyn from my own district, and are at the markets early in the morning. They furnish supplies which are known to be fresh and good in every particular.

This practice of selling from wagons has been followed in this District for a great many years, as the gentleman says; but that is no reason why it should be abolished now. It is a good custom, and the District Commissioners have found that the people do not want it prohibited. The farmers occupy the streets for but a few hours, and do no harm. If the streets are soiled in any way, they can be quickly cleaned. I repeat, the coming of the farmers is a good thing and in the interest of the people of Washington.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, there are many more friends of the farmer here who desire to speak on the question, and perhaps they should be allowed to be heard before the discussion is closed. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of my friend from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] makes me think of a minstrel show which I once attended. One of the minstrels came out in the rôle of a lecturer, and proposed to give an address on "Civil-service reform and the currency." After announcing his subject he said that he perceived that the audience did not know anything about the subject, and he did not either, and therefore he would bring his address to a close. [Laughter.] Now, my friend from Kansas [Mr. BLUE], when asked if he had considered this question, said he had not, and I was fain to come to the same conclusion after listening to his speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, we have in this city the strangest anomaly known in all human history. Here is a city of 250,000 or 300,000 inhabitants, the capital of a great Republic, and yet the inhabitants of this city do not have the opportunity to vote, and they have no voice in the management of their own municipal affairs.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] says this matter should not be considered by Congress, because it is a matter of administration.

Now, suppose the Commissioners of the District should fail to administer the affairs of this District as the people wish them to do. For instance, suppose there is such a lax enforcement of the liquor law [laughter] in this city that practically it amounts to free rum, and the residents of this city, who have the welfare of this city at heart, who have the welfare of young men, reformed men, who are exposed to temptation, at heart, are not satisfied with the administration of the Commissioners of the District, what do they do then? They come here to Congress and to the Committee of the District of Columbia and ask that this law may be made more stringent; they ask that the law may be made operative, and may be so amended as to be enforced, and thus protect the people of this city from the awful saloon curse.

Well, now, the Commissioners of this District have made an odious and offensive ruling in regard to these market men, and I am for the market men, because, for one thing, they do bring fresh butter here. They do not make prepared soap grease, called oleomargarine, and bring it into competition with butter. As they have no other method of redress, I submit it is unfair, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] suggests, to deny them the privilege of coming before the different Congresses and the committee of this House to make known their wrongs and grievances and to ask for redress, as they have in this matter. I submit there ought to be some different provision for the government of this city, and I hope that Congress and wise statesmanship will in the fullness of time devise a different and better method for the government of this city than asking Congress to sit here as a common council or a board of aldermen two days in the month for this one city of many in this great country, neglecting the affairs of 60,000,000 people for the little affair of regulating city matters, such as the markets of the city. It is beneath the dignity of the House of Representatives to legislate upon such trivial and unimportant matters. But while existing conditions prevail, while these people have no other redress, no other appeal from the decisions of the Commissioners of the District, I submit that it is unfair to deny to these men this relief. The Commissioners have made an odious rule or regulation in regard to these farmers. It is a grievance to them, and it is injurious to the people of the District, who desire competition, in order, as my friend from the other side said, that they may buy as cheaply as possible; and so I trust the House will see its way clear to adopt this very just and reasonable bill which has been brought in here by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHANNON. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, and the joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF POISONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10038) to regulate the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person except a registered pharmacist, or under the personal supervision of such, from and after the passage of this act, to retail any poisons enumerated in Schedules A and B, as follows, to wit:

Schedule A: Arsenic and its preparations, corrosive sublimate, white precipitate, red precipitate, biniodide of mercury, cyanide of potassium, hydrocyanic acid, strychnine, and all other poisonous vegetable alkaloids and their salts; essential oil of bitter almonds, opium and its preparations, except paregoric when sold in quantities of not more than 1 ounce.

Schedule B: Aconite, belladonna, colchicum, conium, nux vomica, henbane, savin, ergot, cotton root, cantharides, creosote, digitalis, and their pharmaceutical preparations, croton oil, chloroform, chloral hydrate, sulphate of zinc, mineral acids, carbolic acid, and oxalic acid.

Nor without first labeling the vial, box, or paper containing the poison with its name, the word "poison," and the name and place of business of the seller. Nor shall it be lawful for any registered pharmacist, or his assistants, to sell or deliver any poison enumerated in Schedules A and B, unless, upon due inquiry, it be found that the purchaser is aware of its poisonous character, and represents that it is to be used for a legitimate purpose. Nor shall it be lawful for any registered pharmacist or his assistants to sell any poison included in Schedule A without first placing said poison in a three-cornered container, and before delivering the same to the purchaser, causing an entry to be made in a book kept for that purpose, stating the date of the sale, the name and address of the purchaser, the name and quantity of the poison sold, the purpose for which it is represented by the purchaser to be required, and the name of the dispenser; such book to be always open for inspection by the proper authorities, and to be preserved for reference for at least five years. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the dispensing of poisons upon the prescriptions of practitioners of medicine, except as provided for in the following clause: That it shall not be lawful for a registered pharmacist or his assistants to compound or dispense more than once a prescription containing opium, morphine, cocaine, or chloral, when such prescription has written or printed upon its face the words "not to be repeated."

SEC. 2. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $5 nor more than $100, in the discretion of the court, for each and every offense.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the report which accompanies this bill.

The report (by Mr. SHANNON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10038) to regulate the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, respectfully submit the following report:

The chief object of this bill is to limit to registered pharmacies the sale of poisons, and thus prohibit their sale by irresponsible parties to the detriment of the public at large, especially of innocent people, and also prohibit their sale to evil and designing persons for improper uses.

In requiring that the poisons shall be sold in a three-cornered container the aim is to distinguish the poison in such a manner as will protect the handler from making mistakes in administering the same to innocent people, which so frequently happens. The mere grasp of a three-cornered container will warn the handler of the poisonous and dangerous, if not fatal, properties of these drugs, and so protect him from the impending mistake.

It is thought that while this simple device may not always prevent mistakes, it will accomplish much toward that result.

Another object of the bill relates to the protection of innocent people from the formation of the opium, morphine, cocaine, and chloral habits. Sometimes a person who has experienced the beneficial effects of these drugs, as prescribed by physicians, will seek to have the prescription repeated without the consent or knowledge of the physician, and without any suspicion on the part of the pharmacist that it is to be used improperly; and this method will be continued—the prescription being repeated again and again without the suspicion or knowledge of either pharmacist or physician—until the habit has been so firmly established that it can no longer be concealed and the person has become the incurable victim of some one of these habits.

While it is not contended that this legislation will arrest the formation of such habits, it is believed that it will go far in protecting many well-meaning and innocent people from such danger.

As House bill 10038 thus appears to be a measure solely in the interest of good health and good morals, the committee, after careful consideration, favorably report the same, and unanimously recommend that it do pass with the following amendments:

In section 1, line 21, strike out the words "and place of business of the seller" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the owner of the pharmacy and the address of the place where sold."

In section 1, line 27, strike out the word "reistered" and insert in lieu thereof the word "registered."

In section 1, line 38, strike out the words "practitioners of medicine" and insert in lieu thereof the words "persons authorized by law to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia."

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, the main features of this bill, and almost the very words in which it is expressed, are similar to those in section 13 of the existing law, approved June 15, 1878, regulating the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia. Where the bill proposes to change the present law is in requiring that certain poisons shall be dispensed in characteristic containers, so as to prevent the disastrous effects which too often result from an accidental administration of poisons.

The bill also forbids the unauthorized repetition of prescriptions containing certain specified drugs, with a view to diminishing somewhat existing facilities for acquiring the drug habit.

As the bill originated with the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and is approved by the District Commissioners, the committee recommend its passage by the House, with the amendments suggested in the report.

The first amendment seeks to indicate with more definiteness the authorized seller of poisons; the second amendment is merely the correction of a typographical error, and the third amendment is suggested in view of a possible doubt as to who is a practitioner of medicine in the District of Columbia, inasmuch as certain persons authorized by law to practice medicine are not actively engaged in their profession.

With this explanation of the bill, I will now move the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to make an inquiry or suggestion regarding the measure.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry, and possibly to offer an amendment. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how, under Schedule B, the ordinary homeopathic pharmacists of the city can sell their medicines that have heretofore been sold without harm to anybody and without criticism? Has the gentleman given attention to that matter?

Mr. SHANNON. I will have to ask the gentleman to specify more definitely what he refers to in the schedule?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I refer principally to aconite, belladonna, colchicum, and nux vomica. These are well-known homeopathic remedies, and are sold either in liquid or as absorbed by pellets, and are generally used by the community. In the quantities in which they are sold they are not in the least degree poisonous; on the other hand, they are held by hundreds of people to be the best kind of medicine, and it does not seem that the bill should include such sales as those which I have mentioned. I wish to ask the gentleman what his construction of the bill is in that particular?

Mr. SHANNON. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that while it may seem to him important that the exceptions he mentions be incorporated in the bill, it is proper and right for me to state for the information of the House that this bill came before the committee with the distinct understanding that it had been carefully prepared by competent parties; that it originated with the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and had the approval and recommendation of the District Commissioners. Under these circumstances your committee have given it as careful consideration as we could. We regret, of course, that the membership of our committee does not include gentlemen who, like the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS], have the advantage of special professional knowledge of the subject, but I can assure the gentleman from New Hampshire that the bill has had the careful consideration and approval of the medical profession of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, it is unquestionably true that this bill is recommended by one school of medicine in the District of Columbia, and so far as it applies to these preparations as used by that old school—as it is popularly known—I presume no one objects to the provisions of the bill. But there is another school of medicine which should not be forgotten in this legislation, and in order to cure the defect which I have suggested I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I think the gentleman in charge of the bill will accept.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "medicine," in line 2, page 2, insert "all articles enumerated in Schedule B, under the strength of 'mother tinctures,' as usually prepared and sold in any homeopathic pharmacy."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, that amendment is entirely useless. I desire to inform the gentleman from New Hampshire that, as I understand, the Homeopathic Society have fully considered both measures that are brought before the House by the committee to-day, and are not only in favor of this bill, but also of the pharmacy bill. We have taken their amendments as suggested and added them to the pharmacy bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Well, is there any objection to this amendment?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Why?

Mr. BABCOCK. I object to any amendment where a bill has been carefully prepared by the health officer, agreed upon by the Medical Society, and approved by the Commissioners of the District and by the committee. There are two branches of homeopaths here, who do not agree with each other, and——

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Who have been before the committee representing the Homeopathic Society?

Mr. BABCOCK. I can not tell the gentleman's name, but he represented the society, and we took his amendment and incorporated it in the pharmacy bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, after a measure has been carefully prepared—has been gone over and approved by the medical societies, by the health officer of the District, by the Commissioners of the District, and by the committee—I think it is very dangerous to accept any amendment that is offered in this way unless there is a great and obvious necessity for it.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Reddington, representing the Homeopathic Society, agreed to the bill.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill, and the very point raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire was made to me. A few days ago I went to medical gentlemen who aided me in the preparation of a bill, and they told me that they had the hearty cooperation of the Homeopathic Society. My information is that at every step in the progress of this bill the homeopathic physicians of this District have been consulted as much as those who belong to other schools of medicine.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But, Mr. Speaker, there are two grades of strength of these preparations—the grade known to the United States Pharmacopœia and the grade of strength known and used by the homeopathists. There is no distinction made between them in this bill, and the purpose of the amendment I have offered is to permit these homeopathic pharmacies, against whom there never has been any complaint, and probably never will be, in relation to the sale of the articles included in Schedule B, to go on doing business as they do it now. Certainly there can be no objection to the amendment, either as matter of fact or as matter of principle, and it is not necessary that this bill should pass without amendment, while it is necessary that it should be so perfect that it will not interfere with the rights of these people who are doing business in the District of Columbia or of those who wish to deal with the pharmacies where these inoffensive articles are sold. The amendment is offered in entire good faith, for the purpose of making the bill better and stronger than it now is, and to protect the rights of people who do not believe in the old school of medicine.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment is entirely unnecessary, and I hope it will be voted down. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, it was rejected.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, on page 2, line 18, after the words "oxalic acid," I move to amend by adding "any prescription containing over 2 per cent of alcohol."

Mr. RICHARDSON. What per cent?

Mr. MORSE. Two per cent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would not that include cologne?

Mr. MORSE. Wait till you hear me. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, chemistry ranks alcohol among the deadly poisons. This bill recites the names of poisons. Why should it not include alcohol? Alcohol is the fruitful source of pauperism, crime, insanity, disease, and death. It is a matter susceptible of proof that in our country, in consequence of the use of the poison alcohol, over 60,000 men annually go down to drunkards' graves. Five hundred ghastly suicides are annually committed in consequence of alcohol; 500 murders are annually committed; 100,000 men crowd our almshouses and swell our taxes in consequence of alcohol. I do not see, therefore, any reason why the committee should not consent to my amendment.

Alcohol is a poisonous, dangerous drink. It is the devil's own drink. Of all the engines the devil ever invented to destroy the bodies and souls of men and the peace of families, alcohol beats them all. I believe not a few of the appalling suicides which have recently taken place under the very shadow of this Capitol are directly traceable to the poison known as alcohol in some one of its various forms. Surely, Mr. Chairman, alcohol is a poison, a deadly poison, a brain poison that turns man into a beast and a brute, a criminal, a murderer, and a suicide. It should be labeled "Poison!" and its sale interdicted. It should certainly be included in this bill with these other poisons.

Without occupying further the time of the House, I trust the committee will consent to my amendment and include in the bill preparations containing over 2 per cent of alcohol.

Mr. DALZELL. Does not almost everything that comes out of a drug store in the shape of tinctures, etc., contain at least 2 per cent of alcohol? The amendment would cover, for instance, as a gentleman here suggests, cologne.

Mr. PITNEY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] by adding at the end of it these words: "And any of the compound known as MORSE'S RISING SUN STOVE POLISH." [Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the amendment to the amendment. Seriously, my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] knows that it is against the parliamentary usage of any deliberative body on the face of the earth to refer to the private business of any member. I submit therefore that the amendment offered by the gentleman——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it any more out of order to refer to the private business of manufacturing stove polish than to that of manufacturing and selling alcohol?

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is not serious in his inquiry. [Laughter.] I am sure that my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] on a little reflection will see that, seriously, his amendment is in exceeding bad taste; and certainly it is very improper for a gentleman to offer such an amendment on this floor. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman from New Jersey that I do not think he needs any blacking. I think, in the light of this amendment, he had better spend his money for whitewash and soap. [Laughter.]

Mr. PITNEY. I really think the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to accept this amendment. I presume that the compound named in my amendment is poisonous. And whether it is so or not, it is an article of manufacture the sale of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is largely interested in promoting; and he ought to give me a commission upon all sales of the article in the District of Columbia which may be made by reason of the advertisement which this amendment will give.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. As various evils are spoken of as following the sale of alcoholic liquor, does the gentleman think that that line of business has anything to do with creating the people called "cranks?"

Mr. PITNEY. I do not know what the effect of stove polish may be.

Mr. SHANNON. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PITNEY. In view of the sensitive nature of my friend from Massachusetts, I will withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey will be withdrawn.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MORSE, it was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendments of the committee, they were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADULTERATION OF FOODS AND DRUGS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 9842) relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no person shall, within the District of Columbia, by himself or by his servant or agent, or as the servant or agent of any other person, sell, exchange, or deliver, or have in his custody or possession with the intent to sell or exchange, or expose or offer for sale or exchange, any article of food or drug which is adulterated within the meaning of this act; and the courts shall construe the provisions of this act liberally, so as to prevent the mischief intended to be guarded against.

SEC. 2. That the term "drug," as used in this act, shall include all medicines for external or internal use, antiseptics, disinfectants, and cosmetics. The term "food," as used herein, shall include confectionery, condiments, and all articles used for food or drink by man.

SEC. 3. That an article shall be deemed to be adulterated within the meaning of this act:

(a) In the case of drugs: First, if, when sold under or by a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity laid down therein; second, if, when sold under or by a name not recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, but which is found in some other pharmacopœia or other standard work or materia medica, it differs from the strength, quality, or purity laid down in such work; third, if, when sold as a patented medicine, compounded drug, or mixture, it is not composed of all of the ingredients advertised or printed or written on the bottles, wrappers, or labels of or on or with the patented medicine, compounded drug, or mixture.

(b) In the case of food: First, if any substance or substances have been mixed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength; second, if an inferior or cheaper substance or substances have been substituted wholly or in part for it; third, if any valuable constituent has been wholly or in part abstracted from it; fourth, if it is an imitation of or is sold under the name of another article; fifth, if it consists wholly or in part of a deceased, decomposed, putrid, or rotten animal or vegetable substance, whether manufactured or not; sixth, if it is colored, coated, polished, or powdered whereby damage is concealed, or if it is made to appear better or of greater value than it really is; seventh, if it contains any added poisonous ingredient or any ingredient which may render it injurious to the health of a person consuming it; eighth, in the case of milk, if it contains less than 3½ per cent of fat, less than 9 per cent of solids not fat, and contains more than 87½ per cent of water; ninth, in the case of butter or cheese, if it is not made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt; the butter, if it contains more than 12 per cent of water, more than 5 per cent of salt, and less than 83 per cent of fat; tenth, in the case of coffee, if it is not composed entirely of the seed of the Caffea arabica; eleventh, in the case of lard, if it is not made exclusively from the rendered fat of the hog; twelfth, in the case of tea, if it is not composed entirely of the genuine leaf of the tea plant not exhausted; thirteenth, in the case of all kinds of vinegar, if it contains an acidity equivalent to the presence of less than 4 per cent of absolute acetic acid; and cider vinegar, if it is not made from the legitimate product of pure apple juice and contains less than 1.5 per cent of total solids; fourteenth, in the case of cider, if it is not made from the legitimate product of pure apple juice and free from salicylic acid or other preservatives; fifteenth, in the case of glucose, if it contains less than five one-hundredths per cent of ash; sixteenth, in the case of flour, if it is not composed entirely of ground wheat, free from bran, perfectly white or having a faint yellow tinge, and contains more than six-tenths per cent of ash, less than 10.5 per cent of albuminoids, and more than 12 per cent of moisture; seventeenth, in the case of bread, if there is any addition of alum, sulphate of copper, borax, or sulphate of zinc, and contains more than 31 per cent of moisture, more than 2 per cent of ash, and less than 6.25 per cent of albuminoids; eighteenth, in the case of olive oil, if it is not made exclusively from the olive berry (Olea europœa), and its specific gravity at 15.5° centigrade (60° Fahrenheit), "actual density" to be not more than .917 nor less than .914: Provided, That an offense shall not be deemed to be committed under this section in the following cases, that is to say, first, where the order calls for an article of food or drug inferior to such standard or where such difference is made known or so appears to the purchaser at the time of such sale; second, where the article of food or drug is mixed with any matter or ingredient not injurious to health and not intended fraudulently to increase its bulk, weight, or measure or conceal its inferior quality if at the time such article is delivered to the purchaser it is made known to him that such article of food or drug is so mixed; third, where the standard of strength or purity concerning any drug has been raised since the issue of the last edition of the United States Pharmacopœia.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the health officer of the District of Columbia, under the direction of the Commissioners of said District, to adopt such measures as may be necessary to facilitate the enforcement hereof, and prepare rules and regulations with regard to the proper method of collecting and examining drugs and articles of food in said District.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of every inspector to investigate a complaint for a violation of any of the provisions of this act on the information of any person who lays before him satisfactory evidence by which to substantiate such complaint.

SEC. 6. That every person offering for sale or delivering to any purchaser any drug or article of food included in the provisions of this act shall furnish to any analyst or other officer or agent of the health department who shall apply to him for the purpose and shall tender him the value of the same a sample sufficient for the purpose of analysis of any such drug or article of food which is in his possession.

SEC. 7. That in all cases where any drug or article of food shall be taken as a sample to be examined and analyzed, such analysis shall be done in the presence of the owner or his agent, if he so requests, and the person making the analysis shall reserve a portion of the sample, which shall be sealed, and in case of a complaint the reserved portion alleged to be adulterated shall, upon application, be delivered to the defendant or his attorney.

SEC. 8. That no person shall hinder, obstruct, or in any way interfere with any inspector, analyst, or other person of the health department in the performance of his duty in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District, on information brought in the name of the District of Columbia, and on its behalf, and any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100.

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

Section 2, line 5, add after the word "man," the following:
"and if there be more than one quality of any article of food or drug known by the same name the best quality thereof shall be furnished to the purchaser, unless he otherwise requests at the time of making such purchase, or unless he be notified at such time of the inferior quality of the article delivered."

Section 3, line 6, strike out the word "therein" and insert "in the edition thereof at the time official."

Section 3, line 10, strike out the words "in such work" and insert "therein."

Section 3, line 14, after the word "mixture," insert the words:
"Provided, That if the defendant in any prosecution in respect to the sale of any such patented medicine, compounded drug, or mixture shall prove to the satisfaction of the court that he had purchased the article in question as the same in nature, substance, and quality as that demanded of him by the purchaser, and with a written warranty to that effect; that he had no reason to believe at the time when he sold it that the article was otherwise; and that he sold it in the same state as when he purchased it, he shall be discharged from the prosecution."

Section 3, line 48, strike out the word "and" and insert "in the case of wines and fruit juices, if not made from the legitimate product of the pure fruit, as represented, and in the case of cider, wines, fruit juices, and malt liquors, if not."

Section 3, line 52, after the word "of" and before "flour," insert "wheaten."

Section 3, line 57, insert after the word "bread" and before "if" "(which term shall be held to mean wheaten bread unless otherwise specified)."

Section 7, lines 3 and 4, strike out the following: "such analyses shall be done in the presence of the owner or his agent, if he so requests and."

Section 7, line 6, insert after the word "sealed" and before the word "and" the following: "for a period of thirty days from the time of taking such sample."

Section 10, line 2, after the word "repealed," insert:
"Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as modifying or repealing any of the provisions of 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886, or of 'An act defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese,' approved June 6, 1896."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill may, perhaps, be considered the most important in the interest of the public health that has yet been presented by the District Committee. It relates wholly to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia. It is of vital importance to the public health. It seeks to prevent the perpetration of frauds, and at the same time to protect the honest producer and dealer as well as the consumer. The bill may be considered as amendatory or supplementary to "An act to prevent the manufacture or sale of adulterated foods or drugs in the District of Columbia," approved March 12, 1888. The sections of that act chiefly affected by this bill are those numbered, respectively, 11, 12, and 16. Section 11 reads as follows:

That the analysis provided for in this act shall be under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Under the authority of this section the Secretary of the Treasury has promulgated certain regulations concerning the analysis of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia, which are set forth at length in "Series 7, No. 15, Revised," entitled "Regulations concerning analysis of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia." Under these regulations the responsibility of making the analysis is placed upon the health department by this language:

The chemist of the health department of the District of Columbia, or such person as shall be lawfully acting in that capacity, is hereby designated as the analyst contemplated by section 12 of this act.

But neither by the act itself nor by the regulations is any particular officer charged with the enforcement of the legal obligations established by the act. Any private party may, as a matter of course, make the complaint and set the machinery of the law in motion; but by reason of the complications surrounding the law prosecutions, I am informed, by private parties have—I think I am warranted in saying—not been made to any extent under that law.

Now, to what extent the adulteration of food and drugs is practiced in this District it is impossible for me to state definitely from the fact that owing to the comparatively small force of men at the command of the health department it has been impossible to make the necessary investigations to determine that fact. All of the investigations have thus far been made under the supervision of the health officer. The present law has been practically a dead letter until quite recently, when investigations were commenced under the supervision of the health department, and the investigations were made, I am informed, by Mr. J. D. Hurd, the District chemist. A part of the results attained by him I will refer to now for the information of the House. Of 37 samples of vinegar which were examined by him, 24 were found to be adulterated, the percentage of adulteration being 64.8; evaporated cream, 2 samples examined, both of them adulterated 100 per cent; olive oil, 10 samples tested, 6 adulterated to the extent of 60 per cent; precipitated sulphur, 8 samples, 2 adulterated to the extent of 25 per cent; cream of tartar, 7 samples examined, 2 adulterated 28.5 per cent; cider, 2 samples, both adulterated up to 100 per cent; mince meat, 1 sample only analyzed, adulterated 100 per cent; smoked sausage, 1 sample examined, adulterated to the extent of 100 per cent.

I am advised that out of 40 grocery stores 36 were selling acetic vinegar, even below the standard of that kind, for pure cider vinegar. Fifteen stores were found to be selling cotton-seed oil for pure olive oil, and of 4 candy stores 4 were selling a composition of brick dust for chocolate drops.

Now, under the prosecutions instituted by the health officer the court, I am informed, disregarded the so-called "standard" laid down by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, supposed to have been established, as I have stated, and in these cases determined the question of adulteration solely on the testimony submitted. I can not state definitely to the House the reason given by the court. But I believe I am correct in stating that the making of the regulations, so far as they were intended to fix the standard, was held to be unauthorized by the court.

This bill, as will be seen, definitely fixes the standard of strength and purity of drugs and other articles. It also fixes the responsibility for its enforcement, which the present act does not do, by placing the same upon the health officer of the District of Columbia instead of on the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as is the case under the present law. Its provisions, I may say, will not inflict, as far as I am informed, any hardships upon those engaged in the sale of food or drugs, since the standard to be fixed follows very closely those previously established by the Secretary of the Treasury under the present law. Where there is a variation, the standard has almost invariably been reduced, there being but few cases where the standard has been raised.

Now, in the case of food articles, patent medicines, drugs, etc., an effort has been made to prevent, as far as practicable, the common practice of selling an article under a fraudulent name. Provision is made, however, to enable the dealer who is found to have been innocently made a party to the fraud to protect himself against liability.

It is represented that a large majority of the States have laws in conformity with the one here suggested; but Ohio, New York, and Massachusetts were taken as examples, and I am informed by the authorities that this proposed law follows very closely the Massachusetts law, which is considered by the authorities to be as nearly perfect as possible.

I believe this legislation to be absolutely essential in the interests of the public health and for the protection of the people against all species of fraud in which the people are powerless to protect themselves. It is more important and dangerous because of its results, not alone in the loss of money, but the possible loss of life or great injury to the public health.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has been unqualifiedly indorsed by the prominent physicians of the District of Columbia. I have here the indorsement of Dr. George M. Kober, in a personal letter to myself, the chairman of the committee on public health, Civic Center (Good Government Club), District of Columbia. He says:

1819 Q STREET NW., Washington, D. C., February 5, 1897.

HONORED SIR: I have carefully examined H. R. 9842, a bill relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia, and trust that this timely and much-needed measure in the interest of public health may become a law.

Respectfully,

GEO. M. KOBER, M. D.,
Chairman Committee on Public Health,
Civic Center (Good Government Club).

HON. GEORGE M. CURTIS,
Committee on the District of Columbia.

I also have a personal letter from Dr. Samuel C. Busey, who signs himself president of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, indorsing this bill in very strong terms. I will consume a little of the time of the House in reading this letter, so that it may appear in the RECORD.

Dr. Busey says:

1545 I STREET NW., Washington, D. C., February 6, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of bill H. R. 9842, entitled a bill relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia. I have given the bill careful consideration, and it meets with my unqualified approval, because no single measure relating to the District of Columbia during the present session of Congress will go further toward promoting public health than this bill in question. After a professional experience of over forty-eight years, I am rejoiced to think that the importance of pure drugs is about to be emphasized by an effective law, and it needs no argument of mine to indicate that any legislation which is aimed to correct the adulteration of food would be incomplete without dealing with the question of adulterated drugs, as there is more danger to life and health from the latter than from adulterated food.

Every practitioner of medicine must recall instances of untoward effects of certain drugs due to poisonous impurities, and every physician has time and again been disappointed in his remedial efforts, simply because some unscrupulous dealer has placed an adulterated article on the market. In spite of these sad experiences, it is a fact that the first movement toward securing comprehensive legislation against the adulteration of foods and drugs in this country was made only in 1881 by three States, viz, New Jersey, New York, and Michigan, followed in 1882 by the States of Massachusetts and Louisiana. Other States have doubtless enacted similar laws, but the limited time at my disposal will not permit a more extended search for authorities. The actual work in the enforcement of the law in the State of New York commenced in the summer of 1882. Of the first 119 samples of food submitted to the public analyst of the State board of health for examination 50 were found adulterated, while of 75 samples of drugs, 32 were adulterated. In December, 1882, prosecutions were commenced in 24 cases for violations of the law. These included 17 cases for selling cream of tartar adulterated with terra alba, starch, etc., to the extent of from 37 per cent to 95 per cent; 2 cases of coffee adulterations with chicory and burnt pease; 4 cases of mustard adulterations with from 40 per cent to 71 per cent of flour, and 1 of precipitated sulphur containing 30 per cent of sulphate of lime.

The records of the chemical laboratory of the health department of this city reveals the existence of fraudulent adulterations of many articles of food, and the records of the police court show the total inadequacy of the present ordinance on the subject.

Assuming that the vital importance of pure and unadulterated drugs of a given standard of strength and quality is self-evident, I beg to refer to section 3, line 25, and believe the instances of prosecutions cited from the State of New York sufficiently illustrate the importance of a law which prevents the admixture with food stuff of any substance so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength. The necessity for the second, third, and fourth provisions, in lines 27 to 31, is apparent from the fact that ground coffee as found in the stores is not infrequently sophisticated with the grounds of coffee previously used, the roasted root of chicory, acorns, rye or barley, carrots, sunflower seeds, caramel. Artificial coffee beans have been made of clay, dough, or extract of chicory colored to imitate the natural bean, while tea is adulterated with leaves of various plants, such as willow and poplar leaves or tea leaves which have already been exhausted, and then dried, mixed with gum, and rolled up. The fifth provision, on line 31, so far as it relates to putrid or rotten animal or vegetable substance needs no special comment. The use of partially decayed food has often been the cause of serious or fatal illness. Meat and fish in a partial state of putrefaction are especially injurious and have given rise to wholesale forms of poisoning, especially after public gatherings. At a musical festival in Switzerland, of 700 participants 444 were suddenly attacked by violent gastroenteric and nervous symptoms; 10 of the patients died. The illness was traced to roast veal which had been kept in a warm place for two days after roasting, and was in a state of partial decomposition. The severe attacks of vomiting and diarrhea frequently observed as having occurred after eating sausages, canned meats, and some kinds of mince pies are due to the action of a poison evolved during the decomposition of animal matter.

Meat may be unfit for food because the animals suffered at the time of death from splenic fever, pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis in its advanced stages, and septic diseases, while certain parasites, as the trichina spiralis, echinococcus, and cysticercus, which frequently infest the flesh of animals, may give rise to serious or even fatal diseases in persons consuming such meat, unless the life of the parasite is first destroyed by boiling or roasting. There is also good ground for believing that the flesh of animals which have been drugged with arsenic or antimony may contain a sufficient amount to prove injurious to the consumer.

In regard to the sixth and seventh provisions, line 34, the addition of picric acid and chrome yellow as coloring matter in vermicelli has been repeatedly demonstrated. Pickles are frequently colored with copper, all of which are injurious, and some of the aniline dyes used for coloring confectionery have been known to contain arsenic.

In the case of milk, line 39, a lower standard than 3½ per cent of fat and 9 per cent of solids not fat would virtually legalize dishonest manipulations of the milk, or place a premium on indifferent care of the animals. The introduction of the "cream separators" affords an opportunity of removing almost the whole of the fat from milk, and the sophisticator, who is generally the middleman, not satisfied with his immense margin, has thus the power of reducing its cream to the lowest salable standard without exposing himself to any such risk of detection as would attend the process of "watering," a process by which the total nonfatty solids might be so reduced as to lead to the detection of the fraud.

In reference to butter, it is a well-known fact that this article of food is frequently adulterated by the addition of an excess of salt water or buttermilk, or by starch, flour, lard, suet, or oleomargarine, and while this sophistication does not injure the health, it certainly affects the palate and pocketbook of the consumer.

The most common forms of adulterations of coffee and tea have already been referred to.

The nutritive value of lard is of course lowered by the addition of water, salt, or foreign fats, which are sometimes substituted in part for that of the hog.

The most common form of adulteration in vinegar is the substitution of sulphuric acid for acetic acid, which is injurious from its tendency to form insoluble sulphates in the body.

A good-sized volume might be written on the sophistication of wines and fruit juices which are not the legitimate product of the pure fruit as represented; logwood, blackberries, elderberries, and bilberries are the chief coloring matters used in imitation wines. Lime salts, tannin, alum, lead, and copper are among the injurious ingredients employed, while of course many wines are manufactured from distilled spirits; and the bulk of imported port wine is stated to be a mixture of true port, Marsala, Bordeaux, and Cape wines with brandy. Inferior kinds are adulterated with the coloring matters referred to, or with catechu, prune juice, and a little sandalwood and alum.

The manufacture of artificial fruit juices and flavoring extracts has become a refined art, and is of course a fraudulent procedure, not wholly free from danger, since many poisonous substances are used.

In reference to beer, I respectfully recommend that the following amendment be inserted in section 3, line 62, after the word "preservatives:" "And in the case of malt liquors, if not free from picric acid, cocculus indicus, colchicine, colocynth, aloes, and wormwood." These dangerous adulterants are used sometimes as substitutes for hops.

In the case of wheaten flour, line 65, it is known that flour has been adulterated with inferior grades, such as potato, beans, pease, oats, maize, etc. These additions are, however, quite uncommon. The dangers from damaged flour, especially to the digestive tract, have been recognized for a long time. Dr. Mann, in his Medical Sketches, enumerates among the active causes which led to the production of disease among the troops along the Niagara frontier during the war of 1812, "bad bread." "It was notorious," he remarks,

"that the bread on the Niagara was made of damaged flour, such as was either not nutritious or absolutely deleterious." It was believed, also, that the flour contained in some instances an earthy substance, like plaster of paris.

Sometimes alum, sulphate of copper, zinc, or borax are added by the baker to prevent the formation of butyric and lactic acids, and to impart a fine white color to the bread; these articles tend to produce dyspepsia and constipation, and their addition is fraught with danger to the public health.

The most common adulterant for olive oil is the addition of other vegetable oils, notably of cotton-seed oil.

Respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL C. BUSEY, M. D.,
President Medical Society District of Columbia.

Hon. GEORGE M. CURTIS,
Chairman Subcommittee, House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the leading pharmacists of the District of Columbia also indorse this bill. I have in my hand a letter from the health officer, also indorsing the bill in the strongest possible terms. The bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and it is presented to this House with the unanimous approval of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. On page 9, line 1, I read:

And the courts shall construe the provisions of this act liberally, so as to prevent the mischief intended to be guarded against.

I should like to have an explanation as to the kind of construction that language calls for.

Mr. DOCKERY. A liberal construction.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is it to be construed liberally against the person accused or in his favor?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The language may not be as clear as it should be——

Mr. RICHARDSON. In the interest of the law.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. It is intended to impress, as far as possible, the importance of the enforcement of the act, so as to prevent the mischief intended to be guarded against. If the language is imperfect, why the committee will cheerfully consent to an amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is a rule of criminal law that a statute shall be construed liberally toward the accused. Here is a bill which provides that certain things shall be misdemeanors and punished accordingly, and yet the evident intent of the bill is that this liberal construction which is spoken of shall be contrary to the ordinary construction of courts of justice. I suggest that this needs amendment, and there I leave it with the committee.

Again, on page 2, section 3, under subdivision a, we read:

First, if, when sold under or by a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity laid down in the edition thereof at the time official.

These bills, all of them, have good purposes in view, but they seem to have been hastily drawn, or drawn by people who did not consider all the branches of the subjects with which they deal. That statement in itself would be a good statement, if it were not for the fact that there are medicines or drugs named in that pharmacopœia which are also named in others that are standard in their several schools of medicine. For instance, take aconite, podophyllin, and so forth, which are mentioned in the United States Pharmacopœia, and which are sold in the old-school drug stores in a different strength from that which they are sold in homeopathic pharmacies. Yet under this act, if a regularly registered homeopathic pharmacist shall sell the articles which he has in store, conforming literally to the requirements of his pharmacopœia, made by those who are recognized throughout the United States of America as honest dealers, that person will be subject to the penalties of this act; yet I presume that it was not the intention of the committee that that should be so. With that suggestion, I leave that to the committee.

Again, on page 3, under subsection b, referring to food and not drugs, lines 31, 32, and so forth, I find the following:

Fifth, if it consists wholly or in part of a deceased, decomposed, putrid, or rotten animal or vegetable substance, whether manufactured or not.

I presume it is known by the members of this committee and this House that a great many things are manufactured from exactly such substances which come out absolutely pure, sweet, and wholesome. Take glycerin, for example. Under this bill if the person selling it can not show that the pure glycerin which he sells was manufactured from articles not enumerated herein, he will be subject to punishment for a misdemeanor, although he is selling a perfectly honest commercial product. The same would be true of ammonia and other articles which I will not take the time of the House to enumerate. A little further along the bill contains provisions which might subject a perfectly innocent party to many penalties; for instance, in the sale of oysters, lobsters, and a great many common products. We find in the case of milk that the seller is liable to punishment if it is found that the milk which he sells contains—

Less than 3½ per cent of fat, less than 9 per cent of solids not fat, and contains more than 87½ per cent of water.

Now, it is known to everyone in this House who is at all familiar with the subject that no two cows give the same quality of milk, and that at different seasons of the year the quality varies. Now, how is an honest farmer or dealer to know whether the milk that he is selling on any particular day contains more or less than 87½ per cent of water?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I shall be very glad.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I will state, for the information of the gentleman from New Hampshire as well as a number of members upon the floor, that the standards enumerated in this bill are copied very largely from the standards submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, and wherever a change has been made, with very few exceptions, that standard has been lowered.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That is probable——

Mr. MILNES. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from New Hampshire to the fact that the standard of milk is precisely as it is now fixed, and there is no change made by the bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The United States standard?

Mr. MILNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But so far as that standard is concerned, the gentleman from Iowa has informed us that it is not enforced, and because it is not enforced by any law of Congress the difficulties which I have pointed out have not been practically met. The same is true as to lines 44, 45, and 46, in principle, so far as butter is concerned, where it is provided that there shall "not be more than 5 per cent of salt in any butter," and any person having more than 5 per cent of salt in the butter shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. There are many people who require and desire a much greater quantity of salt than others, and if a farmer should provide, for those who are not satisfied with 5 per cent, 5½ per cent of salt on a special order, would he be guilty of a misdemeanor?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He can salt his own butter.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And I presume the gentleman from Tennessee, who now makes the suggestion that a man should salt his own butter, would be very glad to go into that process in his own family. If so, we leave him to do it. Then, down on the same page, 4, in the lines of the amendment 58 and 59—

And in the case of wines and fruit juices, if not made from the legitimate product of the pure fruit as represented—and in the case of cider, wines, fruit juices and malt liquors, if not free from salicylic acid or other preservatives.

That is good so far—

I wish some gentleman here would inform me whether a man can sell his cider if he has happened to put into a barrel half a dozen pounds of fresh beef or raisins to preserve it, or if it had been preserved by the well-known process of making it into champagne cider? In the last lines of the same page—

In the case of wheaten flour, if it is not composed entirely of ground wheat, free from bran, perfectly white or having a faint yellow tinge—

And yet there can be pure flour when its shade is more than a faint yellow tinge, and as sweet and as nutritious as if it had only a faint tinge. I could give a number of other like instances in the bill, which I will not consume the time of the House to point out. But I wish to ask the attention of the committee in charge of this bill especially to sections 4 and 5, on page 6:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the health officer of the District of Columbia, etc.

Then in section 5 the provision is made—

That it shall be the duty of every inspector to investigate a complaint for a violation of any of the provisions of this act on the information of any person who lays before him satisfactory evidence by which to substantiate such complaint.

I wish to submit to the committee that as the execution of this bill is in the hands of the health officer, that it should be made the duty of the health officer and not the inspector, who is a subordinate of the health officer, to investigate all complaints, and that the inspector should investigate them only upon the instruction of the health officer. Therefore I would suggest that the words "every inspector," in line 1 of section 5, be stricken out and the words "health officer" be inserted. With these suggestions, while I might make many others in the same line, I leave the bill to the committee and the House.

[Mr. MCCORMICK addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in response to two or three of the questions propounded by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER], referring to a letter from the health officer of the District of Columbia, which I hold in my hand, I find the following:

In the case of milk, the standard, while somewhat lower than that fixed by the regulations—

Meaning the regulations established by the Secretary of the Treasury—

is slightly above that fixed by the act to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1895. The standard fixed by that law was, however, the lowest recognized in this country. The other changes in the standards are as follows: In the case of vinegar the required equivalent of acetic acid is reduced from 5 per cent to 4 per cent, and in the case of fruit juices, including cider and glucose, standards are established, none being fixed by the preceding law or regulations.

In the matter of bread, referred to by the gentleman from New Hampshire, the health officer says:

In the case of bread, the permissible ash is increased from 1½ to 2 per cent.

So it will be seen that there are very few variations from the standards previously established by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote upon the amendments to the bill.

The amendments were adopted.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In section 3, line 62, after the word "preservatives," insert "and in the case of malt liquors if not free from picric acid, cocculus indicus, colchicine, colocynth, aloes, and wormwood."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I desire to offer also another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In section 5, page 6, line 1, strike out the words "of every inspector" and insert "the health officer."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ABANDONED STREET RAILWAY TRACKS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10121) to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the track or tracks or any part thereof of any street railway company in the District of Columbia shall not have been used for railway purposes for a period of three months, the Commissioners of said District may thereupon notify such company to remove said unused tracks and to place the street in good condition; and if such company shall neglect or refuse to remove said tracks after such notice, the president of said company shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to a fine of $5 for each and every day during which said tracks are permitted to remain upon the street or streets; and after such tracks shall have been removed, in accordance with the requirements of this act, such railroad company shall repair the roadway upon which such tracks were situated upon notice issued by the Engineer Commissioner of said District so to do; and if such company shall neglect or refuse to make such repairs after notice as aforesaid, said company shall be liable to a further fine of $5 for each and every day during which said roadway shall remain out of repair, as herein provided, which fine shall be recovered in the police court of said District, in the name of said District, as other fines and penalties are now recovered in said court.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by myself. Its object is to compel the street railway companies to remove abandoned tracks. It is a fact that in certain portions of the city some of the old lines have tracks which they have not used for years, and remain there an eyesore and a nuisance. This bill requires these tracks to be removed from the streets within a certain time after reasonable notice, and requires the companies to put the streets back in good condition, failing which they are to be subject to a fine of $10 a day while the tracks remain unremoved or the streets continue in disorder. That is all there is in the bill, and I think it ought to pass.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, after the committee amendments are disposed of, I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia were adopted.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It is intended to be a new section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. Any street railway company in the District of Columbia refusing or neglecting to use any part of its existing lines or tracks shall, upon the direction of one Commissioner of the District of Columbia, immediately renew its service thereon, and for every day after such notification or direction that any such company shall fail to render proper service on said lines or tracks, it shall be subject to a fine of $50, to be recovered in the police court in the name of the District of Columbia, as other fines and penalties are now recovered in said court.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The bill as reported by the committeee covers one horn of the dilemma. It provides that tracks which are not in use may by permission of the Commissioners be torn up. My amendment, which I proposed to insert as section 2, requires the companies to execute service upon their existing tracks, if the Commissioners shall so direct. That is all there is of it. Under the provisions of the bill, if the tracks are not used for a period of three months they may be torn up under the direction of the Commissioners. My amendment provides, on the other hand, that if any company wishing to get rid of a part of its line shall for that purpose cease to render service, the Commissioners, if in their opinion it is not proper the line should be discontinued, may order the company to continue service upon that line. I do not apprehend that anyone will object to the amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to object to the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire; but it practically nullifies the provision which the committee has reported, and it is not germane to anything in the bill. The object of the bill, as reported, is to compel railroad companies to take up tracks that are not used and to repair or put in order the streets. It provides that when railroad tracks have been abandoned for three months the Commissioners may give notice that those tracks be removed, and within sixty days from such notice the tracks must be removed and the streets repaired or put in order, under a penalty of $10 per day for failure to comply with this requirement. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire practically nullifies the bill and says that these companies must operate cars upon tracks that have been constructed or pay a fine. If the gentleman wants that provision of law adopted, he should offer a bill for that purpose. It is an entirely different subject from the present bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Without this amendment, what power have the Commissioners to compel any of these companies to run their cars over lines which may be necessary for the comfort and convenience of the people of the District?

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill provides practically a method of forfeiting the charter of a company if it fails to comply with its obligations. No one knows better than the gentleman from New Hampshire where these abandoned tracks are and the constant annoyance they cause in the streets in different parts of the city.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The gentleman from Wisconsin is laboring under a misapprehension. I do not in the slightest degree object to the bill so far as it goes. My objection is that it does not go far enough; that it does not empower the Commissioners, when they believe that service should be rendered over any particular line of roads, to compel the company to render that service. That is all there is of it. If there are tracks anywhere for which there is no necessity and which in the opinion of the Commissioners should be taken up, there is nothing in my amendment to compel service on those tracks. But if a company should, for the purpose of getting rid of a certain portion of its line, abandon service on it for a period of three months or any other considerable period, then it is proper and just that the Commissioners be authorized to compel that company to render service if such service be required in the public interest.

It should not be assumed that the street railway companies of the District of Columbia exist simply for their own benefit. They should be required to render service for the accommodation of the people of the District and persons visiting here. They are created for the public service, not solely for private gain. My amendment, as an additional section, goes exactly to that point, and provides that these companies shall render service on whatever portion of their lines, in the opinion of the Commissioners, the public convenience may require such service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope a vote will be taken. This amendment ought to be voted down. It amounts almost to making null and void the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND GETTYSBURG RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9470) to incorporate the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the bill, when

Mr. BABCOCK said: Mr. Speaker, this is quite a lengthy bill, and when I have stated its object I think consent will be granted that the reading of it be dispensed with. This bill provides merely for the construction of a line of road from Washington to Gettysburg. The legislatures of Maryland and Pennsylvania have already chartered this line. The company asks simply to come into the District of Columbia and make connections on the borders of the District with the systems here. That is all there is in this proposed legislation. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be read by title only. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read by title.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, there are some amendments recommended by the District Commissioners and also one recommended by the District Committee. Those recommended by the Commissioners are all embodied in the bill. We ask that the amendments be voted upon in gross.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we shall have the amendments read.

I feel that I am subject to criticism for permitting this bill to be considered without being read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We accept the gentleman's apology.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a precedent which I hope will not be followed.

Mr. BABCOCK. The bill is in the usual form of street railway bills.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read at length.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if he is not trying to make regulations and grant concessions in respect to a railroad and its operations outside of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We do not undertake anything of the kind. This applies only to that part of the road that is in the District.

Mr. TERRY. It gives the right of way through the national cemetery at Gettysburg, as I understand the reading of the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; that is proposed to be stricken out of the bill by an amendment recommended by the Commissioners.

Mr. TERRY. I wish the gentleman would give us some explanation of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill, I will state to the gentleman, did provide, originally, that the line should run through the national cemetery at Gettysburg. But that has been stricken out, and it stops now at the line of the national park. That, of course, is in the State of Pennsylvania, and that part of the road is chartered by the State.

Mr. TERRY. But this is the District of Columbia, and this road, as I understand it, is wholly outside of the District.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is partly in the District, but that part of it that is in Pennsylvania and Maryland is, of course, wholly outside of the District, and is chartered by those States.

Mr. TERRY. Then, what jurisdiction have you over it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. None on the earth, and we do not assume any.

I was going on to say that this road has a charter from the State of Pennsylvania, or so much of it as lies within the limits of that State, and also a charter from Maryland for so much as lies in the State of Maryland. Now, so much as we charter lies in the District of Columbia solely and simply. It is only a short distance, and enables this Pennsylvania and Maryland road, after striking the District of Columbia, to make proper connections here with existing lines.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does it not permit this company to locate its line through, or in, the national park at Gettysburg?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; that was in the bill originally, but has been stricken out on the recommendation of the Commissioners.

Mr. HEPBURN. What provision is there with reference to overhead trolleys in the District?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No change in existing law. They are not allowed to use the overhead trolley within the city limits. They are allowed to connect outside of the city limits with lines using overhead wires.

Mr. BABCOCK. This is simply in accordance with the charters heretofore granted to such roads.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This bill, I will state, is indorsed by the District Commissioners, and is drawn in accordance with their suggestions, and so far as we know there is no objection to it. It is intended to afford a short and expeditious route to the national park at Gettysburg, and a very cheap one, as I understand the rates are to be very much lower than by the ordinary railroad lines. It is nearly an air line, for with the use of the overhead trolleys they shorten the distance very materially. I ask a vote.

The question being taken on the amendments recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 40, noes 11.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raises the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count the House. [After having counted the House.] One hundred and sixty members are present; not a quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. By the rules of the House the yeas and nays are ordered, and at the same time a call of the House is directed.

The Clerk will call the roll, and members will answer either for or against the proposition, and those who desire simply to be recorded without voting will answer "present."

The Chair desires to say to the members of the House that under this rule the doors of the House are closed, and the doorkeepers and Sergeant-at-Arms are not authorized, neither the one nor the other, to allow members to go out. Of course every convenience will be afforded to members, but all are expected to remain in the House or in the adjoining rooms.

The Chair has deemed it proper to make this statement, as there seems to have been some misunderstanding or misapprehension heretofore as to the operation of the rule. Those members here are expected to remain, and those who are not here are expected to be brought in.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; and there were—yeas 132, nays 52, not voting 171; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a conference report on the immigration bill.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7864) "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States" having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment, and agree to the House bill as follows: Strike out the first section all after the words "admission to the United States the following" and insert:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age, similarly qualified and capable, and a wife or minor child not so able to read and write may accompany or be sent for and come to join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable."

Strike out the present section 2 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from view, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the words printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing. If in any case from any unavoidable cause the foregoing slips are not at hand for use, the inspection officers shall carefully and thoroughly test the ability of the immigrant to read and write, using the most appropriate and available means at their command; and shall state fully in writing the reasons why the slips are lacking, and describe the substitute method adopted for testing the ability of the immigrant."

Strike out the present section 3 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act."

Strike out the present sections 4, 5, and 6 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs, or to boatmen or guides on the lakes and rivers on the northern border of the United States.

"SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by any alien or citizen shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That all persons convicted of a violation of section 4 of this act shall be deported to the country whence they came.

"SEC. 7. That notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries under such rules and regulations as he may provide."

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba, during the continuance of the present disorders there, who have heretofore been inhabitants of that island."

Strike out the present section 7 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1897."

L. DANFORD,
STANYARNE WILSON,
Managers of the Conference on the part of the House.

H. C. LODGE,
WM. E. CHANDLER,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers of the Conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DANFORD. I ask that the conference report be printed in the RECORD, and that it lie over until to-morrow morning, when I shall call it up, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the matter be set down for the action of the House immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there a statement accompanying this report?

Mr. DANFORD. There is no written statement.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not object to the printing of the report——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no written statement accompanying the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall waive that point, however, with the understanding that a written statement shall be submitted in the morning, when this matter is called up. Otherwise I shall insist on the point of order.

Mr. DANFORD. I can have the statement ready in the morning.

Mr. DOCKERY. The rules require a written statement, and on an important matter like this the House ought to be advised.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make the point of order, and the report can be retained by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] and he can present it to-morrow morning.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD, if that course is taken, so that members can see it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the report of the conference committee be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the printing of the report, unless there is some statement, will not help the members very much. I should be glad to have it printed, if there were a statement with it.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the report shows just what the substitute is that is proposed, and if that can be printed in the RECORD, and then a statement presented to-morrow morning, I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. BAILEY. With that understanding, I shall be glad to have it printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF FARMERS AND MARKET MEN.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the joint resolution (H. Res. 189) for the relief of farmers, gardeners, and truckmen selling produce of their own raising in the markets of Washington, D. C., lie on the table. The House has to-day passed a Senate resolution relating to the same matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] asks that the joint resolution (H. Res. 189) lie upon the table, the House having already passed a similar Senate resolution. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3666) to remove doubts as to the power of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to provide for a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF LINES OF THE METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize an extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, which has come over from the Senate with Senate amendments, for the purpose of making a motion in regard to it.

The bill and Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the following conferees: The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BABCOCK; the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. CURTIS, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON.

WATER SUPPLY OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 10133.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the bill reported, Mr. Speaker, so that we may know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10133) to amend an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1882, be so amended as to enable the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War, in the exercise of the authority therein and hereby conferred on them, to obtain title for the United States, by right of eminent domain or otherwise, to all the water rights not now owned by the United States at and in the vicinity of Great Falls, on the Potomac River, the water so taken to be used for any and all public purposes, and also such lands as may be necessary for these purposes: Provided, That the property, water rights, and franchises of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company shall be exempt from the operation of this act. Within three months after the approval of this act the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General shall make a written statement, specifying by metes and bounds the lands and water rights, if any, they may deem necessary to take for the purposes of this act, excluding the lands already purchased by the United States and paid for, and shall file triplicate originals of said statement in the offices of the register of deeds for the District of Columbia, the county of Fairfax, Va., and the county of Montgomery, Md., respectively; and said filing of said statement shall be a taking for the United States by right of eminent domain of the lands and waters specified in said statement and of the water rights appertaining thereto, and shall vest the title to the same absolutely in the United States: Provided, That additional or amended written statements specifying any other lands and water rights deemed necessary to be taken under this act, not included or properly described in the statement above provided for, may be filed as aforesaid and with like effect at any time after said three months and within one year after the approval of this act. If said statement shall include any lands or water rights heretofore taken or attempted to be taken under authority of the act to which this is an amendment, or otherwise, and not heretofore paid for, the taking of the same shall be treated as done as aforesaid under this act.

SEC. 2. That if the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General shall agree with any of the owners of the land and water rights taken, or with any of the owners of any lands damaged by said taking, or by maintaining the Government dam at Great Falls at its present height, or by raising the dam to any height that may be deemed necessary for the future supply of the District of Columbia and other public purposes, upon the amount to be paid therefor, they shall give such owner their certificate, specifying the sum to which he is entitled.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General, in their discretion, may appoint three commissioners to appraise the value of the land and of the water and of the water rights taken, and of the damages to any property by reason of the taking, or by reason of maintaining said Government dam at its present height, or by reason of raising the dam to such height as may be necessary for the purpose of this act. In making the valuations the appraisers shall consider only the present values of the land and water rights, and shall not consider their values to the city of Washington for the uses for which they are taken or to which they may be applied under the provisions of this act. Said appraisement shall be for the guidance and information of the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General.

SEC. 4. That in case the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General shall not agree with any of the owners of the land and water rights taken, or with any of the owners of any land damaged by said taking, the Attorney-General shall, within six months after the filing of the statement provided for in section 1, cause proceedings to be commenced by petition in the name of the United States in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, making all such owners of land and water rights with whom no agreement has been made parties defendant, to determine the amount of compensation and damage to be paid such owners. Said court shall prescribe rules of procedure, conformable to the practice in like cases, necessary and proper to secure a speedy determination of the rights of the parties. Said court shall forthwith summon a jury to hear and determine, under its instruction, the amount of compensation and damage. The Attorney-General may appoint special counsel to represent the United States in such proceedings conspicuous for known familiarity with and experience in the laws regulating riparian rights and in hydraulics.

SEC. 5. That judgments shall be entered against the United States for the amount of compensation and damages ascertained, as provided in the preceding section; and as said lands, water rights, and waters are taken for the use of the District of Columbia, said judgments and the certificates that may be issued by the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General, provided for in section 2, together with the certificates of the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General for the costs and expenses incurred by them in executing the provisions of this act, and for the fees of the Commissioners provided for in section 3, and for the fees of special counsel, experts, and witnesses on behalf of the United States and for the jury shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as judgments against the District of Columbia are paid.

SEC. 6. That appeals may be taken by either party from the judgments rendered in such proceedings as are allowed in other cases in said court.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill already reported to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10133. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he ask to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think it is a very important proposition, and we ought to have the bill read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill, unless its reading is dispensed with by the action of the committee.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the committee for a few moments, and I will detain it a very short time.

This is a bill which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and not only of the House, but of the Senate. It has met the approval of the War Department, the District Commissioners, and all who have considered the subject. It is, Mr. Chairman, I think, the most important piece of legislation that has been reported to the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Committee on the District of Columbia. It provides for the acquisition by the Government of all the rights at Great Falls that are not now owned by the Government.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Right there, will the gentleman state what rights the Government owns and what relative right, as compared to the whole right that is involved here, is owned by individuals?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand, so nearly as it can be reached without judicial inquiry, that the Government owns a one-half interest in a large portion of the territory there and the Butler estate the other half. The rights of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company really cut but a very little figure as far as power is concerned, as in most cases the Government owns an undivided interest in a strip of land between the canal and the river. Now, as to this property——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask my colleague, if it does not interrupt him, if the part that is not owned by the Government is not owned by an incorporated company; therefore that incorporated company lays claim to so much of the water rights as do not belong to the Government itself?

Mr. BABCOCK. I so understand; and when I said Butler estate I should have said this incorporated company, because it represents the heirs of the Butler estate in that interest.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is what I was about to ask the gentleman—whether the Butler heirs had put their interest into an incorporated company.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then, if I understand the gentleman, this incorporated company is in the condition of asking more than it is appraised for?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What have they demanded for their rights?

Mr. BABCOCK. The only information in regard to the point as to what they demand for the property there was the refusal of an offer made by New York parties a short time ago of $275,000 in cash. This the incorporated company refused and made a counter proposition to accept $500,000.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What amount of land is involved?

Mr. BABCOCK. That can not be told until a survey is made by the Secretary of War as to how much the Government will require.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And this bill puts no limit upon the amount that the Secretary may acquire there?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. He may go out and under this bill obtain the watershed as well as the contiguous land.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will read a portion of the bill which explains that:

Within three months after the approval of this act the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General shall make a written statement, specifying by metes and bounds the lands and water rights, if any, they may deem necessary to take for the purposes of this act, excluding the lands already purchased by the United States and paid for, and shall file triplicate originals of said statement in the offices of the register of deeds for the District of Columbia, the county of Fairfax, Va., and the county of Montgomery, Md., respectively—

And so on.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does the Government lay no claim to the portion of the property that is claimed by this incorporated company?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think there is no question as to the rights of the incorporated company to certain parts of the territory. As to other parts, there is no question that the Government owns one-half and the company the other half; but there are different properties, different titles, coming from different sources. The property was not all originally under one patent.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it only riparian rights that are sought here, or does this company claim that, by any proceedings heretofore taken by it or by purchases made, it has come to own water rights independently of the riparian rights?

Mr. BABCOCK. The company claim water rights.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the Government concede that ownership of water rights on the part of the company?

Mr. BABCOCK. The Government has been paying a certain sum of money for water taken, and there are suits pending for additional water taken by the Government amounting to $773,000. Those suits are now before the Court of Claims, and are for water only.

Mr. McMILLIN. What has the Government paid heretofore for water?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am unable to state. The first estimate was based upon 25,000,000 gallons per day. Later an additional dam was built, which was expected to supply 50,000,000 gallons per day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has not the company sued the Government for the additional 25,000,000 gallons?

Mr. BABCOCK. I was just stating that fact. Suit is now pending before the Court of Claims for this additional 25,000,000 gallons per day. Later the Government raised the dam 2 or 3 feet, which the engineers estimate will give a capacity of 75,000,000 gallons per day, and upon that the company have filed suit for $272,000 damages, and are taking testimony.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the Government given this company the right to bring suit?

Mr. BABCOCK. The suits are now pending before the Court of Claims.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I wish that we could hear this colloquy that is going on so that we might understand this measure.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to have the report of the committee read, which explains this subject quite fully.

The report (by Mr. BABCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10133) to amend an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," have had the same under consideration, and your committee recommend unanimously that the bill do pass.

The bill entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," provides for the acquirement by the United States, by right of eminent domain or otherwise, of the title "to all the water rights at and in the vicinity of Great Falls, on the Potomac River, the water so taken to be used for any and all purposes, and also such land as may be necessary for these purposes."

The Great Falls are located about 14 miles above the city of Washington. In 2,000 feet the river falls 76 feet, as shown by the report of the Engineering Department of the United States. At the head of the falls is the dam of the Washington Aqueduct, 2,807 feet long, extending across the river from the Maryland to the Virginia shore. The Aqueduct connects with the waters above the dam and furnishes the city of Washington with its supply of water. Under the present improvement it is estimated by the Engineering Department 75,000,000 gallons of water per diem is the maximum amount of water that can be carried through the Aqueduct, and this constitutes the present provision for water for domestic use in the District of Columbia. It can not be long before this amount of water for domestic purposes will be insufficient, and further diversion for this purpose will be necessary. As claims are now pending against the United States for the water already diverted, and the subject of the purchase of the entire water rights is now proposed, we review the principal reasons presented in support of these claims and this bill.

1. Water power.—The amount of water that can be diverted for domestic purposes under the present improvement is equal to 116 cubic feet per second, and reduces the available power at the falls that amount, and for this diversion damages have been claimed by the owners of the power at Great Falls. A record of the amount of water passing over the Government dam has been kept since the completion of the dam, in 1886, and from this and other data the minimum effective power at the falls is estimated to be about 10,000 horsepower. Taking 85 per cent as the efficiency of turbines, the power of a series of turbines below the falls at the lowest stage of the river would be about 8,500 horsepower. This power, transformed into electrical power, can be readily transmitted from the Great Falls to Washington.

It is believed to be very desirable that the United States should acquire this entire water right, and thereby secure for all time a sufficient water supply for the District of Columbia, and use the surplus water as power to generate electricity for lighting the Government buildings and the streets of the District of Columbia and for power to run the elevators, printing presses, and other machinery in the Government buildings and at the navy-yard.

2. Water supply.—The water supply for the District of Columbia was first provided for under various acts and appropriations prior to 1882, the maximum supply being about 25,000,000 gallons of water daily. In the year 1882 the dam was extended across Conns Island to the Virginia shore, and thereby the maximum quantity of water provided for was increased 25,000,000 gallons per day, and in 1895 provision was made to increase the height of the dam about 3 feet, thereby making the present maximum amount of water available for domestic use 75,000,000 gallons per day, as above stated. It is estimated in the report compiled by Col. George H. Elliott upon the subject that "other increases of the amount of water required for the supply of Washington will be necessary from time to time, and it is estimated that not less than 200,000,000 gallons per day will ultimately be required." These diversions are, and further diversion will continue to be, subjects of claims and litigation on the part of the owners of the water power at Great Falls, unless the entire water rights are acquired.

Already suits for the value of the water diverted by the increase in the length of the dam and the height of the dam are pending in the Court of Claims, the claims aggregating $773,000. These claims are based upon the theory that the permanent diversion of water above the falls reduces the available waterpower at the falls, and thereby injures the property rights of the Great Falls Power Company. These claims are estimated by taking a principal sum, which, at 4 or 5 per cent, will produce a yearly income equal to the value per annum per horsepower of the water so diverted. It can readily be seen that, figuring upon such a basis—and we believe this to be the rule adopted in similar cases—the damages for the diversion of the water under the present improvement and the further diversion which will be necessary in the future, estimated by Colonel Elliott, will amount to very large sums of money—more, possibly, if private developments of the water-power are proceeded with, than it will now require to condemn the whole water right. It is, therefore, a wise and economical policy to condemn all the water rights at the Great Falls, thereby giving the United States the entire control of all the water, rather than to pay for the water diverted from time to time as it shall be taken.

3. Electric light and power.—If the entire right to the water is secured the surplus water can be used by the Government in generating and transmitting to the District of Columbia electricity, to be used for illuminating and power purposes. A very careful estimate has been made by the Government engineers of the cost of putting up a plant sufficient to utilize the power at the Great Falls and light the public buildings, the streets of the District, and furnish power for the Government buildings. These estimates, together with the estimate for maintenance, show that the lighting and power can be furnished by using the surplus water at the Great Falls, at much less than can be done by the use of steam power, and a much more desirable result obtained. The use of electricity for power purposes will also dispose of the smoke caused by the increased use of coal, already a subject of complaint and threatening injury to the beauty of public buildings and works of art in this District.

4. As stated, it is believed that all the water rights and land necessary to carry out this plan can be condemned for a sum much less than the claims already made and which will be made for the diversion of water for domestic purposes, leaving the surplus water for use as power in generating electricity; and by the condemnation of the whole the Government will be rid of the litigation and claims for damages for the water diverted and will own and control for all time the entire water rights at the Great Falls. The improvements outlined can be made whenever it shall be deemed best.

The bill presented does not provide for any present appropriation of money, but does provide for the immediate condemnation of the entire water rights and lands required, the amount to be taken to be ascertained within three months by the Secretary of War and Attorney-General. It also provides for the ascertainment of the value of these water rights and lands, together with the settlement of all existing claims, by the Secretary of War and Attorney-General, these officers being given the power to appoint three disinterested persons to ascertain and advise them in reference to the values. If the Secretary and Attorney-General can not agree with the owners, then the Attorney-General shall, within six months, bring suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia and have the value ascertained by the court. This is believed to be a fair and just method of ascertaining the value of the property condemned.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the letter of the District Commissioners, attached to the report, be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF COMMISSIONERS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 13, 1897.

DEAR SIR: I had expected to be present at the meeting of your committee this morning, and to show by my presence the interest which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have in the proposed legislation embodied in the bill entitled "An act to increase the water supply of Washington, and for other purposes." I know of no measure before the Congress of more importance to the present and prospective best interests of the capital.

As is well known to your committee, there are important interests belonging to the Great Falls Manufacturing Company and to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company at the Great Falls of the Potomac. The proposed legislation, as I understand it, is to empower the supreme court of the District of Columbia to ascertain the value of these respective interests, and to provide by said legislation for the acquisition of the said rights by the United States. It would seem to be important to acquire these interests before any improvements shall be made, which may increase the cost of the condemnation.

As may be seen by the report of Col. George H. Elliott, of the Corps of Engineers, the amount of water flow at the Great Falls during low-water periods is about 700,000,000 gallons per diem, and the amount diverted from the river for the supply of Washington is about 50,000,000 gallons per diem; that the raising of the dam at Great Falls would permit to be diverted from the river for the supply of Washington about 75,000,000 gallons per diem, and that 200,000,000 gallons per diem will ultimately be required for the uses of the people of the District of Columbia. He then shows that after this amount shall have been diverted for the water supply, there will still run to waste at low-water periods a water power of about 7,500 horsepower, of which about 6,400 horsepower could be used for generating electrical power, which would be more than sufficient, in his opinion, to light all public buildings and grounds of Washington and replace all of the gaslights of the city with electric lights. He estimates also that this would furnish sufficient electric power for pumping water to the high-surface areas of the city, for running the elevators in the public buildings, for heating these buildings, and for other public purposes.

He also says that the rights of the United States, but a fraction of which have ever been utilized, have for many years been disputed, and they are now disputed, and that large amounts of claims for damages are now pending against the Government. His conclusion is that the rights of the respective owners should be settled now and forever, and that the bill under consideration furnishes not only the best means of doing this fairly and with full justice to all parties; and that it is also a means for acquiring the remainder of the water rights at the Great Falls not now owned by the Government.

The Commissioners therefore earnestly beg that your committee give to this important measure early and favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. ROSS, President.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. GILFRY, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia.

WATER SUPPLY OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the gentleman in charge of this bill that it is not his purpose to press it to a vote this evening, and in view of that fact I desire to ask him one or two questions. The bill as drawn authorizes the Secretary of War "To obtain title to all the water rights not now owned by the United States at and in the vicinity of Great Falls on the Potomac River; the water so taken to be used for any and all public purposes, and also such land as may be necessary for these purposes." That is a general grant of authority without any limitations unless they may be found in the word "necessary," which is very indefinite. I have read the bill very hastily, but I believe there is a provision further on authorizing a survey to determine what lands are necessary to be taken.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the fact that we are to have an extra session of Congress (which seems to be conceded), it might be well to substitute for this bill certain provisions which the committee, if they favor them, can prepare for submission to the House when the Committee on the District of Columbia is again recognized under the rule. First, authorize a survey to be made to determine the lands necessary to be acquired for this purpose; and second, an inquiry as to the value of those lands. That information having been secured, the committee can, at the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, more intelligently draft a bill which will fix proper limitations, and the lands having been surveyed and their value estimated by the Secretary of War, then, if it is thought wise, we can authorize condemnation proceedings.

Mr. BABCOCK. In the first place, I will state to the gentleman one fact of which he is well aware, that the fall of the river is so great at the point now under consideration that no large body of land would be necessarily embraced in this purchase. The ground that is flooded is known as well as the ground that is not flooded. So that there is no question in the minds of those who are familiar with the location as to the amount of ground which it will be necessary to acquire. In making this survey, the officers are not going back 10 miles, or 20 miles, or 40 miles. As the report states, the river falls 76 feet in a distance of 2,000 feet.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me a single word? There has been a good deal of agitation as to the propriety of this purchase.

Mr. BABCOCK. The watershed?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir; but I will not enter into discussion of the general policy. The gentleman, however, I think, will agree with me that there is nothing in this bill as drawn to prevent the officers to whom this matter is intrusted from going 10 miles out if they choose.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill. Has he any idea of the amount of property which the passage of the bill might eventually require the Government to appropriate for?

Mr. BABCOCK. In reply to the gentleman, I can only state that I know the price which was put on the property by the owners, and I know the price which was offered for it by the New York parties. The New York parties offered $275,000. Their offer was refused, and a counter proposition was made, offering for $500,000 all the rights of this incorporated company.

Mr. DALZELL. Is this bill in such a shape that if it be passed the officers of the Government would be authorized to proceed so far as to have a value fixed upon the property for which the Government would have to appropriate?

Mr. BABCOCK. The bill provides for condemnation proceedings before the court in case the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General should fail to agree with the parties as to the value of the property.

Mr. DALZELL. So that there is involved in the passage of this bill the possible appropriation at some future time of from $250,000 to $500,000 by the Government?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. Then it strikes me we ought to spend a little more time on it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, I do not expect to have the bill finally considered this evening.

Mr. DOCKERY. One further suggestion. According to the report here—I have not had an opportunity to read the bill carefully—

The bill presented does not provide for any present appropriation of money, but does provide for the immediate condemnation of the entire water rights and lands required, the amount to be taken to be ascertained within three months by the Secretary of War and Attorney-General.

In other words, as I understand, the survey is to be made within three months.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is to determine the amount of lands necessary; and that under the terms of the bill will require three months. According to the report the bill—

Also provides for the ascertainment of the value of these water rights and lands, together with the settlement of all existing claims, by the Secretary of War and Attorney-General, these officers being given the power to appoint three disinterested persons to ascertain and advise them in reference to the values. If the Secretary and Attorney-General can not agree with the owners, then the Attorney-General shall, within six months, bring suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia and have the value ascertained by the court.

So that we have two propositions. One is for the survey of the land——

Mr. BABCOCK. For which three months' time is allowed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir. The other proposition looks to making terms with the owners through the Secretary of War and Attorney-General, if that can be done; and if not, then within six months suit is to be entered in the surpeme court of the District of Columbia to obtain a judicial ascertainment of the value of the land.

Now, in view of the fact that the Fifty-fifth Congress is to meet in extraordinary session, it does seem to me that a simple and direct method of dealing with this question would be to authorize a survey of the land, to be reported to Congress with a statement of the amount of land necessary, and to require the officers named to endeavor to ascertain what sum will be needed for purchasing the land. With these facts ascertained and reported to Congress at its next session, we shall be prepared to pass a bill containing all necessary and proper provisions.

Mr. DALZELL. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this water power is owned by a corporation?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is.

Mr. DALZELL. What is the capital stock of that corporation?

Mr. BABCOCK. I certainly can not answer that question.

Mr. DALZELL. This corporation owns, as I understand, not only the lands and water power, but also certain franchises connected therewith, so that to render the condemnation proceedings effectual it would be necessary, under a decision of the Supreme Court, for the Government to pay not only the value of the actual, tangible property, but also the value of those franchises.

Mr. BABCOCK. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this provision of the bill:

In making the valuations the appraisers shall consider only the present values of the land and water rights, and shall not consider their values to the city of Washington for the uses for which they are taken or to which they may be applied under the provisions of this act.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me call my friend's attention to the fact that a precisely similar provision, which was embodied in the bill for the condemnation of the works of the Monongahela Navigation Company, was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be unconstitutional. In that bill provision was made against payment for franchises; and the provision was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be ineffective—beyond the power of Congress to enact.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Was not that because the State of Pennsylvania had made no concession?

Mr. DALZELL. It was because the State had conferred a franchise on that corporation, just as the State of Maryland and the State of Virginia have conferred franchises upon this corporation at the Great Falls.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But I understand that in this case the State of Virginia, and possibly Maryland, both of them, have passed statutory enactments which concede the control of Congress over this water supply. If there are such legislative enactments, that might make a difference in the conditions.

Mr. DALZELL. That, of course, might make a difference, if such action was ever taken.

Mr. GROUT. As a matter of fact, did not the Monongahela Company enter upon the exercise of its franchise before the condemnation proceedings were had?

Mr. DALZELL. That is correct; it had done so.

Mr. GROUT. Would not that make a difference?

Mr. DALZELL. Of course that would make a difference.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Is it not a novel proposition to require these proceedings, by condemnation, in the court of the District of Columbia, when the property involved is entirely outside of the District? And in that connection I would ask how the District of Columbia court could enforce a judgment against property lying outside of its territorial jurisdiction?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Chairman, who will answer the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand it, and as I stated a few moments ago, legislative enactments have been had in Virginia and Maryland with reference to this matter. It was stated before the District Committee in the public hearings, in response to a question propounded to the attorney of this power company at Great Falls and other parties in interest, that the States of Virginia and Maryland had, through their legislatures, passed such laws as conceded to the United States the control over the water rights and adjacent grounds at Great Falls; so much as lies in the State of Virginia having been conceded by that State and so much as lies in the State of Maryland having been conceded by the legislative enactments of that State.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Does my friend from Tennessee mean to say that the marshal of the District of Columbia could be sent out into this territory to execute the process of the court and put the Government in possession of the property?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do understand——

Mr. TURNER of Georgia (continuing). And thus complete the condemnation proceedings?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that the State of Virginia has already given that authority. But the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] is more familiar with it than I am, and he can state the conditions of the acquisition of that property by the United States and the District of Columbia. He can also state the legislation which will authorize the steps to be taken suggested by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The gentleman himself can not cite the statute or refer us to it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not; but the gentleman from Virginia no doubt can.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I doubt very much whether such a transaction could have occurred at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no doubt from the information before the committee that they have undertaken to do it.

Mr. MEREDITH. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia—I do not know the exact facts, but this I do know—that some forty or fifty years ago General Butler or his friends obtained from Virginia a charter granting a franchise to the Great Falls Power Company. Some two or three years ago they got another charter, but what its provisions are I am unable to say——

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MEREDITH. Certainly, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, we would like to hear what is going on in this private colloquy.

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman; and I will now occupy the attention of the committee but one moment in answering the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]; then I shall move that the committee rise and let this matter go over.

In reference to the necessity for the passage of the bill, I will state that all of the members of the House are familiar with the questions relating to the electric lighting of the city, the cost of this service, the abuses that have been alleged to exist, and also the resolution before our committee in reference to the conduit system. Now, this is the first step to solve that whole question—the acquisition of the water power at the Great Falls and the rights of this power company. There is sufficient power there developed by the falls in question to light every public building, every street, and every park in the city of Washington. It can be purchased for very much less now than it can be purchased within a few years hereafter.

We do not claim by any means that the bill we have offered is perfect. We do not propose to urge its speedy passage, but simply call it to the attention of the House for its consideration. It ought to be considered, however, by this Congress, and got into some definite shape that will meet the approval of the House.

I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10133 had come to no resolution thereon.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit one more matter to the House, which will take perhaps only a moment. It is House resolution 212, to suspend the operation of an act approved February 13, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes,' approved June 16, 1880."

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all proceedings and payments under the provisions of the act approved February 13, 1895, amending an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, suspended until further action thereon by Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration against that resolution, and pending that, I desire to submit a point of order. I am not sure that the point of order is well taken. The facts are that the issue involved in this resolution was decided by the House on Thursday last, and instead of agreeing to a proposition to suspend the act the House decided to repeal it and to prohibit the further payment of judgments. That was the action of the House, taken after much discussion, on last Thursday.

Mr. PITNEY. Taken in the House on Saturday and in the Committee of the Whole on Thursday.

Mr. DOCKERY. The bill finally passed the House on Saturday. The vote was taken Thursday in Committee of the Whole on this proposition and after a three-hours debate. Now, then, the Committee on the District of Columbia raise the same question, and instead of repealing the law and prohibiting further payments of judgments, as the House decided to do last Thursday, this committee propose to suspend the law. I do not know that the point of order would lie against the proposed action, because I find on page 267 of the Digest this statement:

If an amendment be proposed, inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress it, as if it were against order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, reasoning by analogy, although the proposed resolution is inconsistent with the action of the House already taken, I assume that perhaps the point of order may not be well taken, but I submit it to the judgment of the Chair. I think the House is by this time fully advised as to the pending question.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the House has already, by its action, repealed this law. The proposition now is to suspend its operation, assuming it to be still in existence. Surely no such action can be taken by the House without first a reconsideration of the action by which the law was repealed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that the action taken by the House was on an amendment to the appropriation bill. It might very well be that the House might desire to amend the appropriation bill, or, failing in that, it might desire to suspend the act. The action of the House on last Thursday can only be made effective by the action of the Senate. It might well be that the Senate would prefer not to have it on an appropriation bill, either for technical reasons or because of its modification of the appropriation bill. The action now proposed is entirely different. The former action of the House can not become effectual except by the action of the Senate. If the House is satisfied with its action, and thinks that that disposed of the question, the present proposition can be met by raising the question of consideration or by finally disposing of the bill after discussion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have raised the question of consideration against it.

Mr. DALZELL. I would suggest to the Chair that while of course it can not be finally effective until the Senate has acted, yet, so far as the House was concerned, it had the option to do one of two things, by way of amendment, either to repeal this law, so far as the House could act, or to suspend its operation. Now, it exercised this option by deciding that, so far as the House was concerned, it would repeal the law.

The SPEAKER. No; it decided that, so far as the House was concerned, it would put an amendment on an appropriation bill repealing the law; but the House might think it was desirable to have a provision passed which had no reference whatever to the appropriation bill, and it could not be precluded by any action of the Speaker from taking that course. The matter is fully in charge of the House, and if the question of consideration is raised and consideration is refused, why, the House expresses its opinion in that way. If, on the contrary, it considers the bill, its expression may take another form.

Mr. DOCKERY. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is raised.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DOCKERY. That question is not debatable.

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

TELLERS TO COUNT THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to withhold his motion. The Chair is not entirely certain that he has authority to appoint the tellers on the part of the House to count the electoral vote, but in accordance with what seems to be the custom, he will make the appointment and submit it to the House. The appointment which the Chair will make, if the House does not object, will be the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON. If there be no objection, these will be considered as the tellers to count the electoral vote.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 2071) for the relief of Mary A. Swift—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1178) conveying to Rafael Seguro, of Iberia Parish, La., the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in said parish of Iberia—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 1968) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company—to the Committee on War Claims.

Amidon to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer; and that the expenses thus incurred be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

TOPOGRAPHIC AND GEOLOGIC MAPS.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 234) providing for the distribution of the maps and atlases of the United States Geological Survey, to report it without amendment, and I ask that it be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of the Geological Survey be, and is hereby, authorized and directed, on the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to dispose of the topographic and geologic maps and atlases of the United States, made and published by the Geological Survey, at such prices and under such regulations as may from time to time be fixed by him and approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and that a number of copies of each map or atlas, not exceeding 500, shall be distributed gratuitously among foreign governments and Departments of our own Government, to literary and scientific associations, and to such educational institutions as may be designated by the Director of the Survey and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That one copy of each map and atlas shall be sent to each Senator and to each Representative and Delegate in Congress, if published within his term; and that a second copy shall be placed at the disposal of each such Senator, Representative, and Delegate.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that in line 13, after the words "educational institutions," the words "or libraries" be inserted.

Mr. HALE. A library is always considered as being an educational institution. The documents go to the libraries almost entirely. However, I have no objection to the amendment if the Senator thinks it is needed.

Mr. HOAR. I think it would be well to put in the words "or libraries."

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 3674) to authorize the public building in the city of Buffalo to be built an additional story; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3675) to provide times and places for the trial in Oklahoma Territory of cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 3676) granting a pension to George W. Field, of Omaha, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3677) to increase the pension of Edward W. Nortoni; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 198) to pay to employees of the Government Printing Office accrued and unpaid leaves of absence; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SHERMAN to the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

SEC. —. So much of the money as is appropriated by this act for public works in the District of Columbia may, at the discretion of the Commissioners of said District, be made available from and after the 4th day of March, 1897.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish simply to say that the condition of the laboring men in this District is such that I think this provision ought to be added to the appropriation bill, so that, without any further delay after the adjournment of Congress, work may be given within the limits of the appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and printed.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BACON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PASCO submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of R. H. Lee be withdrawn from the files of the Senate under the rules of the Senate.

COUNT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the present consideration of a privileged resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That at ten minutes before 1 o'clock on Wednesday, February 10, 1897, the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to take part in the count of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

RECALL OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from a previous day.

Mr. PETTIGREW. A resolution was introduced by me yesterday, recalling a bill that had been sent to the President. I should like to have that resolution considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution indicated by the Senator from South Dakota will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill No. 3328, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes.'"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate as a part of the morning business——

Mr. HILL. I rose and sought recognition not upon the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, but upon the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not so understand the Senator. That resolution will be considered as pending. The Senator is now recognized for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. I raised the question yesterday as to the propriety of that resolution. No precedent for such a resolution had been shown to me, and I was endeavoring to find out whether resolutions which have heretofore recalled bills from the President related to errors of engrossment or whether they were resolutions for the purpose of amendment. I have not yet finished the examination. Is there any special hurry about the resolution, I will ask the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say to the Senator from New York that unless the resolution is passed at once it will be useless to pass it, as the bill has already been in the hands of the President for nine days.

Mr. HILL. I will not at this time, under those circumstances, offer any objection, because the question can be brought up again. If the bill shall be returned by the President to the Senate all the question can be raised then. Therefore the resolution may pass at this time, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution instructing the Committee on Pacific Railroads to inquire and report to the Senate whether the executive department has by existing law authority to foreclose the Government mortgage or lien on the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads.

Mr. THURSTON. I understand that the Senator from Ohio desires to proceed with the consideration of matters before the Senate in executive session. I have no wish to occupy the floor to conclude my remarks on the pending resolution at any time when my doing so will interfere with other more important matters. If the resolutions can go over without prejudice, I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. I then submit a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Several Senators have appealed to me to allow them to call up bills that are urgent, and I will yield.

INTERSTATE REGULATIONS CONCERNING LIQUORS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow me to put a bill on its passage. I do not think it will excite any debate. If it does, of course I will withdraw it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield if the bill does not give rise to debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3590) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SEWELL. It seems to me that that bill would give rise to considerable debate. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the bill will go over.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I also yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

CREVASSE IN PASS A LOUTRE.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre in the Mississippi River.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $250,000 to close the crevasse in Pass a Loutre of the Mississippi River, to be expended under the direction and according to the plan and specifications of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEWART COLLEGE, CLARKSVILLE, TENN.

Mr. BATE. I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow me to call up a bill simply for amendment and passage.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it gives rise to no debate, I will yield.

Mr. BATE. Oh, no; and under the circumstances I shall not press it if it gives rise to debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. BATE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $25,019.96 in order to reimburse Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn., for the injury to its buildings, apparatus, cabinets, and other property injured or destroyed by troops of the United States during the late war.

Mr. BATE. In line 5, after the word "Tennessee," I move to insert "for the use and occupation of the buildings and grounds and for consumption of materials."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. In line 14, after the word "destruction," I move to insert "use, occupation, and consumption of the buildings and grounds of said college."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I merely desire to state that the amendments have the assent of the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] who reported the bill, and that a majority of the committee have recommended the measure.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE REGULATIONS CONCERNING LIQUORS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I again ask permission to call up the bill (S. 3590) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases. The Senator from New Jersey has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. MILLS. I think that bill is of too much importance to be passed in this way. We ought to consider the bill a little before we vote on it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to explain it?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill will lead to debate, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not press it now.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right.

EDITION OF PENSION LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the Department of the Interior, 3,000 additional copies of the report of the Assistant Secretary for 1896, relative to the administration of the pension laws.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9470) to incorporate the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and fifty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 1185) entitled "An act granting a pension to Rachel Patton," with his objections thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same, and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3333) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed finally June 3, 1896.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President of the United States to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9842) relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 9821) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to charge a fee for the issuance of transcripts from the records of the health department;

A bill (H. R. 10038) to regulate the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 10131) to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 10, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 9, 1897.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 9, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio rises to a privileged question.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield for just a minute?

Mr. DANFORD. I can not yield for anything now.

Mr. HULL. One of the members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers is now deceased, and it is necessary to fill the place by the election of another before this session closes. If the gentleman will yield, I will ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me to make a request on behalf of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. DANFORD. I call up for consideration the conference report on the bill H. R. 7864, and in connection with that I submit a statement of facts to accompany the report.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman give his attention to the gentleman from California?

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask, if the gentleman will permit me, permission for the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to sit during the sessions of the House to complete its appropriation bill.

Mr. DANFORD. I will yield that the gentleman may make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads may sit during the session of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The House conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill H. R. 7864 respectfully submit to the House the following statement of facts to accompany the report of the conference committee:

The report of the conference committee having been submitted to the House and printed in the RECORD, thus enabling members to compare the report now presented with the report adopted by the House January 27 last, the statement required by the rule may be brief.

The report now presented differs from the report previously adopted in this, that instead of requiring the intending immigrant to read and write the "English language or the language of their native or resident country," the requirement of the present report is, that they be able to read the "English or some other language."

Again, in the same section, in addition to those exempted from the test provided for in the report, the wife of an intending immigrant (said immigrant being acceptable under the law)—his wife may accompany her husband even though she is not herself eligible. Also all minor children of an intending qualified immigrant, if such immigrant be admissible, may accompany such parent even though illiterate. The same exemption is made in behalf of the wife and minor children of immigrants already here. The former report admitted only such illiterate children as were under 16 years of age.

No other changes are made in the provisions of the report of January 27 last, except that section 9 of former report is omitted from the present report.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

L. DANFORD.
STANYARNE WILSON.

Mr. DANFORD. I now ask for the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DANFORD. I insist upon the demand for the previous question, except to answer a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KIEFER. I desire to make an inquiry, so that I may be informed fully as to how I shall vote. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this report now does not practically give the original Bartholdt bill?

Mr. DANFORD. Oh, it differs from the Bartholdt bill. I demand the previous question.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MAHANY. I rise to ask that the House do not agree to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

Mr. MAHANY. This is a most important question, involving a change in the entire immigration statutes of the United States.

Mr. DANFORD. Very well; the House can vote down the previous question.

Mr. MAHANY. We ought to have some debate upon the report.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILES. Perhaps it has to be answered by the gentleman who is calling for the previous question; and that is, Whether or not the educational test of this bill is the same as in the House bill?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MAHANY. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 13.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAHANY. I understand that we have under the rule twenty minutes on a side for debate.

The SPEAKER. There are twenty minutes on each side for debate. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAHANY. I desire to claim it.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered; and the gentleman from Ohio has twenty minutes in favor of the proposition and the gentleman from New York twenty minutes in opposition.

Mr. DANFORD. The gentleman can proceed, and we will reply if we want to.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, the intemperate zeal, as it seems to me, of the advocates for restriction in immigration has led them to adopt, in dealing with this question, a policy which was illustrated in the remark of one of the leaders on that side to the chairman of the House conferees last evening. As I understood him, he said: "Do not have the report printed in the RECORD because if the members sleep over it, they will be likely to discover flaws in it. Demand the previous question now."

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Who said that?

Mr. MAHANY. It was a distinguished member from Pennsylvania. That statement was in line with the whole policy that has characterized the advocates of this measure from the inception of this proposed legislation. The House adopted the preceding conference report (which was afterwards nonconcurred in by the Senate) notwithstanding the fact that the report, as submitted, tore asunder families, separated husbands and wives, parents and children. And now we find that this measure, which involves a sweeping change in the immigration laws of the United States, is to be rushed through this House under a motion for the previous question, which chokes off adequate debate and prevents the opponents of this legislation from pointing out in detail its manifold faults and absurdities.

The bill as now framed fulfills practically none of the conditions for which its framers profess to have labored. With a single exception it does not exclude anyone whom the great body of American citizens desire to exclude. There is unquestionably a sentiment in this country in favor of better and closer safeguards in the administration of our immigration laws, and though American labor is interested in this question, it is not interested in this bill. The vast majority of American wage earners are liberal, broad-minded, sympathetic men, and they have no desire to close the doors against those who come from Old World oppression with clean mind and healthy body and sturdy patriotism to cast in their lot with this new Republic of the West. Those whom it is the universal sentiment to exclude are the paupers, imbeciles, criminals, and other off scourings of Europe, together with alien-contract laborers, and the "birds of passage," who, retaining domicile and citizenship in other lands, fatten on the substance of our own.

But whom does this law exclude? Under its provisions every anarchist, every communist, every socialist who comes here to war upon established social order, has triumphant entry. The very fact that these men are anarchists and communists and socialists indicates that they have thought; and, to a certain degree, have been educated up to their thought. There is not one of them who could not pass the requirements of this bill. The measure strikes simply at those people who, under the oppressive laws of Old World governments, are—no matter what their aspirations—absolutely unable to obtain, nay, are debarred by iron social conditions from obtaining, the necessary education to meet the test of this bill. It shuts out honest, God-fearing, virtuous people, whose descendants would make patriotic citizens and strong pillars of this Republic. It is a crime against civilization. It is a bar against the educational advancement of the world.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the absurdity of the proposition is manifest. The members of this House who, by an overwhelming majority, will, in all probability, pass this bill, would—and I say it with due deliberation—the great majority, I repeat, of the men now occupying seats in this Chamber would not only not be Representatives on this floor, but would not even be citizens of the United States if this bill had been in operation a hundred or a hundred and fifty years ago. Why, sir, this bill is not only a wrong in theory, but it is a monstrosity so far as its practical operation is concerned. A year ago, when the Committee on Immigration visited Ellis Island, I took particular pains to test the working of the so-called Lodge restriction bill. Standing by the side of Dr. Senner, the able and experienced administrator of that immigration office, I took out of the line of Italian immigrants that were passing before the inspector one whom I asked, through the interpreter, whether he could read or write. He replied that he could. I then had brought to me an Italian testament, a small book printed in double columns, and selected a passage occupying five lines, equivalent to about a line and a half of ordinary newspaper print. I asked the immigrant to write a copy of the indicated passage. From the moment his pen touched the paper, we timed his effort. He wrote the verse, and his chirography was legible and beautiful. He copied carefully and accurately that line and a half, and from the time his pen touched the paper until the copy was made he had consumed something over four and a half or very nearly five minutes.

Now, Dr. Senner told me that frequently at Ellis Island as many as 10,000 immigrants land in a single day. Granting that under the provisions of this bill at least three-fourths of those people by operation of the clause exempting women and children would be permitted to pass regardless of their ability to read or write, there would be left at least one-quarter of the 10,000 to be examined by the immigration officers. The man that I picked out of the line was a man of unusual intelligence for one in his condition in life, and he consumed almost five minutes in fulfilling the requirements or rather a very slight part of the test imposed by the Lodge immigration bill. It needs but a simple mathematical calculation to show how this law would work. Ten thousand immigrants at five minutes apiece would entail fifty thousand minutes. A quarter of that time would be twelve thousand five hundred minutes—equivalent to over eight days, counting twenty-four hours to the day; or counting eight hours a day, equal to about twenty-five ordinary working days.

If we make a liberal discount of time owing to the increased number of examiners that will necessarily be employed, it will take at least one-fifth of that period to pass a single day's arrival of immigrants at Ellis Island. Now, where and how are you going to provide for the immense expenditures that will be entailed by the practical operation of this law?

The House has given no thought to these considerations. In passing this legislation it is acting from a blind impulse to cater to a public sentiment that is as absolutely undefined in its desires as the ideas that prevail here seem vague and empirical.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. Suppose this bill is passed, what then will have to be done? We must build immense barracks—enormous lodging places—as temporary abodes for the immigrants at Ellis Island and at other landing stations. How will these people be fed? How cared for when sick? You will have to double, treble, quadruple the force of employees that are now in charge of the various immigration entry ports throughout the United States. And I wish to point out that the test I made was simple as compared with the Australian voting-booth system set forth in this bill. You will find the proposed test embodied in section 2 of this bill published in the RECORD of this morning on page 1751. This is the language of the report:

SEC. 2. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from view, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the words printed thereon.

Now, that test, in the very briefest possible time in which it can be applied in order perfectly to carry out the purpose of the section, will occupy, as I have shown, a space of not less than five minutes under the most favorable conditions.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MAHANY. Most assuredly.

Mr. HENDERSON. My friend suggests that the number of immigrants reaches as many as 10,000 a day on occasions. If that proportion were kept up throughout the year, it would be 3,650,000 per annum, whereas the entire number which entered the ports of the United States during the last year was but about 340,000. Hence I ask, is not my friend alarming the House and the country a little unnecessarily by taking this great and extreme figure and basing his calculations upon it?

Mr. MAHANY. My friend from Iowa draws an unjust inference from what I said. My statement was to the effect that the inspectors at the Ellis Island station reported that often as many as 10,000 had landed during a single day at that island. I am simply pointing out the difficulties with which our immigration officers would be confronted on the adoption of this provision of law.

Mr. BARNEY. Is it not true, I would ask the gentleman from New York, also, that only about one out of five would be subjected to this delay?

Mr. MAHANY. I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, that probably three-fourths of the number would be exempt from this test.

Now, I regret to say that I can not yield further, as my time is limited. I am not occupying the floor or addressing the House from any personal feelings. Certain provisions, the adoption of which I have especially championed, have been incorporated in the bill. The "birds of passage," so called, along the Canadian frontier are excluded under the terms of this act, and in addition to that the section against aliens being employed on Government work is also included in the measure.

But, sir, I stand here to protest against the passage of this legislation in its general scope. It is not only unjust to the immigrant, but it is injurious to the people of the United States. My friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KIEFER] has in his hand a paper in which the cry comes from the vast regions of the Northwest for more immigration to fell the forests and to plow the soil. What we want is not restriction of immigration so much as the regulation of it that shall take these voyagers from foreign shores away from the crowded cities of the Union and place them where they can win prosperity for themselves and add to the glory and progress of the great Republic.

And I desire to say to the members of the Republican party here that it was the foreign-born vote in the last election that gave you your great majorities in the States of the West and the Commonwealths of the East. In the spirit of nonpartisanship that should characterize this discussion, I compliment the Democratic party, which, with all its faults, has rarely used its victories for the purpose of proscription or oppression. I wish to say to you, members of this House—and while it may be the voice of youth and inexperience, it may eventually prove to be the voice of prophecy—that if you enact this legislation every man who votes for its passage will in the future find that, like Banquo's ghost, that vote will never down.

As a member of this committee, I warn Republicans especially, that in the plenitude of our victory we should use our power wisely, not illiberally; that we should so administer this vote of confidence that both the future of the United States and the civilization of the world shall be benefited thereby. Let me tell you also not to mistake the meaning of the last election. I am not unconscious of the fact that many of my Republican brethren are prone to consider that triumph, not as a repudiation (as it was) of unsound finance, but as an indorsement of plutocracy, as an indorsement of monopoly, as an indorsement of everything that distrusts the conscience and the common sense of the plain people.

I feel deeply on this subject. I believe I understand the sensibilities of the foreign-born voters in the United States. This bill is a blow at the Polish immigration, which has as much right to the fruits of liberty as any other nation upon the face of the earth. It is an indirect reflection upon the German element, which gave us to a very large extent our splendid majorities in the last election. I will not speak of the particular nation from which my forefathers came, for fear I may be considered as animated in this address by individual prejudice. But I warn you, my friends, that if you enact this measure you will have reason hereafter to remember these words—that on the ruins of your theories and upon the destruction of your party victories a more liberal policy will march to success. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DANFORD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I regard to-day's action on this bill as a mere formality, and I shall therefore occupy but little of the time of the House. But in view of the profound interest that I have heretofore taken in this matter, and in view of my position as chairman of the Committee on Immigration, it is probably expected of me to say a few words.

Mr. Speaker, I can not refrain from expressing my extreme gratification at the turn things have taken. The very features of this bill which I was obliged to oppose a week ago on this floor as objectionable and inhuman have been eliminated in conference, and the very amendments which I offered in conference, and which were so stubbornly resisted not only in conference, but on this floor as well, have now been incorporated in the bill. This I regard as a complete vindication——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does not the circumstance to which the gentleman has just referred imply that his arguments had more influence with the Senate than with the House?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is unnecessary and useless to discuss this question now; but I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that if it had not been for one speech which was made when this matter was last under discussion—the speech made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who talked on the general subject of immigration, and not on the question under discussion—if it had not been for that speech I am satisfied the House would have refused to sanction the conference report last week. For the wisdom shown by the Senate I not only desire to compliment the Senators, but I wish to congratulate the members of the House for having been thus afforded another opportunity to modify and improve the bill.

I may be pardoned for saying that to-day's proceedings are a complete vindication of my course and that of the 117 members of this House who voted with me against the adoption of the original conference report. The bill is now infinitely better, Mr. Speaker, than it was when it left us the last time, and its provisions now closely approach those of the House bill as originally passed last summer. I should have preferred, of course, to see females entirely exempted from the educational test; but I am firmly convinced that the country, relying as it must for its domestic servants upon the foreign supply, will compel Congress at a very early day to make that exemption by law. This, Mr. Speaker, is all I have now to say on the subject.

Mr. MILES. Before the gentleman closes his remarks, will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. With pleasure.

Mr. MILES. I was one of the 117 members who voted with the gentleman last week, and I hope he will indulge me and those of us on this side who are not fully informed on this question by telling us how the conference report in detail now stands as to the educational test and as to the admission of married women, who by the bill as last voted on were excluded if uneducated. I have not a copy of the conference report, and am unable to get one.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am glad that this question is asked, Mr. Speaker, and I will gladly give the desired information. The bill as it passed the House last week included in the test married women and also children between the years of 16 and 21, so that when the father of a family came here with his wife and his children it might have happened that his wife would have to be sent back under the provisions of the bill, and not only his wife, but also such of his children as were between the ages of 16 and 21. As the bill now reads, Mr. Speaker, it lets in the wife and lets in all minor children, provided the husband is acceptable and passes successfully the educational test. Thus the threatened separation of families, which I objected to, is carefully guarded against.

Mr. MILES rose.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. May I have a few minutes more?

Mr. DANFORD. I yield to the gentleman a few minutes more.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The other feature of the original report to which I raised objection was the language clause of the bill, which would have excluded the friends of the gentleman from Buffalo [Mr. MAHANY], the Poles. It would have excluded the Jews who were unable to speak Polish or Russian. It would have excluded the Germans of the Baltic provinces. It would have excluded the Mennonites. It would have excluded the French of Alsace-Lorraine who are unable to speak the German language. For these reasons I objected to that provision of the bill. And this provision, too, has been modified to my entire satisfaction. The bill now provides that every newcomer shall be able to read and write English or some other language, living or dead. That means that anybody who can speak any language at all will be admitted to this country, if he can read and write in that language.

Mr. MILES. The phrase, then, is not "some other recognized language," but "some other language"?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. "Some other language."

Mr. HENDERSON. That is corrected now in this conference report?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. BOATNER. And a man can still bring in his grandfather, as before?

Mr. MERCER. If you are satisfied with this report, why did you not sign it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I had signed the report, but took exception to one feature of the bill, namely, the one which subjects females to the educational test. After giving my signature I was informed that in the case of a conference report it is inadmissible to sign with a condition or a proviso; that one must either withhold his signature or sign without condition. For that reason my name does not appear on the conference report.

Mr. MILES. Do I understand that to that extent you still object to the bill?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should have preferred, as I have said, to see females exempted from the test entirely; but since the House has passed the bill, even with its harsh and objectionable features, I do not see how I can serve any practical purpose by opposing it any longer. I have made my fight in this matter. I made it openly and honestly, and to some extent against the traditions of the House, being chairman of the committee which had the bill in charge, and I am glad to say that while I did not get all I wanted, I accomplished, in the matter of modifying the bill, what I hoped to accomplish under the circumstances.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. MAHANY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KIEFER].

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, upon the question before the House I desire to read a few lines from one of the largest and most influential daily newspapers of the great Northwest. The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, Minn., under date of February 4, 1897, says:

IMMIGRATION FOR MINNESOTA—ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE STATE ASSOCIATION—A LARGE ATTENDANCE OF DELEGATES AND A LIVELY INTEREST IN THE CAUSE IS MANIFESTED—THE IMPORTANCE OF STATE AID IN THE WORK WAS URGED AND A BILL TO THAT PURPOSE INDORSED.

Minnesota should be up and stirring in the interest of a larger immigration to her fertile plains and mighty forests, and the time is at hand when the State should take up the work and carry it along under a comprehensive system looking to the greatest possible results. Things have reached the stage when it is no longer possible for the citizens, individually or through organizations, to do the work and do it properly. The necessities of the situation demand aid and direction by the State.

These were the sentiments expressed and espoused at the meeting of the State Immigration Society, which was in session all day yesterday at the Commercial Club rooms. This was the first State convention held, and was the logical outcome of the Northwestern Immigration Convention, held in St. Paul in November, 1895. At the close of that convention the Minnesota State Immigration Association was organized, and a citizen's movement inaugurated to promote new settlements in the State. An executive committee, consisting of one member from each of the seven Congressional districts, was appointed, with instructions to arrange a systematic plan for carrying on the work. Eight days after the adjournment of the convention the executive committee met at St. Paul and organized the State association, elected a president and secretary, and commenced practical work. The association has been maintained wholly by voluntary contributions from public-spirited citizens. The State has made no appropriation for immigration purposes during the past twelve years. The association feels its inadequacy to carry on the work longer without assistance, and this convention was called with the idea of stimulating interest in the immigration movement and enlisting the aid of the State in the work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am informed that my State, or rather its legislature, is about to make an appropriation to aid in the matter of immigration. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking for Minnesota. The great North Star State can readily support in prosperity four times the inhabitants it now contains. More than two-fifths of the area of this great agricultural State is almost entirely unsettled, the undeveloped area covering nearly 6,000,000 acres of the best lands in America. We want immigrants with willing arms and honest hearts, men and women who are willing to work and love our country. For such people Minnesota has room; let them come. Let the law now upon the statute book touching immigration be enforced as all laws should be enforced and you will keep every undesirable person away from our shores.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KIEFER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Unless that is extended to all who wish to print remarks on this bill for five days, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KIEFER] that he make his request to cover all who wish to print.

Mr. KIEFER. I make that request, that the same privilege be extended to all members who desire to print speeches on this subject within five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that everybody may print on this subject within five days.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I withdraw my objection to the gentleman's request that he be allowed to print the extracts from a newspaper.

The SPEAKER. The objection is withdrawn. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the fact that leave to print was given on a previous occasion for five days, and I suppose that every gentleman availed himself of that privilege who desired to do so.

RETURN OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the President be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill numbered 3328, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the resolution which has just been received from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be concurred in.

The resolution as above set forth was read, and concurred in.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MAHANY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE]. I ask, as a special concession to the opposition, that, even if the House has made up its mind, it will pay attention to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] is recognized.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, the whole theory of the legislation recommended in this report is, in my opinion, false. It departs from all the principles upon which restriction of immigration has heretofore proceeded. It proposes to exclude immigrants from this country solely because they are laborers, and are therefore likely to invade what is called the American labor field. It is assumed in support of this legislation that the resources of this country are insufficient to support its present population, or at any rate to support any large addition to it. That is absolutely untrue—so untrue as to be ridiculous. I endeavored to demonstrate the fallacy of this proposition in my remarks upon the former conference report on this bill.

If the theory of this legislation is correct, then its advocates should go to its logical conclusion and pass laws prohibiting the use of labor-saving inventions and devices that, more than immigration, "invade the labor field." If work, instead of the results of work, is the thing that is needed for the happiness and comfort of the American citizens who are now suffering privations in enforced idleness, then, instead of presenting this miserable and inadequate subterfuge, let us make plenty of work for all by doing away with the use of steam and electricity in production and transportation. Have the courage of your convictions, if you are acting on convictions; do away with inventions, and put a stop to all material progress, and you will thus make plenty of work for all; but it will not relieve the distress of the laboring classes so long as monopolies are permitted to limit their opportunities and to strip them of the fruits of their toil. The bill does not represent a correct view of either the evils oppressing labor or the remedies by which they must be relieved, if they are ever relieved. The curse of the American laborer is monopoly, not immigration; and in this legislation you are proceeding not only upon a false theory, but in a false direction.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DANFORD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], after which I will ask for a vote.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that this measure resumes again very nearly the same form it had when it passed the House about one year ago. I was not present when the conference report was agreed to by the House some days ago, but if I had been here, I should have voted for some of the features of that report very reluctantly, if at all.

The present conference report permits a man to bring with him his wife, although she can not read or write. It also removes what I regarded as a very unfortunate piece of phraseology from the former report, and defines clearly and without any ambiguity the language which the immigrant shall read. So that, Mr. Speaker, the question presented by the bill to-day is substantially the question that was presented by the bill when it was originally before the House, with this exception—that the bill as it was originally before the House permitted illiterate women to come in. This bill does not pay what I think would be a very scanty tribute to American women and enact into law that it is important that the male citizens of this Republic should be intelligent, but that it is immaterial whether the mothers of our future citizens shall know anything or not. I think that was a blemish upon the original bill which the report now before the House removes.

So, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it material to discuss the principles of this legislation, which were so fully discussed in former debates. I want simply to say that if you will study the statistics of illiteracy among the races you will find that this bill has little, if any, application to the Scandinavian, to the German, to the British, and to the other races which are kindred with ours and which have been nurtured in the principles of self-government, and it does exclude races which have never been trained in those principles, and from which come large masses of men who either fester in the slums of our great cities or make predatory incursions into industrial centers, where they do work for wages upon which American workingmen can not live. The evidence abundantly shows that they habitually live in shanties, that they eat the rudest food, that they do not have even the most common sanitary appliances, that they expose themselves to all the diseases that are generated by filth. The American workingman can not support churches and decently clothe his children and send them to school and enjoy any of the comforts of civilization so long as he must come into this degrading competition.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] says that the Republican party should be very moderate after it has achieved victory, and the moderation which he suggests is that we should proceed to violate to-day one of the principles laid down in our platform which declares for the passage of this very bill.

Mr. MAHANY. This bill? A bill.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. It declares for a bill embodying an educational test, which the gentleman will see by looking at the platform.

Mr. MAHANY. The argument hinges on the article.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts (continuing). Which the gentleman from New York says he totally disapproves of, and every word in it is in favor of such a bill.

Mr. MAHANY. Did the Republican platform declare for an educational test?

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Republican platform did declare for an educational test.

Mr. MAHANY. I did not so understand it.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Then the gentleman and I do not agree. I want to say further that the platform of the other party, adopted while this measure was pending, and after it had passed this House by an enormous majority so that any declaration made upon the subject would be presumed to be upon the pending practical measure, the other party declared for a measure restricting immigration.

This matter, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MAHANY. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 162, noes 14.

Mr. MAHANY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 217, nays 36, not voting 102; as follows:

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I was present in the Hall during a part of the roll call, but I am not certain that I was present when my name should have been called.

The SPEAKER. The only theory on which the Chair has permitted members to vote who did not respond on the roll call is that possibly, by some accident, their names may have been omitted in the call. The rule is very strict.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Well, I have been busy on some matters of appropriation, and I am not certain that I was in the Hall when my name should have been called. If permitted to vote, however, I should vote "aye."

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. McMILLIN.

Mr. PICKLER with Mr. MINER of New York.

Mr. COOK of Wisconsin with Mr. MOSES.

For this day:

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut with Mr. COWEN.

Mr. TAFT with Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia.

Mr. KULP with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. RANEY with Mr. KENDALL.

Mr. LEISENRING with Mr. WASHINGTON.

Mr. DOOLITTLE with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. BRUMM with Mr. JONES.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE with Mr. ABBOTT.

Mr. WILLIAM F. ALDRICH with Mr. CROWLEY.
Mr. HARMER with Mr. BANKHEAD.
Mr. MOSLEY with Mr. SHAW.
Mr. STEPHENSON with Mr. HUTCHESON.
Mr. WELLINGTON with Mr. TUCKER.
On this question:
Mr. CODDING with Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky; Mr. MCCREARY, if not paired, would vote against the bill.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
On motion of Mr. DANFORD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOOKER and Mr. WOOD addressed the Chair.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOOD] has the right of way.
Mr. HOOKER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment to have a short bill considered.
Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York, Mr. Speaker.

DEEP-WATER HARBOR, SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3333) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed finally June 3, 1896.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed by the House of Representatives June 2, 1896, and by the Senate June 3, 1896, notwithstanding the objections of the President, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting on page 213 of the Statutes at Large, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, after the word "War" and before the word "Provided," on the thirty-ninth line of said page, the following language: "The officer of the Navy detailed to serve on this Board shall receive from said appropriation, in addition to his mileage provided for in section 1566 of the Revised Statutes, and notwithstanding its provisions, such a per diem allowance for subsistence as the Secretary of War may deem proper."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?
Mr. DOCKERY. Reserving the right to object, I shall be glad to hear an explanation.
Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, the report explains the matter fully, and I ask that it be read.
The report (by Mr. HOOKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3333) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed finally June 3, 1896, submit the following report:
In the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, provision is made for creating a board for locating a deep-water harbor on the coast of southern California, and for the expenses of the board and the pay of the civilian members $50,000 is appropriated. It was the intention of the law to put all of the members of the board on an equal footing with regard to the expenses, but the Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that the member chosen from the Navy can receive mileage only as a naval officer traveling under orders, and that all other expenses he must pay himself.
This act provides that the officer of the Navy detailed to serve on such board may, in common with the other members of the board, as provided for in the act of June 3, 1896, be paid such a per diem allowance for subsistence as the Secretary of War may deem proper.
The committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this measure what limitations, if any, are placed on the allowances. As I understand it, the compensation is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War.
Mr. HOOKER. It is left to the Secretary's discretion by the river and harbor bill, and this makes no change in that respect, but simply places Admiral Walker on the same footing with the other members of the board.
Mr. DOCKERY. What is the customary mileage that is allowed to these officers?
Mr. HOOKER. I do not remember. The gentleman is probably more familiar with that than I am, but this bill simply places this officer on the same footing with the others.
Mr. DOCKERY. Is it recommended by the Secretary of War?
Mr. HOOKER. Certainly. The bill was drawn at his suggestion.
The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RACHEL PATTON.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton, which has been vetoed by the President. I ask that the veto message be read, and also the report.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $20 per month, the name of Rachel Patton, of Paris, Edgar County, Ill., formerly the widow of John H. Patton, late captain of Company C, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The veto message was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 1185, entitled "An act granting a pension to Rachel Patton."
John H. Patton, the husband of the beneficiary, was a captain in an Illinois regiment, and was killed in action June 25, 1863.
In December, 1863, the beneficiary was pensioned as his widow at the rate of $20 a month.
She received this pension for thirteen years and until 1876, when she married one William G. Culbertson. Thereupon, because of such marriage, her name was dropped from the pension rolls pursuant to law.
In 1889, thirteen years after her remarriage and the termination of her pension, she procured a decree of divorce against her second husband on the ground of desertion.
She has a small income, but it does not appear that alimony was allowed her in the divorce proceedings.
It is proposed by this bill to pension her at the same rate which was allowed her while she remained the widow of the deceased soldier.
It can not be denied that the remarriage of this beneficiary terminated her pensionable relation to the Government as completely as if it never existed. The statute which so provides simply declares what is approved by a fair and sensible consideration of pension principles. As a legal proposition the pensionable status of a soldier's widow, lost by her remarriage, can not be recovered by the dissolution of the second marriage. Waiving, however, the application of strictly legal principles to the subject, there does not appear to be any sentiment which should restore to the pension rolls as the widow of a deceased soldier a divorced wife who has relinquished the title of soldier's widow to again become a wife, and who, to secure the expected advantages and comforts of a second marriage, has been quite willing to forego the provision which was made for her by the Government solely on the grounds of her soldier widowhood.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 21, 1896.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the veto message of the President of the foregoing bill, have carefully considered the same, and report:
The facts are substantially set forth in the message. Rachel Patton was the wife of the soldier during the period of his service. He was a captain in the Seventy-ninth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers. He was killed in battle. His record was honorable. His widow, the proposed beneficiary in this bill, was pensioned at $20 per month until her remarriage in 1876. Her second husband basely deserted her, refusing to provide for her support. A court of equity severed the bonds of matrimony that bound her to this worthless person and at the same time restored to her the honored name of her dead husband. She is now his widow. Her age is 63 years, her health poor, and she is unable to labor. The little income she has is insufficient for her support.
Whether she should now be restored to the pension roll is simply a matter of policy—a question to be decided by the lawmaking power of the Government in whose service her husband lost his life.
The committee, or at least the writer of this report, do not regard private acts of a similar kind as evidences of the policy of the nation. The fact that the Executive has heretofore approved, or has allowed to become laws without his approval, bills of a like character does not necessarily, in the judgment of the committee, establish any precedent for this case. The only result of enumerating such instances would be to show former inconsistent action by the President with his present position. By so doing the House could get no light to aid it in the discharge of present duty.
One private act is neither in law nor reason a precedent or a justification for another. Much less should private laws be regarded as indicating a policy in legislation. The policy of the Government should be sought in its public laws; not in its private enactments.
The committee have therefore made some examination of the public statutes of the United States to ascertain whether there has been any general legislation that justifies the passage of this bill.
By the act of July 4, 1836, approved by President Andrew Jackson, five years' half pay was granted to the widows of certain soldiers who died during their service or since from wounds received during such service. By the third section of the act certain pensions were granted to the widows of Revolutionary soldiers whose marriage to them took place before the last period of their service. The pension provided by this section, while not continuing longer than during widowhood, recognized a class of widows as entitled to especial recognition in the matter of pensions—those whose marriage to soldiers "took place before the last period of service."
On the last day of his term of office, March 3, 1837, President Jackson gave his approval to another act, which declared that no widow should be deprived of the benefits of the act of July 4, 1836, by reason of her having married since the death of her husband. The only limitation made was that she should be a widow at the time of the passage of the act.
These general laws are precedents in the true sense of the word. They are "authoritative examples." They declared a policy. It was to the effect that the widow who was the soldier's wife during his service should be especially recognized, and also that she might still be upon the pension roll notwithstanding her subsequent marriage.
Other acts might be cited, notably that approved by President John Tyler, August 23, 1842, which provided that the marriage of a widow after her husband's death should not be a bar to her claim under the act of July 7, 1838.
By the joint resolution of July 1, 1848, approved by President Polk, in the case of soldiers of the Revolution, "any widow or woman who may have been the widow of such soldier" was placed upon the pension roll "upon proof by her that she was married to said soldier and that she is a widow."
The committee therefore feel justified in saying that it is not against either precedent or policy to restore to the roll a woman who was the wife of a gallant soldier during his service, and who is now a widow, notwithstanding she may have married since the soldier's death.
The time for the exercise of this policy, either in any individual case or in any class of cases, is properly in the will and discretion of the Congress.
In the present case there is the record of the gallant and meritorious service of the soldier, John Patton, his death on the field of battle, and the age, feebleness, and need of his widow.
By her remarriage there was saved to the United States $4,800. A court of conscience has given her back her former name. The committee believe the Government ought to be as generous as a court of chancery has been just to the widow of so gallant an officer. There is no suggestion by the President that the act is unconstitutional. In view of the passage of so many similar acts in the past, it can not be said to be hasty or inconsiderate legislation. It is neither opposed to precedent nor to the policy of the Government.

The people, through their chosen representatives, have seen fit to grant this pension, and the committee recommend that this manifest will of the people be made effective by passing this bill over the objections of the President.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a pension bill carrying $20 per month. The facts in the case are quite generally, but not unfairly, stated by the President in his veto message.

The House will note that the veto is not put upon the ground that the act is unconstitutional. Nobody has ever claimed upon this floor, in this Congress or heretofore, that such acts are beyond the power of Congress to pass. It is not put upon the ground that this is hasty or inconsiderate legislation. The large number of such bills that have been passed, some of them having become laws by the approval of the present Executive, is evidence of the fact that Congress understood the case and knew what it was about when it passed this bill. There is but one ground upon which this veto rests, and that is that there does not seem to be any sentiment favoring the pensioning of persons belonging to this class. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the President is mistaken in regard to this sentiment. The House ought to deal fairly with the President; but it ought to be just to itself. I would not invoke as a justification of this bill at least thirteen private acts pensioning remarried widows which the President himself has approved. I would not invoke the aid of seventeen cases in which remarried mothers, two of whom had husbands then living, were pensioned by bills which received the approval of the present Executive. It might show that he is inconsistent now with his action then; but it would not decide whether he was in the right then or in the wrong now.

The question is whether there is a sentiment in favor of pensioning this class of claimants. In 1836, sixty years ago, the Congress of the United States by an act declared that the widows of such Revolutionary soldiers as had then died should receive the pensions and annuities which the law of 1832 gave to the husbands while living. It limited the benefits of the act to those widows who had been married prior to the expiration of the last period of service of the soldier. It was the first step, so far as I am informed, in the recognition of a very deserving class of beneficiaries—the soldier's wife, or the war widow, the woman who was the soldier's wife during his period of service. This wise and patriotic measure was approved on a patriotic day, the 4th of July, 1836, and by a patriot President, Andrew Jackson.

In the following year, 1837, another act was passed by Congress which provided that the pensions authorized by the act of 1836 should not be withheld from any widow in consequence of her having married after the decease of the husband on account of whose services she made claim. The law of 1836 limited the relief to such women as were widows at the time—such as had not remarried; but this act declared that its benefits should not "be withheld from any widow in consequence of her having married after the decease of the husband for whose services she may claim."

This bill was passed during the closing session of the Congress. It reached the Executive near the close of the term and near the close of his official life. It did not receive a pocket veto; it was not disapproved; but on the last day of his long and distinguished official career President Andrew Jackson found time to sign that bill, which placed upon the pension roll the woman who had been the wife of the soldier during his term of service, although she had subsequently remarried. It recognized that class of people, and at the same time it recognied the fact that the pension roll—the roll of honor—was not an improper place on which to place the name of the widow of a gallant soldier, notwithstanding her remarriage.

I say that that indicated a sentiment that the woman who had remarried was not to be shut out from the benefits of a pension, if she had married the soldier before the period of his service expired. And I appeal to that act in justification of the sentiment which has existed for sixty years. My friends on the other side may safely appeal from the language of the Executive of 1896, whose Democracy has been open to suspicion, to the Executive of 1836, whose loyalty to party faith was never questioned.

One swallow does not make a summer; and perhaps it might be said that one or two public acts are not sufficient to indicate the sentiment of the nation upon this question. In 1838, the year following the passage of the act just stated, Congress enacted a law declaring that the benefits of the act of July 4, 1836, should not be withheld "from any widow whose husband has died since the passage of the act, or who shall hereafter die." The act of 1836 limited its benefits to the widows of those who had then died. This act enlarged the class of such beneficiaries, and it received the approval of President Martin Van Buren July 7, 1838. A joint resolution declaring that the benefits of the act of 1836 should not be withheld from any widow whose husband died after the act of June, 1832, and prior to the act of July 7, 1838, received the approval of President John Tyler August 16, 1842. And this was almost immediately followed by the act approved August 23, 1843, which received the approval of President John Tyler, declaring the marriage of a widow after her husband's death should not be a bar to her claim under the act of 1838.

Sometimes some of our friends on this side stumble and halt over the pensioning of the widow of a gallant soldier if she has happened to remarry. They may properly appeal from the mugwumpery of to-day to the original of the species—to John Tyler, the Mugwump of 1842.

These measures were followed by that other sweeping joint resolution of 1848, approved by President James K. Polk, which declared, in regard to the widows of Revolutionary soldiers, "that any widow or woman who may have been the widow of such soldier" should be placed on the pension roll "on proof by her that she was married to said soldier and that she is his widow."

Mr. LOUD. As I understand, the existing law excludes a remarried widow from receiving a pension. Am I correct as to that?

Mr. WOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman this question: In view of the very strong and effective argument he has made for the enacting of a law permitting remarried widows to have pensions, what special reason is there in this case for appealing to this House to override, in an individual instance, the general law?

Mr. WOOD. In the language of my friend from Michigan, "if the gentleman will wait," I am coming to that shortly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here are no less than six joint resolutions and public laws, all of them receiving Executive approval and bearing directly upon this controversy.

Mr. LOUD. Would not that be a strong reason why we should enact a general law, rather than to single out special instances?

Mr. WOOD. It would be a strong reason if such a general law were now up for discussion and consideration before the House.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman why he does not introduce a bill of that character, have it appropriately referred, and try to get it before the House for its consideration, rather than take up these specific cases and make exceptions of them?

Mr. WOOD. I will inform the gentleman from California that if he will follow my remarks, he will get some reason for the action taken before I get through.

Mr. Speaker, I beg the House to note one thing in regard to all of these public acts and resolutions, except the first, which created the class, the widow of the soldier whose marriage took place before the period of his service, and the last sweeping one, which declared that remarriage should not be a bar. The language of three of them is that the benefit of the acts "should not be withheld." The men of those days were in the habit of using words to express, rather than to conceal, their meaning; and the very terms used indicate that there was a sentiment behind these laws, that they were right and just and proper, and that the object they had in view was entirely appropriate, to grant pensions to the widows under such circumstances. It would seem, further, to appear that somebody connected with the execution of the laws had been withholding their benefits from the persons entitled thereto. And so the language is explicit that the benefits of the act "shall not be withheld" from any widow "in consequence of her remarriage" since the death of her husband.

The men in 1836, 1837, 1842, and 1848—and this in answer to my friend from California—went further than I would be willing to go at this time. They did not fix any limit to the period of the service of the soldier, nor as to the meritorious character of that service. The woman might have been married to him the day before the period expired; she might have been wealthy, without need of the bounty of the Government, and yet she would come under the provisions of the pension law. I would limit it to those who were the wives of the soldiers during the entire period of their service. I would also limit it to such widows as were both needy and worthy, and whose deceased husbands had performed gallant and meritorious service.

I say, then, that there is a sentiment, as embodied in the public laws, that authorizes the placing of women of this class on the pension rolls. There ought to be something more than that. There ought to be a worthy and a needy claimant—not in the possession of a large income, but one that needs the pension and the bounty of the Government.

The President of the United States says with reference to this bill that, "waiving the application of strictly legal principles to the subject," there does not appear to be any sentiment in favor of pensioning a remarried widow. Now, we must waive the application of such principles in all such cases. The pension that comes under the private-pension law is a gratuity, pure and simple. There is no legal principle to be invoked in support of an unexecuted gift.

The beneficiary under this bill, Rachel Patton, was the wife of the soldier at the time of his enlistment. She remained his wife during the period of his service. She received back his dead body when it was brought from the honored field of battle. She remained his widow for thirteen years. At about the age of 45, when with her the shadows began to lengthen, feeling the need of support and companionship, she remarried. It was but a broken reed upon which she leaned. The second husband was ungrateful; he neglected and finally basely deserted her. In the State in which she lived was the old-fashioned chancery court, a court of equity jurisprudence that not only searches the conscience of the parties, but appeals to the conscience of the chancellor himself. It took jurisdiction of the case and dissolved the bonds of matrimony existing between them. It delivered her from the body of that death. And then, following that other maxim of equity jurisprudence—doing full and complete justice between the parties when they come under its jurisdiction—while yet short of doing full justice to her, it restored to her the honored name of her dead husband.

True it is, as the President says, it did not restore her pensionable relations. The court was unable to do that. It was as powerless in that matter as the Federal court would have been to have made a decree in regard to the marriage contract existing between the parties. But if the United States had submitted itself to that jurisdiction, if it could have been a party to the suit, that court of conscience would have restored the pension, because it was right and just and equitable—the proper thing to do; and there would have been the sentiment and the precedents of these public laws that authorized the doing of it. And, Mr. Speaker, neither did it bring her back those long and wasted years. That was an impossibility also.

Mr. CROWTHER. I should like to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. WOOD. My colleague surely shall have the privilege.

Mr. CROWTHER. You are not in favor of pensioning deserters?

Mr. WOOD. There is no deserter in this case.

Mr. CROWTHER. Very well, then, why should you advocate in this House the pensioning of a deserter to the memory of a dead soldier?

Mr. WOOD. There is a great deal of speculation about that, and I will leave my friend from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] to work it out in his own mind while I continue the thread of my remarks.

Some one may say on this floor—I hope it will not be said—that she lost her pension by her own act. Nobody knows that better than she. I hope if any argument is used it will be something new. I hope she will not be reminded of what she has thought of a thousand times in bitterness and tears—the evil consequences of that second marriage. All its hardships and misery have been hers; all the benefits have inured to the Government, of which her former husband was a faithful soldier. In the beginning of this session the President sent his message here informing us that there was "a comfortable surplus" in the Treasury of $128,000,000. There would have been $4,800 less but for that second marriage. And I do not think it well becomes any officer of that Government to remind her that the money is there on account of her own act.

This claimant is now about 65 years of age. She remained the wife of her second husband for thirteen years. She did nothing hastily. She bore all as long as she could, and then did what the law gave her the right to do, and had the marriage contract broken.

There is something more needed to make a justifiable private pension bill than sentiment, authorized by public rather than private law, and a worthy and needy beneficiary—there ought to be gallant and meritorious service on the part of the soldier.

At the outbreak of the war John Patton was a young lawyer, with bright prospects before him. When the call came from good Father Abraham for 300,000, and 300,000 more, he laid down his books, shut his office door, and went to the front with some of his neighbors. They made him captain of the company. It was assigned to one of the new regiments, the Seventy-ninth Illinois. The exigencies of the service at that time would not permit these men to go into a camp of instruction. They were perfected in drill and discipline in the midst of an arduous campaign in Kentucky in the autumn of 1862. They met their first ordeal of battle at Stone River. On the first day the Union right was broken and sent to the rear in disorderly retreat. That regiment was led into that scene of carnage and disaster the only organized body of troops on that part of the field.

It was a splendid sight to see those country boys—the dust of the farm hardly blown from their locks—as they faced foes four or five times their number and engaged in glorious battle. Their commander fell dead at almost the first fire, but a Methodist circuit rider, just from the pulpit, assumed the authority of his fallen chief, and by the aid of the officers of the line and of the men they held their ground for a time, while the disordered fragments of Johnson's and Davis's divisions rallied upon them, and Sheridan had an opportunity to change his front. And although the battle raged until nightfall, and that regiment left its dead and wounded thickly covering the ground, the day and the battle were saved. In the campaign in middle Tennessee in the summer of 1863 that regiment was in the front. A bold and gallant and vigorous charge carried Liberty Gap and held it; but John Patton fell dead in the very moment of victory.

That was the soldier on whose services this pension is based. This woman is his widow. She is not maid; she is not wife; she is the widow of that soldier, recognized as such by the courts of her State, and also by the public laws of the United States. He was the sacrifice that she laid upon the altar of her country; not a very great one, you say; only a country lawyer, not as great as that of women who furnished judges and Congressmen and Senators who became generals, but he was her all, and there is very high authority that might justify us in the belief that her gift, out of want and poverty, was more perhaps than some of the gifts of these, from their abundance. He was only a company officer, but it was the influence and the example of company officers like him, who marched and bivouacked with their men, who mingled with them, who shed their blood with them, and died with them on the front line of battle, that made the Army of the Cumberland the invincible organization that it was.

If this widow, in the few years left to her, should suffer for shelter or raiment, or food, if for a single day she should be dependent upon charity, it would be a lasting shame and disgrace upon the great Government for whose life the husband of her youth gave his.

We have here all the elements to make a good private-pension bill, a sentiment as old as sixty years that will justify it, a needy beneficiary and a gallant soldier killed on the field of battle.

Mr. Speaker, the highest honor ever conferred upon me, or that will ever be, was the opportunity given me, more than a third of a century ago, of serving, a humble soldier of the line, in the same brigade with this gallant officer. I have endeavored to discharge a duty to the memory of a comrade and to his widow which he would have done, more ably, for me and mine, had the conditions been reversed. In so doing I feel I have not left undischarged a duty to the country. We are told that the nation is to learn war no more; that we are no longer to settle questions by the arbitrament of the sword; that we are to have a policy of arbitration; a kind that when any question involving our territory is in controversy neither party is to be bound by the award if dissatisfied after it is made. In questions of a pecuniary nature, which may involve the national honor as well, a crowned head of Europe was to select the umpire to decide between the monarchy and the Republic. That treaty of arbitration, whether or not amended, or any other, will be a stupendous failure if behind it we have not a navy that ship to ship and man to man and gun to gun can meet the navy of any nation on earth. It will not be a success if there is not a confidence throughout the civilized world that the Republic can again change its citizens into soldiers; that it can put into the field its farmer boys and its mechanics with the same celerity that it did in 1861 and 1862. And that confidence will not exist without that other confidence—that the Republic will be as just and generous to the men who man the guns and stand in the line of battle as it is to the officers of high rank who command them. When I shall have given my vote to make this bill a law over the veto of the President my duty will be performed; the duty of gentlemen of this House is before them, and I appeal to them to discharge it with patriotism and justice.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand it, this is a bill to pension a remarried widow.

Mr. WOOD. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions unanimously, asking the House that it shall pass this bill over the veto of the President?

Mr. WOOD. There is no minority report. I believe it is unanimous. There may be some members of the committee who do not indorse it, but there is no minority report.

Mr. DOCKERY. The question which was propounded by a member of the committee led me to believe that the committee were not unanimous in recommending the passage of the bill over the veto.

Mr. WOOD. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] and two or three others are not in accord with it.

I wish further to say, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], that since this bill passed at least one other bill passed this House by unanimous consent in which the report was read, and it disclosed the same circumstances as in this case, except that the widow had been married to the soldier during his term of service and not prior, as here. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I can not become eloquent over a rehabilitated and galvanized widow, but I have heretofore in a minority report expressed my whole argument on the subject, and I send it to the Clerk's desk to have it read as my remarks in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to restore her to the pension roll the same as if she were still the widow of the soldier whose name she voluntarily surrendered years ago.

To pass this bill is to nullify for the benefit of this one individual the substantial limitation of the general laws that the pension of soldiers' widows who have remarried shall cease.

The objections to be urged against such bills as this are numerous. In the first place, it makes an exception of a case which is in no wise exceptional. There may be varying degrees of destitution in different cases, but it may be fairly stated that all cases of widows who have remarried and again become husbandless, by reason of death or divorce, present the same substantial conditions.

If any widow so situated should be restored to pension, all widows so situated should be restored, and this by general enactment and not by individual private bills, whereby those who may happen to have a friend to espouse their cause secure a benefit which the modest and the unknown never think of seeking. Special pension acts are justifiable only in cases which are essentially exceptional and should not be used to grant to one that which is denied to the many whose situation is precisely the same. But aside from this consideration, however, the soldier's widow who remarries voluntarily relinquishes her pension because she prefers to do so.

The Government can not become an insurer against an unfortunate termination of this second matrimonial venture either by divorce or death. To restore pension in case of divorce is to encourage remarried widows to seek divorces, and, in any event, it is to give them an ostensible claim upon the soldier's death and memory which they have long since renounced by preference.

Furthermore, it is not to be assumed that legislation of this character is in the line of justice or of honor to the soldiers themselves, or that it is necessarily desired or favored by the soldier classes. A contribution from the public Treasury to the support of the widow of the soldier, so long as she remains his widow, every soldier, perhaps, desires, and the common consent of the nation for thirty years has sanctioned this; but that each soldier looks forward to and desires that his services and his memory shall be the basis of a pension to his wife at some remote day, beyond an intervening period of matrimonial alliance with some other husband, is by no means self-evident or fairly to be presumed.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I feel it a duty which I owe to my comrades, and to the widows and orphans of men who have been comrades, to say one word in favor of the passage of this bill over the veto of the President. This poor woman, Mr. Speaker, gave her husband to the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States returned his dead body to her. She buried him at her own expense; she cared for the children for thirteen years. After the usual delay, she received a pension from the Government. Then she remarried, thus voluntarily relinquishing the pension. The Government of the United States is to-day, by her act, $4,800 to the good. She has lost her husband; she has saved the Government $4,800 by her remarriage; and now, instead of being credited with the amount, she is to be sneered at and accused of being untrue to the memory of her first husband. Had he lived, she might have been in affluence; to-day she is again a widow in dire want.

Is this the House that voted the widow of a Chief Justice of the United States a pension of $1,200 a year because her husband had been appointed a Chief Justice by the President? Can it, in the face of such action, refuse to do justice to this poor woman, the dead body of whose husband has been returned to her from the battlefield? Will it refuse the pittance to which she is entitled because thirteen years after his burial she remarried, relieving the Government from responsibility for her support? She merits praise and not condemnation for her action. I do not know how the House may look at it, but I say, Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts, that I prefer to stand by the precedent made by Andrew Jackson rather than to stand by the precedent sought to be made by Grover Cleveland. [Loud applause.]

Mr. WOOD. If no gentleman desires to be heard, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HULL). The question is, Will the House, upon reconsideration, pass the bill, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? And the Constitution requires that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken on the question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 60, not voting 158; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

For this day:

Mr. KULP with Mr. WOODARD.

Mr. CODDING with Mr. COX.

On this vote:

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa with Mr. CRISP.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. HERMANN.

Mr. LINNEY with Mr. MCLAURIN.

Mr. WELLINGTON with Mr. LESTER.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I was attending a committee meeting by leave of the House when the roll call began, and did not come in until the Clerk had got past my name on the second call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman was not in the Hall of the House when his name was called, he can not vote.

Mr. HALL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask to be marked present. If allowed to vote, I would vote "no."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be marked present. I was attending a meeting of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, but if I had been here when my name was called, I should have voted "no."

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, I also was attending a meeting of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. Had I been in the Hall when my name was called I would have voted "no." I desire to be recorded as present.

[The announcement of the result of the vote as above recorded was received with applause.]

CAROLINE D. MOWATT.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt, with the veto message of the President. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline D. Mowatt, as widow of Alfred B. Soule, late major of the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers.

The veto message was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without approval, House bill No. 1139, entitled "An act granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt."

The beneficiary mentioned in this bill was married in 1858 to Alfred B. Soule, who served as major of a Maine regiment of volunteers in the war of the rebellion from September 10, 1862, to July 15, 1863, when he was mustered out of the service. He died in February, 1864, and in 1866 a pension was granted to the beneficiary, as his widow, at the rate of $25 a month, dating from the time of her husband's death—two years before.

The widow continued to receive the pension allowed her until June 17, 1869, when she was married to Henry T. Mowatt, which, under the law, terminated her pensionable right. It appears, however, that a small pension was allowed two minor children of the soldier at the time of their mother's remarriage, which continued until 1876, more than seven years after such remarriage, when the youngest of said children became 16 years of age.

In 1878, nine years after he became the second husband of the beneficiary, Henry T. Mowatt died.

Though twenty-seven years have passed since the beneficiary ceased to be the widow of the deceased soldier, and though she has been the widow of Henry T. Mowatt for eighteen years, it is proposed by the bill under consideration to again place her name upon the pension roll "as widow of Alfred B. Soule, late major of the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers."

Of course, the propriety of the law which terminates the pension of a soldier's widow upon her remarriage will not be questioned. I suppose no one would suggest the renewal of such pension during the lifetime of her second husband. Her pensionable relation to the Government as the widow of her deceased soldier husband, under any reasonable pension theory, absolutely terminated with her remarriage.

If she is to be again pensioned because her second husband does not survive her, the transaction has more the complexion of an adjustment of a governmental insurance on the life of the second husband than the allowance of a pension on just and reasonable grounds.

Legislation of this description is sure to establish a precedent which it will be difficult to disclaim, and which, if followed, can not fail to lead to abuse.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 19, 1896.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt, having carefully considered all the facts, respectfully submit the following report:

Prior to 1850 the claimant was married to Alfred B. Soule, who served as major of the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers from September 10, 1862, to July 15, 1863, when he was discharged for disability contracted in the service and in line of duty. On February 7, 1864, the disabilities mentioned resulted in the death of the soldier. He left no property, and was buried by the Masonic order, to which he belonged. His widow, the claimant, was pensioned at $25 per month from the date of his death, and two minor children were pensioned at $2 each.

On June 17, 1869, the claimant married Henry T. Mowatt, who died in 1878. He left no property to the claimant and had no children by her.

Mrs. Mowatt is now between 71 and 72 years of age and is unable to perform manual labor to any extent. She is supported by her daughter (a child of the deceased soldier), who teaches in the public schools, and is obliged to labor night and day in a commercial house during her vacation in order to support her aged and dependent mother.

Your committee, after considering the case carefully, and in view of all the facts, respectfully report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SULLOWAY. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is of the same character as the one that has just passed the House. It has as deserving and meritorious a beneficiary as ever existed. It was my fortune to first make her acquaintance when, with three children toddling by her side, she followed the remains of this great soldier to his last resting place. I have known the lady from that day to this. She is as good a mother as any child ever had, and as loyal a wife as any man ever had the good fortune to have. Major Soule died from exposure incurred in the service of his country. His widow was pensioned at $25 a month, as the widow of a major. The children that were left to her she educated and reared as a good Christian mother would. Two of them have been unfortunate in life. There is but one on whom she can rely to-day, an unmarried daughter. That daughter supports this old lady, who is tottering in physical second childhood at this end of her life and unable to do anything for herself. The daughter, by teaching school in the daytime and working in mercantile houses in the evening keeping books, supports her. The question is whether this daughter should be relieved of the support of this widow whom I regard as a ward of this nation (as I do all such widows), or whether the daughter should be compelled to pay a penalty because her father gave his life to keep the United States of America on the map of the world.

The President in his veto says that this would be a dangerous precedent to establish. Of short memory is this President of ours. I looked into his record a little in that direction and I found, as is stated in the report, that during his Presidential career he has signed thirteen bills of precisely this character, and he has signed a greater number of pension bills for mothers who had remarried, and some of whom had husbands living at the time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in that suggestion of the President. If there is any question of precedents in this case, he has set them twelve or thirteen times.

Now, as the principle involved in this bill has already been discussed upon the bill just preceding, I do not care to take up the time of the House further unless some gentleman wishes to debate this question, but I wish to yield a little time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], who desires to make some suggestions on the subject.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, this bill, vetoed by the President, restores a pension of $25 a month to a widow over seventy years old. Her husband enlisted in the Union Army, was honorably discharged, and died of disease the result of army service. She received a a pension of $25 a month as his widow, which she continued to receive till her second marriage, in 1869. She lived with her second husband until his death. But for this second marriage she would now be receiving a pension of $25 a month, and which pension she would have received since 1869. By reason of her second marriage the Treasury is the gainer of an amount of money greater than she could possibly receive, unless she should live to be over a hundred years old. This bill simply restores her to the pension roll at the same rate she was receiving as the widow of the soldier whose wife she was during his term of service.

The President interposes a veto on this discretion of Congress, for the only reason that the passage of the bill would be a bad precedent. The precedent for this kind of legislation began, as the House has just heard from the speeches of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOOD], in 1836, by an act of Congress, signed by President Jackson, pensioning the widows of honorably discharged soldiers of all wars prior to that time. The only thing about this bill bad as a precedent is that it does not include all the widows of honorably discharged Union soldiers who were married before the close of the war and who are widows at the time of their application for a pension. It is a disgrace to the statute book of this country that it places a ban upon the widow for her second marriage. The service she rendered her country as the wife of the soldier in the field is no less meritorious because of her second marriage, after the death of her first husband.

Mr. Speaker, The beginning of war is merriment, music, and thoughtless hilarity; its end numberless headstones bearing the single word "Unknown," tears, and desolation, followed by long years of sorrow by the widow and the orphan mourning at disconsolate firesides the unreturning brave. The Government grants bounties for meritorious service rendered in the times of its imperiled existence. In the calendar of acts of heroic, self-sacrificing fortitude developed by war, there is none greater than that of the young mother standing in the doorway of her humble cottage, with a tender infant in her arms, and bidding its father go forth to the battlefields of his country in defense of the inalienable rights of mankind. Then retiring to her lonely fireside, there to wait and watch through weary years, in alternate hope and fear whether that father will return with his shield or upon it, thus leaving her homeless and that child fatherless to grope their way in sorrow along life's thorny pathways. But should he return from victorious battlefields wounded and maimed, thus adding to her daily labor and care through lingering years, and when death lays his cold hand on the sharer of her joys and sorrows, why should the Government in that time of her greatest need withhold the bounty promised for meritorious service rendered the country in the hour of its direst peril? With the exception of the bayonet charge, the forlorn hope, and the clash of arms in battle, the trials, the toil, and the privations of the wife at home are scarcely less than those of the soldier on the tented field. A nation owes a debt of lasting gratitude and enduring obligation to the men who peril their lives amid shot and shell in its defense, and it owes a like debt to the wives and the mothers of its brave defenders.

At the domestic fireside is inculcated the patriotism and love of liberty which, when the times of trial come, inspires the great deeds of heroic self-sacrifice in their behalf. The last injunction of the Spartan mother, with her parting kiss, to her darling boy going to battle, was to return with his shield or upon it. Thus was instilled into the youth of Sparta at their mother's knee the manly sentiment, nobly to live or bravely to die. Under such influence Sparta through the ages of its renown reared a race of invincible warriors, when war consisted of single combats, man to man, armed only with spear, broadsword, and shield. The shield a breastplate of defense for the soldier while living; and should he fall bravely in battle, it was the bier upon which he was borne back to his home, there to sleep forever beside his country's honored dead.

The war widows of the Union Army in this mightiest conflict of arms in the history of the race are a class of meritorious pensioners not large in number, the youngest of whom must now be over fifty years old, and the last of whom will, with the frosts of a few more winters, be gathered to their earthly companions in the bivouac on "fame's eternal camping ground." This Spartan mother named in this bill, caring for and watching over the home of the soldier while periling his life on his country's battlefields at the end of each day, with her little ones around her, closed her eyes in sleep for the night with a shuddering doubt whether their earthly protector would be numbered in the coming morn with the living or the dead. And the President would have her close her eyes in her last sleep on earth with gaunt poverty sitting at her fireside and sorrowing want surrounding her deathbed. It may well be said the Republic is ungrateful to its brave defenders if its lawmakers permit such injustice to the living and wrong to the dead. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SULLOWAY. Unless something is to be said on the other side, I ask for a vote.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HULL). The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass this bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? On this question the yeas and nays must be taken in accordance with the requirement of the Constitution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 55, not voting 157; as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. SNOVER with Mr. CLARKE of Alabama.

Mr. WILBER with Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa with Mr. SPENCER.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the negative, but find that I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

PASSPORT REGULATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, with accompanying reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States, on the passport regulations of foreign countries.

In view of the evident value of the information contained in these reports, especially to American citizens going abroad and sojourning or traveling in foreign lands, I approve the recommendation of the Secretary that Congress authorize the printing of a special edition of 3,000 copies of the work, to be distributed by the Department of State as indicated in the Secretary's report.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February, 8, 1897.

CIVIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith submit the Thirteenth Annual Report of the Civil Service Commission, containing detailed statement of its important work, and exhibiting the present condition of the classified service of the Government.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1897.

MARY O. H. STONEMAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate, and request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, what disposition has been made of the request for a conference?

The SPEAKER. None as yet. The Chair is waiting for some motion.

Mr. BARHAM. I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

GEN. JULIUS H. STAHEL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1694) to increase the pension of Maj. Gen. Julius H. Stahel, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate, and request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adhere to its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. LUCY ALEXANDER PAYNE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate, and request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

TITLE TO PUBLIC LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9345) to enable certain persons in the State of Mississippi to procure title to public lands, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The bill was read.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Line 9, strike out all after "right" down to and including "provided," line 14, and insert: "For one year from the passage of this act to enter under the homestead laws of the United States not exceeding 160 acres of the lands so purchased by them from the State of Mississippi and to purchase not exceeding 160 acres additional of such lands at $1.25 per acre, or, if they elect not to avail themselves of the homestead law, to purchase 320 acres of such land: Provided, however, That this act shall not affect the rights of homestead claimants who, between the 16th day of February, 1895, and the 27th day of May, 1896, made settlements and entries or filed with the local land officers applications to enter in good faith, under the homestead laws, any of the lands included in the provisions of this act not occupied or actually and substantially improved by such purchasers from the State."

After line 14, insert:

SEC. 2. That all persons who have legally purchased any of the lands aforesaid at tax sales shall be considered assigns within the meaning of this act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is a House bill which passed the Committee on Public Lands unanimously and went to the Senate, where it was amended in the manner in which the Clerk has read. I move that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

Mr. PAYNE. Is not this the bill which came up on Saturday, and which, on the objection of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, was not then considered?

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is the bill that came up on Saturday, and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands requested that it lie on the table until he could look into it, and also because I was not in the Hall. He now unites in the request for concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. There certainly ought to be some explanation of the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will make an explanation, Mr. Speaker. This bill as it passed the House simply gave a preference right of entry for one year to all those people in the State of Mississippi who had purchased from the State of Mississippi these lands included in Augusta series No. 7, which had been entered by the State as swamp lands under the swamp-land act. This was approved by the Secretary of the Interior; but subsequently the approval was revoked, and these lands became part of the public domain, involving some 15,000 acres. When the land became part of the public domain, people proceeded to homestead portions of it. Then the House passed this bill, giving a preference right of entry for purposes of homesteading and for purposes of purchase to those people in the State of Mississippi who had purchased these lands from the State of Mississippi. Now the bill has gone to the Senate and the Senate has put on it two amendments. One of them limits the quantity of land which may be homesteaded to 160 acres, as the law is already, of course, and the next one restricts the amount which may be purchased to 160 acres, to be added to the 160 acres homesteaded; or if a person desires to purchase instead of homesteading any, then it restricts the amount which may be purchased to 320 acres. In other words, the Senate amendment restricts the right of purchasers to a certain amount of land.

The next amendment made by the Senate was to protect the rights of those who had already filed homestead entries prior to the order issued by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the request made to him. The amendments adopted by the Senate restrict the operation of the bill as passed by the House. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is here now, and, as I have made an explanation of the bill, I call upon him for concurrence.

Mr. LACEY. I was called out a moment, and do not know how far the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has explained this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will explain it. I do not yet understand it.

Mr. LACEY. The situation is this: There was some swamp land selected in Mississippi by mistake which was not subject to selection, and after it had been selected and part of it sold, the selection was set aside. Settlers have taken possession under purchases from the State, and now control the land. If they were excluded from the land it would be thrown open to other settlers. So this bill was passed at the request of these settlers, and under the approval of the Department of the Interior and the Land Office, allowing these parties to buy from the General Government the land that they had already bought from the State. The bill has been so amended in the Senate that it limits purchasers to 320 acres, as they are limited under the forfeited grants in Oregon and other Western States, where, under similar circumstances, grants had been sold by railroad companies whose title had failed, and afterwards Congress confirmed the title, limiting it, however, to 320 acres. The same limitation has been put in now by the Senate. There is no substantial difference between the Senate bill and the House bill. This limitation, however, has been placed in the bill, and the right to take 160 acres as a homestead and to buy another 160 acres is preserved by the Senate amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One other amendment was made by the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. There is one other amendment, which provides that purchasers at tax sales shall be deemed assignees within the meaning of the law. A portion of this land had been sold by the State for taxes, and the persons who paid the taxes have obtained titles in that way.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman whether this bill includes any other lands than those which are opened up to actual settlers?

Mr. LACEY. No; it includes simply what is know as Augusta series selection No. 7.

Mr. PAYNE. It opens up no lands except to actual settlers either in the original bill or in the bill as amended?

Mr. LACEY. Possibly it might open up some lands to parties not actual settlers. A portion of these lands that will be bought at $1.25 an acre under this law may be bought by persons not actual settlers, but they have already bought them once in good faith from the State after the United States had certified the lands as being the property of the State.

Mr. PAYNE. Then it does not open the land except to actual settlers or purchasers?

Mr. LACEY. It does not open them up except to actual settlers or purchasers.

Mr. BRODERICK. Is the land situated in one State?

Mr. LACEY. It is all in one State, and in one locality of that State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I renew my motion to concur in the Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBER ON BOARD OF MANAGERS OF NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HULL (when the Committee on Military Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution that I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 249) for appointment of a member of Board of Managers for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Resolved, etc., That John Marshall Brown, of the State of Maine, be, and is hereby, appointed a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States, to succeed George L. Beal, deceased.

The report (by Mr. HULL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 249 for the appointment of a member of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, having considered the same, recommend that the resolution do pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask the gentleman if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir; it is simply to fill a vacancy caused by death.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the title needs amendment.

Mr. HULL. I ask that the title be amended so as to read for appointment of a member of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the request of the gentleman.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

COMMISSIONS FOR ASSISTANT SURGEONS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HALL (when the Committee on Naval Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1296) to commission passed assistant surgeons in the United States Navy, and to provide for their examination preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That passed assistant surgeons now borne upon the Navy Register shall be commissioned as such by the President, such commissions to bear the dates upon which said passed assistant surgeons, respectively, received their appointments as such; and hereafter assistant surgeons shall be regularly promoted and commissioned as passed assistant surgeons, and passed assistant surgeons as surgeons, subject to such examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, however, That no examination of passed assistant surgeons shall be ordered until the expiration of six months from the passage of this act, during which time promotions shall be made as now provided by law.

Mr. HALL. I will explain, Mr. Speaker, that this is a bill that passed the Senate and passed the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. I was instructed by the committee to report it; and it embodies two ideas. There are no commissions now issued to passed assistant surgeons, nor any means requiring a passed assistant surgeon to pass any examination after becoming a passed assistant surgeon before he becomes a surgeon in the Navy. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Navy asking urgently that the bill be passed. I will ask that this letter be read. The bill carries with it no appropriation and there is no expense connected with it. It is just to commission men who ought to be commissioned and who have passed thirty-one years without examination.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 7, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to the bill (S. 1296) to commission passed assistant surgeons in the United States Navy and to provide for their examination preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon, which bill passed the Senate March 2, 1896, and was referred to your committee on the 4th of that month.

The interests of the service urgently demand that the above-mentioned bill be speedily enacted into a law. The principal necessity for such enactment arises from the fact that passed assistant surgeons are not now commissioned as such, and are not examined, upon their advancement to the grade of surgeon, as to their physical, mental, moral, or professional qualifications for promotion. They thus pass through the grades of passed assistant surgeon and surgeon, the periods of service in these grades averaging thirty-one years, without any examination whatever as to such qualifications. Moreover, the Department has, in some instances, been constrained to recommend the promotion of passed assistant surgeons to the grade of surgeon concerning whose fitness for such advancement there appeared from its records to be considerable doubt. Under the provisions of the law in force, however, it had no recourse except to recommend such promotion, as it could not bring them before examining boards for the purpose of inquiring into their qualifications.

In view of the foregoing, the bill in question is earnestly commended to the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand from the gentleman who reports it, and who was not present when it was called up the other day, that it does not increase these officials nor cause any additional expense?

Mr. HALL. None whatever.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was the question that was up the other day, and I suppose there is no objection to it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT.

Mr. MORSE (when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings to call up the bill (H. R. 10091) to repeal sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MORSE. It is a bill, Mr. Speaker, calling for no appropriation of money.

The SPEAKER. It is not on the House Calendar, and therefore can not be called up on a call of the committees.

COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. DRAPER (when the Committee on Patents was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Patents to call up the bill (H. R. 10223) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4963 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4963. Every person who shall insert or impress such notice, or words of the same purport, in or upon any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, print, cut, engraving or photograph, or other article, whether such article be subject to copyright or otherwise, for which he has not obtained a copyright, or shall knowingly issue or sell any article bearing a notice of United States copyright which has not been copyrighted in this country; or shall import any book, photograph, chromo, or lithograph bearing such notice of copyright or words of the same purport, which is not copyrighted in this country, shall be liable to a penalty of $100, recoverable one-half for the person who shall sue for such penalty and one-half to the use of the United States; and the importation into the United States of any book, chromo, lithograph, or photograph, or any other article bearing such notice of copyright, when there is no existing copyright thereon in the United States, is prohibited; and the circuit courts of the United States sitting in equity are hereby authorized to enjoin the issuing, publishing, or selling of any article marked or imported in violation of the United States copyright laws, at the suit of any person complaining of such violation."

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing provision be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1897.

Mr. DRAPER. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. DRAPER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10223) "To amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights," have had the same under consideration, and report it favorably, with the following amendments:

Strike out section 3, on page 2.

This bill is intended to prevent the fraudulent use of the word "copyright" in certain cases not fully covered by the present law.

The wording of the present section of the statute is retained, with the following additions:

In line 9 of the bill the words "whether such article be subject to copyright or otherwise" are inserted. This is intended to prevent the use of the word "copyright" on articles that are not subject to copyright.

In line 11 the words "or shall knowingly issue or sell any article bearing a notice of United States copyright which has not been copyrighted in this country; or shall import any book, photograph, chromo, or lithograph bearing such notice of copyright, or words of the same purport, which is not copyrighted in this country" are inserted. This addition is intended especially to prevent the importation of books or other articles on which a fraudulent notice of copyright is placed; and your committee are informed that the extent of this fraudulent practice has been large.

After the words "United States," in line 19, the rest of the paragraph is an addition to the present section. It provides that no book, chromo, lithograph, photograph, or other article bearing notice of copyright, when there is no existing copyright thereon in the United States, shall be imported.

Your committee have given an extended hearing, and have communicated with representatives of various leagues and other parties interested in copyright legislation (on which there is generally a diversity of opinion), and they have found a universal sentiment that this bill, which is an act against fraud, should become law.

Your committee therefore recommend its passage, with the amendments above noted.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, the report fully explains the bill, and I will explain it further if desired. If not, I ask for a vote upon the bill and amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DRAPER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 4, 1897:

An act (H. R. 9619) granting a pension to Mirum C. Peck;

An act (H. R. 6378) for the relief of Eliza J. Holman;

An act (H. R. 5712) granting increase of pension to John W. Hines;

An act (H. R. 7240) granting a pension to John W. Bruner;

An act (H. R. 1508) granting a pension to Anna M. Newton, widow of Gen. John Newton;

An act (H. R. 1646) for the relief of Dolly S. Brown;

An act (H. R. 4547) granting a pension to Silas S. White;

An act (H. R. 4941) to pension Hester A. Bostwick;

An act (H. R. 6590) granting a pension to William Greer;

An act (H. R. 6472) granting a pension to Olive M. Lewis;

An act (H. R. 9593) for the relief of W. H. Wade, late captain and acting regimental quartermaster Thirty-first Ohio Volunteers;

An act (H. R. 939) for the relief of Cogswell & Co.;

An act (H. R. 6247) to grant a pension to Miss Jennie E. Moore; and

An act (H. R. 4363) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson.

On February 6, 1897:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 214) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies for use of reservations or public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1897, etc.

On February 8, 1897:

An act (H. R. 6750) to authorize the mayor and city council of Monroe and the police jury of the parish of Ouachita, La., to construct a traffic bridge across the Ouachita River opposite said city;

An act (H. R. 1256) for the relief of Henry A. Webb;

An act (H. R. 9499) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands to A. L. Williams, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. 8190) to provide an American register for the bark Ceres.

The following bills were presented to the President on January 25, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, have become laws without his approval:

An act (H. R. 3075) for the relief of John A. Lynch; and

An act (H. R. 8038) for the protection of yacht owners and shipbuilders of the United States.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the bill (S. 617) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Law was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10067) to amend "An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam vessels, approved August 7, 1882," and also to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels;"

A bill (H. R. 9734) to provide an American register for the bark E. C. Mowatt, of Philadelphia, Pa.; and

A bill (H. R. 1524) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of William B. Isaacs & Co.

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON (when the Committee on Invalid Pensions was called). I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to call up the bill (H. R. 7539) to facilitate the payment of pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That along with the quarterly pension vouchers transmitted by the pension agents to each pensioner belonging to their respective agencies each pension agent shall inclose a return penalty envelope, addressed to himself, and each pensioner may use such envelope free of postage in forwarding his executed voucher, but for no other purpose; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the necessary number of suitable return penalty envelopes to be printed and distributed to the various pension agents.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7539) to facilitate the payment of pensions, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

It has ever been the policy of the Government to remove every possible obstacle that prevents the pensioner from receiving the true amount awarded, and with as little delay and expense as compatible. It often occurs that pensioners are very poor writers, and many mistakes are made and their letters miscarried; small envelopes are often used instead of those of official size, and mail clerks do not give them the same care as official mail.

This bill is designed to avoid all delay and all trouble of deciphering the address by having a printed envelope inclosed by the pension agent for the return of the voucher. In addition, the bill will save the pensioner the cost of the envelope and the postage, and your committee believe this should be done, and therefore urgently recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, is that bill on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill is improperly on the House Calendar. It gives the franking privilege to pension agents. I make the point of order that it is not properly on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The bill has been placed on the House Calendar, but there is a rule of the House which provides that a point of order may be made as to the reference of a bill at any time before consideration; and, while the charge upon the Treasury made by the bill is a small one, nevertheless it is a charge, and the question is one not of amount, but of principle.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD FOR MEMBERS OF THE PRESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when the Committee on Printing was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the joint resolution (H. Res. 237) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to supply to each newspaper correspondent whose name appears in the Congressional Directory, and who makes application therefor, one copy of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the same to be sent to the office address of each member of the press, or elsewhere in the city of Washington, as he may direct.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

The committee, having considered the House joint resolution 237, to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, direct me to report same with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment adding, after the word "therefor," in line 6, the words "for his personal use and that of the paper or papers he represents."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this was the law or rather the custom until the passage of what is known as the printing bill. At that time, in the effort to economize, we put in the knife a little too deeply and cut off the press gallery. This joint resolution is intended simply to restore to the members of the press the privilege which they had previously enjoyed.

The amendment recommended in the report was adopted.

The joint resolution as amended was passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, is the call of committees finished?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That during the count of the electoral vote on Wednesday, February 10, one bench in the executive gallery be reserved for the use of the Vice-President.

The resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Chair to say a moment ago that the call of the committees had been completed.

The SPEAKER. The list has been finished.

Mr. LOUD. Did not the call begin back of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. DOCKERY. It began with the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The other committees were called on the previous call, and the list was finished on this call.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the adjournment, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOY, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. YOAKUM, for two days, on account of sickness.

The House then (at 4 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Inspector-General of the Army of the annual inspection of the several Branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Acting Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of harbor of Holland (Block Lake), Mich.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of appropriation, for inclusion in the deficiency appropriation bill, of a sum to pay for supplies, etc., furnished the crew of a wrecked American vessel in Alaska—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, requesting an appropriation for the construction of an extra story on the Butler Annex Building—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Attorney-General, submitting a change in the language of the estimate of appropriation for protecting the interests of the United States in suits affecting the Pacific railroads—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the president of the Anacostia and Potomac Railroad, of the District of Columbia, transmitting the report for the year ending December 31, 1896, together with a list of the stockholders of the company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Acting Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Ludington Harbor, Michigan—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to the House resolution of June 5, 1896, a statement as to the changes in employees in the Department—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of proposed legislation in relation to the new mint at Philadelphia—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ROYSE, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, submitted the views of the minority in the contested-election case of W. T. Hopkins vs. Joseph M. Kendall, from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, recommending the adoption of House resolution No. 533 as a substitute for resolution reported by the committee; which said views (Report No. 2809, part 2) and resolution were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred House bills Nos. 9732, 9751, and 10211, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 10278) to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 2842); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9896) to correct a clerical error found to exist in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed June 3, 1896, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2846); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 247) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Wallabout Channel, New York, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2847); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1862) entitled "An act to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes," reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2849); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KNOX, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10271) authorizing the funding of indebtedness in the Territories of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2850); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TRACEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10267) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2866); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10225) to authorize the Secretary of War to detail a regiment of artillery, a regiment of infantry, and a regiment of cavalry to take part in the Wilson Creek reunion, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No 2870); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the estimates of appropriations for the Bureau of Animal Industry, in connection therewith report a bill (H. R. 10285) providing a scale of fees and method for collecting same for Government meat inspection, accompanied by a report (No. 2868); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill lie on the table for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table.

RACHEL PATTON—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton, which had been reconsidered by the House and passed, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill be referred with the veto message to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message of the President will first be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, certainly.

The Secretary read the President's message.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT MARKET REGULATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 12, to strike out "the clerk of the said market" and insert "a clerk who may be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia;" and on page 2, line 19, after "Washington," to insert:

Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as extending the boundaries of the grounds occupied by the Washington Market Company beyond the limits defined in the charter of said company or as affecting the issues in any pending litigation in the courts of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That no charge, license fee, or assessment of any kind for occupany of a space on a market day and the evening previous thereto shall be levied upon any farmer or producer of vegetables or provisions bringing the same to market, except 10 cents for a single team and 15 cents for a double team; nor shall any fine or fee be assessed or punishment imposed upon any farmer or producer for selling at any time within the District during market hours any article of provision or vegetables grown or produced by him and sound and fit for use.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives to the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference and requesting a further conference upon the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. HILL. I move that the request of the House of Representatives for a further conference be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HILL, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. CLARK were appointed.

SYSTEM OF BIMETALLISM.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that on Monday next I shall ask the unanimous consent of the Senate, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, to read a few remarks on bimetallism, in support of the resolution introduced by me the other day.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions of the legislature of Massachusetts, relative to the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In the year 1897. Resolutions relative to a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain.

Resolved, That the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in general court assembled, desire to express their deep satisfaction at the prospect of a treaty which shall establish a tribunal of international arbitration between this country and Great Britain, and join in the acclamation of joy and hope with which the enlightened men of both hemispheres receive this deliberate declaration of two of the foremost nations of the world that the principles of justice and the common methods of reasonable discussion shall henceforth supplant as far as possible in their relations the inhumanities of war. It is upon the common people that the unspeakable sufferings of war have always fallen, and it is the irresistible sentiment of the people in these two great countries of popular government that accomplishes this great advance toward a lasting and honorable peace among all nations.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, properly attested, be transmitted by the secretary of the Commonwealth to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

In the house of representatives, adopted January 28, 1897.
In senate, adopted, in concurrence, February 2, 1897.
A true copy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better go on with the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Carolina that he will be recognized to make the motion after the completion of the morning business. Reports of standing and select committees are next in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. FRYE on the 3d instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CAMERON on the 26th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. VEST on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 4th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3300) for the relief of the estate of Alfred W. Green, late of Carroll Parish, La., reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3300) for the relief of the estate of Alfred W. Green, late of Carroll Parish, La., together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress "to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government," approved March 3, 1887.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3463) for the relief of the estate of J. W. Tucker, late of Lafourche Parish, La., reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3463) entitled "A bill for the relief of the estate of J. W. Tucker, late of Lafourche Parish, La.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3621) for the relief of William Johnson, administrator of Thomas I. Johnson, deceased, of Fayette County, Tenn., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3624) for the relief of Anna Hunt, administratrix of George F. Hunt, late of Jefferson County, Miss., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2317) to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8898) to increase the pension of Elizabeth Wellons, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mrs. A. Shirley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1972) to provide for the carrying out of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of John Campbell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1095) granting a pension to Annie M. Ermer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1475) for the relief of Basil Moreland, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1221) to make oleomargarine and all other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McBRIDE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3533) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

FORFEITED RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. McBRIDE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9493) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 3 of the act of September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by the act shall be permitted to purchase the same in the quantities and upon the terms provided in the third section and the amendments thereto at any time prior to January 1, 1899.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon what land the bill refers to?

Mr. MCBRIDE. The bill affects particularly the lands within the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad forfeited by the act of September 29, 1890. It merely extends the time within which the lands may be purchased for two years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. DALZELL.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1498) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to William M. Dalzell, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the records of the War Department in the case of William M. Dalzell, late fifth corporal in Company B, Second Regiment Iowa Infantry, so as to give him an honorable discharge dating to the end of the war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 199) admitting free of duty needlework and similar articles imported by the New York Association of Sewing Schools for exhibition purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States be printed as recently agreed to by the House of Representatives, on the report of the conference committee.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10223) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 237) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 249) for the appointment of a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As a part of the morning business, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution instructing the Committee on Pacific Railroads to inquire and report to the Senate whether the executive department has, by existing law, authority to foreclose the Government mortgage or lien on the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask that this matter may go over without prejudice at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

INTERSTATE REGULATIONS CONCERNING LIQUOR.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3590) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

Mr. PLATT. I wish there might be some explanation made of this bill. I do not think the Senate knows what it is.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will give an explanation of it. Any Senator who has read the bill will understand what its purpose is. It simply intends to give to each State and Territory the right to control the liquor traffic within its own borders in its own way without interference from the Federal judiciary or any outside source.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in the South Carolina dispensary cases has annulled, in the opinion of one of the judges who delivered the dissenting opinion, the Wilson Act passed here in 1890 to give relief to the States of Iowa and Kansas on this very matter, after the original-package decision of that court had taken it from them. I will read a brief extract from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brown in the case of Scott vs. Donald, in South Carolina, decided about two weeks ago. He says:

> If a State can not prohibit her own citizens from importing liquors, as well as buying them at home, the "Wilson bill" is set at naught, and the prohibitory laws of the several States rendered inoperative in a vital particular. The fact that these liquors were imported for complainant's own use and consumption, instead of for sale, raises no question under the Federal Constitution. Both are under the ban of the statute.

I send the Wilson Act to the desk to be read, so that those of you who choose may follow the amendments which I offer to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

An act to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

Approved, August 8, 1890.

Mr. TILLMAN. Any reasonable construction of that language, to anyone who is not a hair-splitting lawyer, those words, "for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein," must mean that the State has absolute control. But the Supreme Court has declared otherwise, and therefore we are bound to ask Congress to give us additional legislation, amplifying and clarifying this language so as to make it undoubted, and let that court and the courts below it leave each State free to exercise its rights to police, manage, and control liquor as it desires to do. That is all this bill proposes to do.

The first amendment or change in the language of the bill is where it says "upon arrival within the limits." The words "within the limits" have been inserted by me because a judge in our State has already enjoined the police force of the State from seizing liquor, on the ground that liquor does not arrive within the State until it has been delivered out of the hand of the public carrier. In other words, the public carrier, the medium of interstate commerce, is left free to bring as much liquor into the State as he chooses, and we can not seize it until he has delivered it to some consignee. I have put in the words "within the limits" so as to clarify the meaning of the word "arrival."

The other amendments are intended to cover special decisions which have been rendered by the Federal judiciary in our State, because we have been in litigation on this question ever since we enacted the dispensary law. If any gentleman desires any explanation as to each amendment, I will cheerfully give it. I simply try to amplify the law and make it cover the entire ground as shown to be necessary in the recent opinions of the Supreme Court and of the courts below.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on Interstate Commerce will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "Territory," strike out "or" and insert "and;" in line 12, after the word "original," insert "or other;" in line 13, before the word "States," strike out "such" and insert "the," and after the word "States," insert "and Territories;" in line 14, before the word "control," strike out the word "absolute;" in line 16, after the word "imported," insert "and without regard to the manner of sale provided by the State or Territory;" and in line 19, after the word "laws," insert "or liquors or liquids in transit through a State or Territory;" so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall upon arrival within the limits of said State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted for the control and policing of the liquor traffic, absolutely, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquors or liquids had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original or other packages for private use or otherwise, and the States and Territories shall have control of such liquors or liquids within their borders by whomsoever produced and for whatever use imported and without regard to the manner of sale provided by the State or Territory: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting the internal revenue laws, or liquors or liquids in transit through a State or Territory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina, for information, whether he proposes to stop liquors in transit on the border of each State?

Mr. TILLMAN. From one State to another through our State?

Mr. SEWELL. Yes; do you expect to stop the internal-revenue States with revenue business?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, sir; we do not propose it. The amendment at the bottom provides expressly that this bill does not affect the internal-revenue laws of the United States, nor does it affect liquor in transit from a State outside of ours to another State outside of ours, but going through.

Mr. SEWELL. Is there anything in the bill to prevent the seizure of liquor just as soon as it crosses the line in a train? Is it not intended to stop it there and seize it?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is intended to seize any liquors shipped to a point within a State and designated on the package as being for that State.

Mr. SEWELL. How are you going to find out in a railway train of 10,000 packages whether there is any liquor that is to stop in the State, except——

Mr. TILLMAN. We can not get in the railroad car——

Mr. SEWELL. Except by stopping the interstate commerce of the country to pick out a few barrels of liquor that may be in one car?

Mr. TILLMAN. We can not get into a railroad car under the dispensary law without a search warrant.

Mr. SEWELL. But I take it for granted that you will get a search warrant.

Mr. TILLMAN. We can get a search warrant if we have reason to believe that liquor is in a car for delivery within the State.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not like to object to the consideration of the bill, but if the proposed act stops the interstate commerce of the country from crossing the border of any State and subjects it to investigation and seizure and the delay of everybody else's goods, I shall object to the bill.

Mr. MILLS. The bill is up for consideration, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey. It has been taken up by a majority vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, this bill, like the law the Senator from South Carolina had read at the desk, is a step backward in the policy adopted by our Government when the Constitution was framed. As is known to every Senator who has thought on the subject, the main feature that originated the Government of the United States was to prevent each separate State from interfering with interstate commerce. Every State prior to 1789 enjoyed and exercised the right to prohibit and restrict and tax and do just what it pleased with the commerce of every other State entering its territories or passing through its boundaries. The object of the Constitution, and the object of those who called the convention to frame the Constitution, was to remove that very impediment to the movement of interstate commerce. A convention was called at Annapolis for the purpose of making all commerce moving through the territory of the United States free from restrictions and interruptions by State authorities.

The act that my friend referred to a while ago is the first step in the direction of going back to the Continental days, and now we are invited to take the second step, to go back to that same policy, and a great many are voting for it because it is liquor. The consumption of liquor is unpopular, and a great many people think it is a great evil. Undoubtedly its excessive use is a great evil; but when you once establish the precedent, why can it not be applied to woolen goods, and cotton goods, and iron, and steel, and anything else within the province of the State to impose its tax upon or to make its restrictions upon? I think it is a very dangerous step, and, as far as I am concerned, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am compelled by my deliberate convictions on this subject to vote against the bill as it is now before the Senate. I voted against the Wilson bill, but this measure is far beyond the Wilson bill and goes a step in advance of any legislation that has ever been had or proposed in this country in restriction of the right of Congress to regulate commerce among the States.

I call the attention of Senators to the eleventh and twelfth lines of the first section of the bill, the effect of which is to prohibit any traveler, any citizen, and any resident in the State of South Carolina from purchasing and bringing into that State any liquor of any sort not manufactured in the State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not go into the details of the dispensary law here, but I will say for your benefit and for the benefit of others that the dispensary law expressly provides that liquors can be carried into the State by anyone as personal baggage. What we are after is the importation of whisky for sale. The recent opinion of the court that persons have a right to import for personal use simply lays a conduit or underground railway, or rather an open railway aboveboard, by which people can bring it in pretending that it is for private use, when they intend to sell it.

Mr. VEST. I do not propose to go into the question as to how the law could be abused or how far the dispensary law in South Carolina may be evaded. I take the bill upon its face. It has this provision, commencing at the middle of line 8: "Enacted for the control and policing of the liquor traffic absolutely, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquors or liquids had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original or other packages for private use or otherwise." Now, no language can be broader than that, and I take it that the act of Congress, no matter what might be the provision of the domestic statute of South Carolina, prevails. This absolutely prohibits any man from carrying into that State, whether he be a resident, citizen, or traveler, these liquors or liquids in original package or otherwise, and as I take it——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it not the law now that you may not send in original packages liquor into a State which forbids its importation?

Mr. VEST. No; I do not understand that to be the law.

Mr. TILLMAN. What was the decision in Iowa in the case of Leisy vs. Hardin and in the case of Bowman vs. The Chicago Railway? I have the opinions here.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will find me any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which says that I can not take into any State or import into any State of which I am a citizen liquor or liquids from a foreign State in original packages or otherwise, I shall be obliged to him. I know how far the Supreme Court has gone in this direction—a great deal further than I think it ought to have gone against the Constitution. That court decided in the case of Mugler vs. The State of Kansas—and that is the very limit of its decision as to restrictive legislation—that the State of Kansas had the right to prohibit a citizen of Kansas from taking the fruit which he had raised in his own orchard, peaches or apples, carrying it into his own cellar and distilling it, and then using that liquor himself, not offering it for sale or giving it away to anyone. I believe that that was prohibition run mad. I believe now, with great respect to the Supreme Court officially, that that law was in violation of the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator what provision of the Constitution of the United States the decision which he has described violates?

Mr. VEST. I think it violates the great constitutional principle that there are reserved personal rights in the shape of personal liberty that no State and no government can invade. I have a right to control my own body, providing I do not interfere with the police laws of the State, and provided I do not propose to give or to sell to any other human being what I produce for my own use.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator this question: Suppose that to be true, and that the Constitution of the United States, and not the State constitution, has protected the right of which he speaks, how does this proposed law affect it in the least?

Mr. VEST. I am not talking about this proposed law, but I am talking about the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as to that Kansas statute, and I simply state as a matter of legal history that the Supreme Court has gone to the very verge of invading, and I believe it did invade, the personal liberty of the citizen in making that decision. This proposed law also does it. The Supreme Court of the United States has never declared that any State has the right to do it. I do not believe that any State has the right to do it, and I believe—although it is a very bold thing for anybody so say now—that the Supreme Court of the United States will so decide, and decide that no State has the right to say that its citizens shall not purchase foreign liquors. The effect of this proposed statute is to confine every citizen and resident of the State of South Carolina to liquors manufactured in that State.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it is the will of three-fourths of the people of South Carolina that that shall be the law for their own internal government, I want to know whose business it is?

Mr. VEST. It is the business of the people of the whole country when the products of one State which are not illegal shall be declared to be so by another State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the rule of the majority, of local self-government, is a farce?

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President, that is a mere platitude, and amounts to nothing. I am talking in regard to the principles of the Constitution, as I understand them, that the products of one State which are not noxious and which do not come within the police power of the State——

Mr. TILLMAN. Do you deny that this comes within the police power?

Mr. VEST. The State of South Carolina, as the Supreme Court of the United States said in passing upon this very subject, recognizes these liquors as legitimate products, because they make them themselves. The dispensary law gives South Carolina the monopoly of selling liquor to its citizens, and this bill is intended to maintain that monopoly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I confess that openly.

Mr. VEST. Very good. That is a principle which I shall not by my vote indorse.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether the bill which he has introduced, and which is now before the Senate for consideration, is not identical with the bill that was passed in August, 1890, known as the Wilson bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. Except that this clarifies the language and goes a little further.

Mr. GRAY. Does not the real difference commence at line 13, on the first page of the pending bill? After having almost quoted the language of the Wilson bill—it seems to me substantially the same—the only difference, then, is that after providing that all liquors that come into a State, after they have arrived and remain there, shall be subject to the police power of the State—which I think is right and ought to be—this bill undertakes to provide:

The States and Territories shall have absolute control of such liquors or liquids within their borders, by whomsoever produced and for whatever use imported.

What is the meaning of the words "absolute control" as there used? Is it that the State shall forfeit the property in those liquors brought into the State and remaining there, which, under the Wilson law, are made subject to the police power?

Does this bill pretend to go further and by Congressional legislation transfer the property in these liquors to the State of Delaware or South Carolina? I want to understand the scope of the bill. There are some things in it of which I am very much in favor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will take pleasure in explaining the whole matter when we get more time. The hour has now arrived for the Senate to proceed to the House of Representatives.

THE ELECTORAL COUNT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of ten minutes to 1 o'clock having arrived, the Sergeant-at-Arms will proceed to execute the order of the Senate relative to the joint session of the Senate and the House of Representatives for the purpose of opening and counting the votes of the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice-President, the Secretary, and the Sergeant-at-Arms, thereupon proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, for the purpose of participating in the count of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m., and the Vice-President resumed the chair.

Mr. BLACKBURN, one of the tellers appointed on behalf of the Senate in pursuance of the concurrent resolution of the two Houses to ascertain the result of the election for President and Vice-President of the United States, said:

Mr. President, the two Houses of Congress have met in joint convention to ascertain and count the electoral vote for the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States, in pursuance of the concurrent resolution. Thereupon the certificates of the electors of the various States of their votes for those officers were opened by the President of the Senate and delivered to the tellers; and on being examined it appeared that the votes of the several States had been cast in accordance with the list as hereinafter stated. From those votes it appeared that the whole number of electors appointed to vote for President and Vice-President of the United States for the term of office beginning on the 4th day of March, 1897, was 447, of which a majority was 224.

The state of the vote for President of the United States appeared to be:

For William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, 271.

For William J. Bryan, of the State of Nebraska, 176.

The state of the vote for Vice-President of the United States appeared to be:

For Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, 271.

For Arthur Sewall, of the State of Maine, 149.

For Thomas E. Watson, of the State of Georgia, 27.

Which result having been ascertained and counted by the tellers, was delivered by them to the President of the Senate; whereupon the President of the Senate announced the state of the vote to be that William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, had received 271 electoral votes, and that William J. Bryan, of the State of Nebraska, had received 176 electoral votes, for the office of President of the United States; and that Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, had received 271 electoral votes, that Arthur Sewall, of the State of Maine, had received 149 electoral votes, and that Thomas E. Watson, of the State of Georgia, had received 27 electoral votes, for the office of Vice-President of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report of the tellers on the state of the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States will be entered in the Journal.

The state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, has received for President of the United States 271 votes.

William J. Bryan, of the State of Nebraska, has received for President of the United States 176 votes.

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for Vice-President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, has received 271 votes.

Arthur Sewall, of the State of Maine, has received 149 votes.

Thomas E. Watson, of the State of Georgia, has received 27 votes.

This announcement of the state of the vote by the President of the Senate is, by law, a sufficient declaration that William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, is elected President of the United States; and that Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, is elected Vice-President of the United States, each for the term beginning March 4, 1897.

The report of the tellers of the state of the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States will be entered in the Journal.

The report of the tellers as entered on the Journal is as follows:

The undersigned, JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN and HENRY CABOT LODGE, tellers on the part of the Senate, and CHARLES H. GROSVENOR and JAMES D. RICHARDSON, tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, report the following as the result of the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1897:

Number of electoral votes to which each State is entitled.	State.	For President.		For Vice-President.

JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
H. C. LODGE,
Tellers on the part of the Senate.

C. H. GROSVENOR,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Tellers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT thereupon announced the state of the vote, as follows:

The state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, has received for President of the United States 271 votes; and William J. Bryan, of the State of Nebraska, has received 176 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice-President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for Vice-President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, has received 271 votes;

Arthur Sewall, of the State of Maine, has received 149 votes; and

Thomas C. Watson, of the State of Georgia, has received 27 votes.

This announcement of the state of the vote by the President of the Senate is, by law, a sufficient declaration that William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, is elected President of the United States, and that Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, is elected Vice-President of the United States, each for the term beginning March 4, 1897, and will be entered, together with a list of the votes, on the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the regular order is the unfinished business, which will be laid before the Senate; and I then desire to make a motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I thought I had the floor. I will give way to the Senator from Alabama, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Alabama upon the Nicaragua Canal bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to address myself to that proposition.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to give a notice? At the conclusion of his remarks, I shall move to take up House bill 8110, being the House bankruptcy bill.

MRS. DAISEY JOHNSON.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate reported yesterday a resolution proposing to pay out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Daisey Johnson, widow of the late Thomas R. Johnson, deceased, a laborer and acting watchman under the Architect of the Capitol, the sum of $360. The committee recommended the passage of the resolution, and it was adopted. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted for the purpose of recommitting it to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate. There was an error in the facts that makes it necessary that it should go back to the committee.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the resolution be recommitted to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 8th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1083) for the relief of George H. Plant, of the District of Columbia;

An act (S. 1675) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory;

An act (S. 1722) to approve and ratify the construction of a bridge across the Sulphur River, in the State of Arkansas, by the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company;

An act (S. 3303) to authorize the construction by the Kansas City, Shreveport and Gulf Railroad Company of a bridge across the Sabine River between the States of Louisiana and Texas; and

An act (S. 3401) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.," approved July 26, 1894.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 9th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 666) to amend section 4829 of the United States Revised Statutes concerning surgeons, assistant surgeons, and other medical officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers;

An act (S. 895) for the relief of Christopher Ellis;

An act (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan; and

An act (S. 2931) granting an increase of pension to Silas M. Stevens.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

The message further announced that the bill (S. 646) granting a pension to Francis Brown, having been presented to the President on January 28, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3247) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the pending bill was brought before the Senate some three weeks or more ago, at the request of some of the leading members of this body, believing that we would be able after a fair discussion of it to get a vote directly upon the bill. The bill was antagonized from the moment when, at the Clerk's desk, the title was read, and upon a yea-and-nay vote it was taken up. On the first effort to get it up a quorum was not present, and on the second effort it was taken up soon after the reassembling of the Senate by a strong vote of this body. Nothing has indicated to my mind from that time to this that there was not a strong majority of the Senate in favor of the bill. After various offerings, repeated by myself and by other Senators on frequent occasions, the bill has been denied a period for voting by the objections interposed by the gentlemen who oppose it. I do not deny their right to make such objections and to consume the time of the Senate if they desire to do so in obstructing the passage of the bill, notwithstanding I feel quite assured that a very great majority of the American people earnestly and anxiously desire the passage of the Nicaragua Canal bill.

I believe in leisure in legislation. I believe it is the conservative feature of our institutions, which has heretofore led to a great deal of good and hereafter perhaps will do no harm. I have always congratulated myself that in the Senate of the United States there was no previous question, because this body, organized in a conservative way under the Constitution, has a duty of resisting doubtful legislation, which sometimes produces the delay which is necessary for a serious and thorough consideration of any great proposition.

Now, no greater proposition than this, as it concerns the material welfare and the political power of the United States, was ever brought to the consideration of the Senate of the United States, or perhaps ever will be, unless it involves a question of peace and war. All who have spoken upon this bill have indicated that they desire a communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific Ocean. No man has ventured on the floor of the Senate now or heretofore, in either House, so far as I have heard, to raise the objection that it was impolitic, or unwise, or improper in any sense that we should have this great waterway communication between the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific Ocean through Nicaragua.

The explorations which have attended this subject, now covering a period of more than two centuries at intervals, and conducted by many governments, most of them abroad, across the Atlantic Ocean, the explorations conducted by our own Government, paid for by the Government, and the maps recorded in the archives of the Government, have demonstrated that amongst all the routes across the Isthmus of Darien which have been suggested, proposed, or considered possible for a waterway, Nicaragua has very decidedly the preference. It is the final conclusion of the most enlightened engineers of the world that this is the only available waterway across the Isthmus.

It has been demonstrated also by the testimony of all the engineers who have surveyed this route, commencing with General Childs, when he was employed by Mr. Vanderbilt to make the pioneer surveys, that it is entirely practicable, and it has been demonstrated that a certain sum of money will build it. I claim that sum of money to be even less than $80,000,000. Upon a proposition as to the cost of a canal of the magnitude of this one, and going through a country of the peculiar characteristics of Nicaragua, there is necessarily a wide divergence of opinion even among better informed men than is the ordinary Senator upon the subject of engineering. But making allowance for all of that divergence of opinion, the maximum cost of the canal will not exceed $150,000,000. The evidence is that it will scarcely exceed the half of that sum.

The Government of the United States is, therefore, easily in reach of the means for the completion of the canal, and it has occurred to me, Mr. President, very often and in a very vivid way, I will say, that it is the duty of the men of the present generation to avail themselves of this fortuitous advantage which they have in respect of credit, capital, and forces of every sort to construct this great waterway. I look upon the postponement of it as a dereliction of duty on the part of the representatives of the United States Government in Congress and on the part of the Executive of the United States to the extent that he has any control of such matters.

But other Senators differ with me, and they want more time. They want a longer period for reflection. They do not claim to desire to break down the canal, but they do seem to desire to postpone its construction until some indefinite time when they have become better satisfied as to what its cost will be and as to the nature and extent of the difficulties of an engineering sort that we are to encounter in its construction. I did not enter upon this proposition with any view at any time that the canal could be constructed very rapidly or very suddenly. I have always supposed naturally that there would be resistance to the promotion of the canal in the direction I have already indicated, not for the purpose of destroying it entirely, but for the purpose of delaying it until the Congress of the United States might become absolutely satisfied as to its practicability and as to its cost.

We hesitate to take the first step in this matter because we do not know when we will take the last one, or what the last step is going to cost. But, Mr. President, in that connection it is well worthy of consideration that until the first step is taken the last one never can be possible, and I must say that I think there is a want of confidence in our own convictions and an apprehension of responsibility that causes unreasonable delay in undertaking this great enterprise. Yet delays are dangerous, because embarrassments increase with every delay that invites the interference of other governments.

The Government of the United States, however, has connected itself with this subject in a way that is irrevocable. When I say irrevocable, I mean irrevocable with due respect for the honor of this nation. The first movement to get the concessions upon which this bill is based was stimulated—in fact, it was initiated—by the Executive of this Government through the Navy Department. The officers of the Government of the United States were sent out as such to make the survey and report, which was necessary as a preliminary part of the construction of the canal. The survey to which I refer now immediately was the third one that had been made. One had been made through the private enterprise of Mr. Vanderbilt by General Childs. Another one had been made—by the authority and direction of the Government of the United States—by Commodore Lull, an officer of the Navy, accompanied by a corps of engineers, who surveyed not merely the Nicaragua route, but also the Panama route. In this survey Mr. Menocal was really the chief. The third survey was still more complete and perfect, based upon the knowledge which had been acquired in the two that had preceded it, and it was made by the Government of the United States for the purpose of ascertaining and informing our citizens as to the practicability of this route, its cost, and the difficulties of every kind and character that might attend it.

That third survey was mentioned in a message of the President of the United States; the name of the engineer was given by Mr. Cleveland in his first message to Congress, and having gone by the instruction of the Government, and having made his report, against which no objection was stated, and none was supposed to be possible, citizens of the United States, thus encouraged, stepped forward for the purpose of obtaining concessions from the Government of Nicaragua for the building of the canal. The circumstances, Mr. President, were extremely promising that they, in taking this step, would have every facility afforded to them that the Government of the United States could give, and that at all events and under all circumstances and conditions they would have the care and the protection of this Government.

Nicaragua and the United States, as governments, were delighted with the opportunity afforded of building this canal based upon the report of A. G. Menocal, the Government surveyor, who mapped it and measured it, calculated its cost and all the difficulties surrounding it, and filed his maps and full report in the archives of the Government of the United States. A number of very worthy citizens of this country stepped forward, under this approval and encouragement of the Government of the United States, to obtain this concession from Nicaragua, and their attitude, Mr. President, was all the more striking, all the more peculiar because of the fact that the President of the United States had reversed the policy of his predecessor as to the authority under which this work should progress and the circumstances and conditions under which it should be conducted. The previous Administration and other Administrations antecedent to that had desired that this work should be conducted under a treaty to be concluded between Nicaragua and the United States. A treaty was negotiated, called the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty. Under that treaty we acquired what I have often in this debate denominated as almost sovereign power over a belt of country 12 miles wide, reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, through which this canal was to run.

We had agreed in that treaty to pay Nicaragua $4,000,000 for the privileges that we were to acquire under it. The President of the United States, Mr. Cleveland, in his first term, immediately upon his accession to office, found this treaty pending in the Senate, and withdrew it from the Senate, expressing his disapprobation of the treaty upon the ground, first, that it was an entangling alliance, and next, that it was a possible interference with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Having reversed the whole policy of the previous Administration in respect of the powers under which and the manner in which this canal should be built, that Administration set about to encourage private citizens to put their money in the enterprise, and there was no set of men in the United States who ever entered upon an enterprise of a public sort with better assurances of the protection and faithful guardianship of the United States in all of their rights. The men who entered upon this project were men of large ability financially, and men of the highest character. There was not an individual connected with it who had not some valuable public reputation, not perhaps official reputation, but reputation for integrity and public spirit among the people of the United States, which is better than an official reputation, because it has been won without respect to the advantages of party affiliation and entirely upon personal merit.

These excellent gentlemen obtained that concession from Nicaragua. They paid for it in gold, $150,000, and they had come under obligation to make the survey within a certain time, complete it, and file the charts with Nicaragua, subject to her approval. A further obligation into which they entered was to commence the work within a certain time; a further obligation was that they should complete the canal within a certain time. As to these last two conditions I have mentioned, the time had been enlarged by the consent of Nicaragua, as these gentlemen contend, and no cause of forfeiture has ever arisen in favor of the Government of Nicaragua against that canal. Some efforts at forfeiture have been made by the Government of Nicaragua and abandoned—not only abandoned, Mr. President, but abandoned in pursuance of diplomatic intercourse or exchange of notes between the Government of the United States and the Government of Nicaragua, and upon our demand.

So these men entered upon this field of enterprise with the most positive assurances that the United States would abide by and perform in their favor all of the duties of this great Government to citizens of the United States who had been thus encouraged to spend their money and bestow their time and labor upon this immense public enterprise.

Following the line of the concession, and in obedience to one of its express requirements, this company came to the United States and sought here a corporate charter under which it would have the powers necessary to construct this canal. The concession expressly provided for such an arrangement, and went further and located the seat of office of this company of construction in the city of New York, and they named it in the charter the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua. Thereupon they asked a charter from Congress in pursuance of this concession, Nicaragua being one of the petitioners, and Congress, exercising its power justly and within the limits of its authority, and with the sanction of Nicaragua, granted the charter, and put into it a number of restrictions, one relating to the amount of the capital stock, and another relating to the amount of bonds and the conditions under which the bonds might be issued.

The company accepted the charter as it was granted by Congress, organized under it, and Nicaragua, as a Government—not merely as a stockholder in that corporation, but as a Government—acting under the concession and in pursuance of a reservation of a right of that sort in the concession, appointed her minister to the United States a director in the Maritime Canal Company and participated in its organization. This director, Mr. President, represented the sovereign State of Nicaragua, and Nicaragua has continued to keep a director all the time in office in the Maritime Canal Company, he having been required by the by-laws of the company to take an oath of office, which he took, and was sworn into office regularly as one of the directors of that company.

After progress had been made and $2,000,000 or more had been spent in the actual construction of this canal, after the surveys had been accepted by the Government of Nicaragua, then a question arose between Nicaragua and Costa Rica as to whether Nicaragua had the right to grant this concession without intrenching upon the rights and border line of the State of Costa Rica. Nicaragua knew of this difficulty when that concession was made; she did not disclose it; she made no mention of it; and this company found themselves in a situation where they were compelled to get a concession from the Government of Costa Rica or else abandon their plan entirely and give up the canal, for Costa Rica and Nicaragua divided the right of navigation of the San Juan River between them, and that river was the point across which the dam had to be constructed at Ochoa for the purpose of backing the water up and making slack-water navigation into Lake Managua.

When this was discovered, Nicaragua was consulted about it, and she objected to this company getting any concession from Costa Rica. Those two Republics had ill blood between them, and have yet. The company had to set about in such way as they could, with the assistance and advice of this Government, to get the Government of Nicaragua to consent to a concession from Costa Rica in the same terms with the concession that had been made by Nicaragua to this company. In the effort to negotiate with Costa Rica this company was beset by Nicaragua's objections to Costa Rica having anything to do with it, and thereupon the conclusion was reached, very naturally and unavoidably, indeed, that Nicaragua had determined to avail herself of the quarrel between that State and Costa Rica to prevent the consummation of these concessions and to take all the money that had been paid and all the surveys that had been made, so as to appropriate them to herself without recompense to these men. The Government of the United States intervened and the question of the boundary between Nicaragua and Costa Rica was submitted to the President of the United States as arbitrator, and he decided in favor of Costa Rica—that she had the joint right of navigation of the San Juan River, and that her boundaries lay upon the line that she had suggested and claimed. Thereupon it became entirely obvious, beyond all question, that Costa Rica must be consulted and a concession must be obtained from her. The concession was so obtained, and these two concessions are the basis upon which this bill is founded.

After this award by the President of the United States, and after this concession by the Government of Costa Rica, Nicaragua still protested and objected, and this company had to explain to Nicaragua that she had not asserted the supremacy of the sovereignty of Costa Rica over that line, although our own President had so decided in an arbitration; but that they had merely taken a quitclaim title from Costa Rica. That was not satisfactory to Nicaragua, and when her director appointed to this company came here to take his seat on the board in New York the director from Costa Rica was there also, and objection was made on the part of Nicaragua to the director from Costa Rica taking his seat. They were both ministers of their respective Governments accredited to this Government. That difficulty, however, was composed between these delegates in the presence of that company, and record of it was made, which I have read here in the course of this debate. The minister from Costa Rica and the minister from Nicaragua, representing their respective Governments as directors on that board, took the oath of office in the presence of each other, and we—I say "we;" I mean the people and the Government of the United States, including Mr. Blaine—supposed that all these difficulties had passed away and that there would be no longer any interference on this technical question of supposed national pride between the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

It will be seen that this company has had embarrassments that it was not entitled to have, and has been interrupted and obstructed by Nicaragua in a way that ought not to have been done, in an unjust way. But by continual solicitation and constant exertions it has overcome these difficulties and finally united these two States in the board of directors, acting with directors appointed under the laws of the United States. Now we have a situation. Here are the laws of the United States on the one hand, made by the actual consent of Costa Rica and Nicaragua. The laws of three Republics united in harmony in establishing the same rights. There are laws upon the statute books of both of those Republics recognizing the validity of this act of Congress and all the powers which are conferred under it. Here is the frequent intervention of the Government of the United States through its ministers, as late as Mr. Gresham, to reconcile and compose the troubles and difficulties which arose between these different States in respect of the validity of those concessions, of the fact that this company had fully complied with all of its obligations under it, and so on.

Mr. President, grouping all of these facts together—I have not stated them all by many—but grouping these facts together, they constitute a situation between the Government of the United States and the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica which is as explicit, as serious, as solemn, and as obligatory upon those two States as if every word that had been uttered by them, every law enacted by them, and all these historical facts to which I have referred, which are recorded in the books of legislation here in this Congress, had been embodied in a treaty, and set forth, signed, and sealed, and ratifications exchanged between these different Governments. This is a situation from which we can not be driven, nor can we surrender it without dishonor.

While this has been going on Great Britain, if she has an interest under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which is in the slightest degree adverse to anything that has been done in the Congress of the United States, by this Maritime Canal Company, by Nicaragua, or by Costa Rica or Nicaragua, has had full opportunity to protest. Nothing has been kept in concealment; no light has been hid under a bushel; everything has been open and patent, and the Government of Great Britain has made no obstruction and no objection of any kind whatever in respect of any part of this transaction. Upon that ground alone she would be estopped from now interposing to break up a relation that has been thus created between Nicaragua and Costa Rica and the United States. That is a plain fact that I think no one will undertake to deny.

But beyond that, as is explained in the report of the Senate committee made to the present session of Congress, it is demonstrated—I will say demonstrated to the satisfaction of our State Department, and I have authority for saying that—it is demonstrated that we have, lying at the basis of this concession, continuing and attending it all the way through, a treaty with Nicaragua which justifies every step that we have taken and every step we propose to take, every provision that is in the bill which is now before the Senate. So the rights of this Maritime Canal Company and of the United States, its creator, its friend, and its protector, as it ought to be, are based not merely upon the doctrine of estoppel, operating against Great Britain, but they are based also upon positive treaty guaranties between Nicaragua and the United States.

I will remark, as I pass along, that British subjects might have acquired the same rights by concession and under a treaty which Nicaragua made with Great Britain ten years before she made her treaty with us. They would have had precisely the same rights that our citizens have under the treaty with Nicaragua made in 1868—I believe that is the date of it.

Here, then, we have an assemblage of authorities based upon concessions, based upon the doctrine of estoppel as applied between governments, and based upon our actual treaty obligations and engagements with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, on which this action of the Senate of the United States is now predicated.

After this brief statement, I must say that there has been intervention for the purpose of preventing the execution of this contract, not by the British Government in name, but by British subjects. They are doubtless emissaries, and they have been operating all the time, and are operating to-day, to prevent us from the consummation of this great duty we owe to our own people. When we are in the executive sessions of this body I shall feel perfectly at liberty to make these statements upon authority that I think no Senator will question. I can not make them in the open Senate, I can not give my authority in the open Senate and the statement of facts which has been communicated to me, because I am under confidence not to do it; but there is not a Senator in this body who shall not have full access to the means of information which I possess when I state in my place that I am thoroughly satisfied that up to this hour British intervention is continually operating to prevent us from availing ourselves of the benefits we have acquired the right to establish under these concessions.

Stating it in that view, and assuming for the nonce that the Senate will at least suppose that there is something of substance in the statement I make in regard to this interference, I wish to ask this question of the Senate—and I regret that the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] who is soon to be Secretary of State is not here to hear the question which I want to propound to the Senate—I ask the question whether or not the Government of the United States, under these circumstances, can afford to withdraw its support from these concessions and yield the ground that we have thus gained, lay it all aside, detach ourselves from it, disaffirm it as well as disregard it, and trust the future of the United States in respect of this great canal to the opportunity which may occur, or which may exist hereafter, for creating an agreement between Nicaragua and Costa Rica and ourselves by treaty, under which agreement we shall be able to consummate this great work?

We have now reached a crisis in this case, we have reached a diplomatic crisis in this matter, which is to be determined for or against our country by the vote of the Senate. If we vote that these concessions are not a sufficient basis for our assistance in this canal, and if we vote, as has been stated here, that no canal can be built by private enterprise, as it is called, or by a corporation, but that the canal, if built, must be built by the Government of the United States, we detach ourselves from those concessions absolutely, and we destroy them. After having gone as far as we have, after having committed ourselves as a Government as far as we have, after having involved the rights of our people as far as we have, innocent and honest men, who have spent four and a half millions of money out of their own pockets in that country, and who have left there, for whomsoever shall succeed to these rights of ours, very valuable property—if we shall take that course, disconnect ourselves from this establishment entirely, and leave these concessions to perish, then, Mr. President, we must turn our eyes to the future and see what we can do to reclaim the situation we have thus thrown away by a new endeavor to create diplomatic arrangements with those two Republics by which we shall be enabled to complete this canal. When the probability of completing this canal became serious, as I will say, imminent, when by a vote given here two years ago the Senate of the United States affirmed everything that I affirm here to-day, by 10 majority, and this body concluded that these rights should be enforced, the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica made the heavens bright with their rejoicings because we had done that thing two years ago, then we all supposed that the difficulties had passed, that obstruction had disappeared, except such as might naturally result from so great an undertaking requiring so great an amount of money.

Now, suppose that we depart from all this, that we reverse our action or throw away what we have done, and we surrender our attitude upon this question, what next? We have then got to treat with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, who are in the immediate possession of the line of transit, the only line in the world that is worth a cent for a waterway between these two oceans. Then another party appears upon the field. They do not attempt in Central America a political union, but three of those States attempt a diplomatic union, a union for foreign purposes, and they constitute what they call a diet. That diet sends a minister here, and the first thing, and the only thing that he does—and it is the only thing for which he came here, I feel quite certain—is to work into the Senate of the United States a protest and an argument against the passage of this bill; and Senators of the United States are required to get up here and answer his arguments, and the arguments of other Senators based entirely upon his statements, every one of which is proven to be untrue.

But that intervention comes from this political organization in Central America, and it gives us a foretaste of what we may expect when we throw away our present rights and undertake to negotiate with Central America. Instead of having to deal with the two States which are directly and materially interested in this canal, we then shall have as many of the Central American States as choose to participate with a view of disturbing relations between the United States and Nicaragua and Costa Rica, as they are fixed in this concession, in these laws, breaking them up, hindering and obstructing any further step on our part. The Secretary of State who would step deliberately out upon that sort of field from the ground of security and repose we occupy now might be compared to a man who would strip his stockings from his feet and step on a red-hot gridiron from a cool floor.

It is not far to see in the future; it will not be long until we shall have realized the disaster of the course that we are invited to take to-day; and unless, Mr. President, all the manhood has been leeched out of us by contracts to keep the peace, or in some other way, it will not be two years until we find ourselves appealed to to exert our utmost power for the purpose of reclaiming the attitude in those States that we now idly throw away.

That has been the chief cause of my solicitude for urging a vote of the Senate upon this bill at this session. I might say it has been the only cause, because I have been informed that in the other House nearly 300 of the membership of that great body have petitioned the Committee on Rules to give a day to the hearing of this bill, reported in the identical words contained in the bill on our desks to-day, and that has been refused.

In view of that fact, I had very little expectation that I should be enabled to press the bill into the form of a legislative enactment through both Houses at this session of Congress, and hence my reluctance in bringing this bill forward. I should never have done it at this session of Congress, in view of the difficulties which I anticipated and the shortness of time in which we have got to consider it, but for the fact that I was urged to do it by some of the most able men in this body, some of the most influential, men who have such position here as to give great significance, if not absolute authority, to their request.

Considering this subject, Mr. President, in the light of political affiliation and history, I should have felt warranted in pressing the bill before this body as a Democratic measure but for the fact that for the last two or three Administrations of this Government the persons in authority and the people of the United States in their political conventions on both sides have espoused the Nicaragua Canal. The Republican party has been particularly emphatic in its espousal of the canal and in its effort also to get legislation on the subject. The last message which President Harrison sent to the Congress of the United States was a powerful argument in favor of the building of the canal, and I was even censured by some of my Democratic friends because the President of the United States did me the honor to refer to me by name in his annual message in respect to some opinions that I had advanced on the subject. I felt no embarrassment from that source, because the Nicaraguan Canal question is entirely outside American lines, and I have no party politics that run beyond our territorial bounds, and will never have. No man can suggest to me a political question that goes outside of our political boundaries in respect to our foreign relations that will cause the least bias in my opinions.

But as a Democrat I have had occasion to quote, and I will do it again, the Democratic authority, if any authority is needed, for the attitude that I have taken upon this question, because I desire to have it understood by the people whom I represent here in connection with my honored colleague, who is listening to me and whose retirement from the Senate is a personal affliction to me and will be a loss to this country of no light character. In 1856, in the convention that named James Buchanan for President of the United States, the following resolutions were adopted:

1. Resolved, That there are questions connected with the foreign policy of this country which are inferior to no domestic question whatever. The time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in favor of free seas and progressive free trade throughout the world, and, by solemn manifestations, to place their moral influence at the side of their successful example.

2. Resolved, That our geographical and political position with reference to the other States of this continent, no less than the interest of our commerce and the development of our growing power, requires that we should hold as sacred the principles involved in the Monroe doctrine; their bearing and import admit of no misconstruction; they should be applied with unbending rigidity.

3. Resolved, That the great highway which nature, as well as the assent of the states most immediately interested in its maintenance, has marked out for a free communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans constitutes one of the most important achievements realized by the spirit of modern times and the unconquerable energy of our people. That result should be secured by a timely and efficient exertion of the control which we have the right to claim over it, and no power on earth should be suffered to impede or clog its progress by any interference with the relations it may suit our policy to establish between our Government and the governments of the states within whose dominions it lies. We can, under no circumstances, surrender our preponderance in the adjustment of all questions arising out of it.

I have thought that as a Democrat that was quite authority enough for me to advocate the bill without incurring the displeasure or the censure or the criticism of any man in this body who claims to be a Democrat. Moreover, I thought so because the first convention that nominated Mr. Cleveland and the second—I think I am correct in the statement as to the first—expressly indorsed and approved the Nicaraguan Canal and made it a public question among the people of the United States.

Now, whatever hopes I might have had of conveying in behalf of my party an impression that it was not antagonistic to the canal and to American interests have been somewhat dampened, if not dissipated, by the situation in which we are found in respect of this great measure. But still I think I have room to appeal to my Democratic brethren that they will not coolly place this country in the attitude of destroying rights which have accrued under our laws in favor of our own citizens, destroying obligations which Nicaragua and Costa Rica have accorded to us under circumstances quite as solemn as if they had been embodied in a treaty, and throwing away the opportunity of building this canal under the existing situation, which, Mr. President, will never be improved by any treaty that even the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] who is now here will be able to negotiate with those people.

I said to that honorable Senator the other day, and I will repeat it now, that if he were rolled into Metternich and Talleyrand he would find himself overmatched by these little Republics down there, which will conspire all the time, in connection with British people and British advocates in the United States, to break up and to beat him in any effort he may make to negotiate a treaty for this canal. He will never make one. When he gets it into the Senate, if he should make one, it will meet a worse fate than the Zavala treaty, because of the one-third of this body who may be found here to oppose American interests. The railroads in the United States have power enough to break down their great competitor, the waterway through the Nicaraguan Canal, and they will have it for the next twenty years, and if they have it for twenty years they will have it forever. Their peculiar friends are not likely to be absent from the lobby when their selfish greed is seeking to feed upon the products of industry. They are about the Capitol now, and will surely return to dictate legislation as to the canal.

We are not dealing with impotent forces, unorganized forces, but we are dealing with men of enormous power, who control Presidents, Senates, Houses of Representatives, in respect to the railroads, with an absolute and despotic will which the Government of the United States has not even the ability to resist, and that power will appear here, Mr. President, to break down the treaty that the honorable Senator the other day spoke of so hopefully, and which he expects to negotiate with those Republics, so as to get the control of this subject into our hands as a nation. But when you try to do that you will have still another controversy before you. You have a contestant who has never ceased to oppose a canal through the Isthmus except under its own control. What meant the stringing out of that band of Indians, so-called, the Mosquito Indians, across the mouth of the San Juan River, under the protectorate of Great Britain, at the close of the Mexican war, when we had acquired our possessions on the Pacific Coast? What did it mean? Childs and Vanderbilt saw what it meant when they went together for the purpose of getting the money from Barings, and made the arrangement with them to get the money to execute the first concession that Nicaragua ever made to American citizens. The Barings consented, and were perfectly able to advance the money, then only $29,000,000.

They looked over Childs's plans and examined them, and they had them examined by British engineers, and determined that they would accept them and would advance the money. One of the agents of Mr. Vanderbilt, who was then familiar with the facts, and is now a great lawyer in California, wrote me a letter, which I read in the Senate, to inform me that the negotiation with the Barings was broken up by the express intervention of the authorities of the British Government.

Commencing then, step by step, time after time, in every effort that has been made, in all the negotiations that took place, beginning with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and the negotiations that followed it in every step that has been made from that day down to this hour, the Government of Great Britain, represented by its diplomatic agents or else by her people, has been upon the Isthmus for the purpose of obstructing and preventing the people of the United States from going through there. Mr. President, I would be a coward not to say this, and yet I do not say it in a spiteful or disparaging way; because Great Britain would be untrue to her history if she did not pursue methods of this kind in respect to that canal as she has in respect to every commercial advantage in this world which she has ever thought would be of benefit to her. But she is there and has been there on all occasions and is there now. Her vigilance and energy are unceasing. The honorable Senator from Ohio, when he comes to look over the field, to touch the influences that are to prevent his action, which doubtless he will exert most patriotically in behalf of the people of the United States, will find himself absolutely circumvented—absolutely.

Under existing circumstances, if my conceptions of this situation are true and my conjectures have the color of truth in them at all, let me ask, What is the reason or the excuse for our yielding the attitude we have now? Why shall we throw all of these rights to the dogs and with them the honorable duties that we owe to these honorable American citizens? What is persuading us or deterring us from taking this necessary course in respect to the matter? I will not undertake to characterize what I think is the motive, but I will say that there is a feeling of indifference on the part of the representatives of the United States in Congress, and there has been for years, toward the rights of American citizens, doubtless borrowed from the inefficiency of our Executives in the enforcement of the rights of our citizens in foreign countries; doubtless a shadow that has fallen upon this great assemblage from the White House, creating an indifference toward the rights of American citizens in foreign parts, which, to say the least of it, is not creditable to our Government. If we meet our duties to the people of the United States, their just demands upon us, sir, we will step out and do something for these people, to take care of them and their rights when they are unjustly assailed and impeached by foreigners.

Now, the minister from the Greater Republic of Central America, as they call the new organization, in the message he has sent here, so applauded by Senators on this floor, has openly and boldly announced through the Secretary of State that these concessions are now forfeited—not merely that they are forfeitable or that grounds of forfeiture exist, but he asserts in the names of those Governments that the concessions are forfeited. Mr. President, that subject has undergone investigation by our Secretaries of State upon the identical facts and the identical points stated by the minister, and they have announced that they are not forfeited, and the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica have consented that they are not forfeited. Yet he comes here, after all this, and through his message to the Senate declares that the rights of the United States and of our citizens are already gone; that they are lost.

It was upon that proposition that I desired to have a vote of the Senate. I can not get it directly. I can not get a straight vote upon it. But the length of time that the bill has been before this body and the votes that have been recorded here on the question of taking up the bill, on the question of considering it, the various opportunities which have been offered in the kindliest possible spirit to get a vote upon it, stand here as a record that can not be impeached; and I assail the impeachment of it now in advance and say that the Senate of the United States now, as it did two years ago, stands by the rights of the Government and the rights of these people under the concessions. We do not abandon them. Neither, sir, will we put it in the power of Nicaragua or Costa Rica to take any advantage of these unjust conditions. Neither will we submit to any injustice to be done to this Government or the people of this Government, citizens engaged in this great enterprise, because the minister has come here and has found advocates on this floor to assert his proposition that the concessions are absolutely forfeited. I bring up the issue straight and square. The Senate of the United States and the Administration whose President was announced to-day in the House of Representatives will have to meet it. It can not any longer be concealed. There is no doubt about it now. The issue is presented to us and presented in the very presence of the incoming Government, whether or not we shall abandon all we have got here lawfully and, by the consent of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, throw it away and, having wiped out the record of all our rights, enter upon a new negotiation with them for new rights to build the canal.

I desire to give notice, Mr. President—we are informed that there is to be an extra session of Congress—that at the earliest possible day in the coming session I intend to offer this bill again, and I intend to do what in me lies to try to have the bill enacted into law. If the glory and the honor of this magnificent work in the closing days of the century shall fall into the hands of a Republican President, I for one shall say, "Thank God, we have a Republican President who is willing to go step by step with his fellow-citizens of the United States in the advancement of the power and the glory of this great Republic."

Before I take my seat, which I will do in a few moments, in justice to an honorable man who has been maligned and abused as honorable men often are, merely because he has been efficient and courageous, I desire to put into the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement made by Mr. A. G. Menocal, which I will not stop to read, but which the reporters will find on pages 334 to 337 of the report, in respect of a matter where his veracity has been impugned. That matter is as to whether this man, who, personally, has spent days and months in the exploration of every foot of the line of this canal, has ever actually been over the line. The statement has been made that he has never actually been over the line. The statement would amount to nothing, perhaps, except that a man, who is an engineer officer of the Army, Colonel Ludlow, and who, in a spasm of vanity and self-sufficiency when he went before a committee of the other House, after his functions as commissioner had expired and he had made his report, with a view of casting odium, distrust, and a shadow upon the reputation of Mr. Menocal, stated and adhered to it that Mr. Menocal had never been over a certain part of this line which is described in Mr. Menocal's response to him, which I have asked to have put into the RECORD.

Colonel Ludlow described himself on that occasion, when he got into antagonism with a member of the House through his supercilious conduct, as being there representing the Government of the United States. While I knew that he had represented the Government of the United States as an engineer officer here in the District of Columbia, while I knew that he had represented the Government as an ornamental attaché to the embassy at London, while I knew that he had been flitting about in these nice positions from place to place and from time to time, I did not know that as a commissioner, after he had made his report and the President had sent it in, he still represented the Government of the United States, and that it was the Government of the United States who was accusing Menocal of falsehood when Ludlow got up and made the statement. I did not know that.

This is Mr. Menocal's reply to that gratuitous misrepresentation, and as to some other statements, quite as unfounded, that Colonel Ludlow, in a spirit of jealous injustice, volunteered before the House committee.

WEDNESDAY, May 6, 1896.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce this day met, Hon. WILLIAM P. HEPBURN in the chair.

STATEMENT OF MR. A. G. MENOCAL.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Menocal, we will now hear you.

Mr. MENOCAL. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I have been directed by the Secretary of the Navy to report to the chairman of the committee, which I now have the honor to do, and I will be very glad to comply with your wishes in any matter you may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose the order was made for the purpose of giving you an opportunity, if you desire to avail yourself of it, to make any statement to the committee in connection with the subject under inquiry.

Mr. MENOCAL. A great deal has been said before this committee which I have not had an opportunity to read or to hear. I have heard certain statements which have been made here by Colonel Ludlow, however, and upon those statements I would like to make a few remarks, and afterwards, if the members of the committee who have heard the whole of the testimony desire to ask me any questions in regard to Colonel Ludlow's statement, I will be very glad to reply to them to the best of my ability. I stated when I was before the committee but a few days ago that the Nicaragua Canal board had spent two weeks, more or less, in the examination of the line of the canal. When I made this statement, I had in view only the line of the canal as located by the Nicaragua Canal Company, and which I supposed this board had been called upon to examine. I was not considering at the time the whole country of Nicaragua.

You hear frequently travelers who have been through Nicaragua, having landed on the Pacific coast, traveled across the country and come out at Grey Town, tell you they have been over the country and that the canal route is thoroughly practicable, that they have been all over it, over every foot of the ground, and that there can be no doubt as to its practicability; but it was not that kind of examination I had in mind when I said the board had spent only two weeks, more or less, in the examination of the line. I had in view such an examination as an engineer would have to make of the physical conditions on the spot, so as to be able to ascertain and to weigh the difficulties and facilities that those conditions would present in the construction of such a work as this, and this examination, I know from the nature of the ground, can only be made and this information can only be obtained by going over every foot of the ground.

I said in my statement that two weeks, more or less, had been spent in the examination of the canal route and its vicinity. When I said its vicinity, I meant such parts of the country as will be more or less affected by the construction of the canal—that is to say, such points along the canal route where embankments were to be built. They are not on the axis of the canal, but nevertheless form a part of the project of the canal itself. Now, I will read, for the information of the committee, and in order to vindicate myself as to the statement I made before, a concise synopsis of the movements of the board while in Nicaragua, and then I will leave it to the committee to decide whether I was correct or not in my statement. The board arrived at Nicaragua on the 13th of May, and remained at Grey Town until the 21st. They left Grey Town on the 21st for the lake and river, taking the steamer at Grey Town and going up the river to the lake. They arrived at the lake on the 23d of May, having spent two days in going up the river, of which one day was spent on that portion of the river which is not affected by the construction of the canal.

The 24th was employed by the board in making a trip up the Rio Frio, which empties into the lake, for a distance of perhaps 6 or 10 miles—the exact distance is immaterial—and then they went about 5 miles into the lake and returned to Fort San Carlos. The steamer which was to take the board across the lake was not there, and it was repeatedly stated by the members of the board in my presence and in the presence of those who were around that the time from the evening of the 24th until the evening of the 26th, when the steamer arrived at San Carlos to take them across the lake, was absolutely wasted time; so they were two days there which were declared by the members of the board to be a loss of time to them. They left Fort San Carlos on the evening of the 26th. On the morning of the 27th they arrived at San Jorge, on the west shore of the lake, and the assistants of the board landed there with certain provisions, utensils, etc., and the board continued on their way to the capital, at Managua. They made a visit to Granada and Managua and returned on the following day, in the evening, to Rivas.

When I was before the committee previously, I had no notes with me. I did not know at the time what was the nature of the investigation to be made by the committee and did not come prepared to answer certain questions which were put to me. I had been seriously ill for ten days, having left my bed to come here, hardly able to stand up; my memory, perhaps, was not quite clear, and as I had no opportunity to correct my notes they were printed containing numerous errors, as I had the honor to report to the chairman of the committee soon after I saw the printed testimony. I said then that the board returned from Granada to Rivas and spent two or three days in hunting for horses or other means of transportation to go to Brito to commence the examination of the canal line. That was a mistake. They did not spend two or three days in Rivas at the time; but that is immaterial, because I will show by the records that they were in Rivas five days instead of three.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. During what time?

Mr. MENOCAL. I will let you know. I am going to follow it up, so there will be no misunderstanding about this. My veracity has been questioned, and I want to show the committee what foundation I had for making the statement, and will then leave it to the committee to say whether I was correct or not. They left Rivas on the morning of the following day and arrived near Brito about 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon and went into camp. Up to that time nothing had been seen of the canal route. We had crossed the line at one point on horseback and traveled by roads entirely away from the line of the canal to this camping place, and spent the night there. On the following day, in the morning, they started for Brito. They arrived at the harbor of Brito at, I believe, 8 or 9 o'clock, and the examination of the canal route was commenced there.

It is useless to follow the board step by step; but I will say—and if I am mistaken I hope to be corrected right here—that the examination was commenced on the 30th and that the board returned to Rivas on the evening of the 1st of June, having spent three days between Brito and the lake in the examination of that portion of the canal route. Some portions of the line were not examined. That section running through the proposed basin of Tola was not examined by the board. They traveled by the road on the hills; but that is of no consequence, so I will call that the vicinity of the line, and I count those three days as spent in the examination of the canal route.

The board, as I said, returned to Rivas on the 1st of June, and remained there until the 6th. They started on the evening of the 6th, arriving at Ochoa on the afternoon of the 9th of June. Immediately after arriving there they started to make some examination of the surroundings. On the following day they went up the ridge lines of the proposed basin of the San Carlos, and spent two days there. They came back to camp late in the afternoon of the second day, the 11th, and on the 12th they started on the examination of the route from Ochoa to Grey Town. Six days were spent in the examination of that portion of the line from Ochoa to Grey Town, arriving at Grey Town on the afternoon of the 18th. The board left Grey Town for the United States on the 24th.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The 24th of what month?

Mr. MENOCAL. Of June. Consequently, you will see——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. For the United States, or Panama?

Mr. MENOCAL. I mean on their way, practically, to the United States. They touched at Costa Rica and went to Panama, but I understood they were on their way home, touching at other places. I had nothing to do with that, and it is immaterial where they went, and I do not know. Now, if you look over these different dates and add the time spent on the route of the canal, you will find they arrived at Nicaragua on the 13th of May, and leaving on the 24th of June the board was forty-one days in the country. Of those forty-one days, fourteen days were spent in Grey Town and five days in Rivas. That makes nineteen days; one day visiting the capital makes twenty days; one day traveling from Rivas to Brito to commence the examination of the canal route makes twenty-one; three days traveling over the portions of the country not affected by the construction of the canal makes twenty-four days, and two days at San Carlos makes twenty-six. If you deduct that from forty-one days, I think you find that the board devoted to the examination of the canal line from the Pacific to the Atlantic, or vice versa, as one may call it, fifteen days, including the examination of such portions of the axis of the canal as were gone over, and also the sites of the dams, embankments, etc. That is all I have to say in that regard, and I think my diary is correct in every respect.

There is another question in which my veracity has also been questioned here. It has been stated here that the engineer members of this board were the first engineers who visited a certain portion of this line.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only engineers, it was stated.

Mr. MENOCAL. I am glad you correct me, because I only get this from hearsay, as I have not seen the testimony sufficiently to enable me to pick out from it what is essential and deserves consideration. I have been told that the statement has been made here that this board are the only engineers who have visited some section of the Nicaragua Canal line, that section being between the Danta and Nicholson streams, along the line of the embankments of the San Francisco.

Now, with a view of further meeting the statement of Colonel Ludlow, not by any arrangement, but by the merest accident, I came across a gentleman here whom I happen to know, and whom I have known for several years, Mr. Charles E. Kern. Mr. Kern was secretary to Mr. Menocal at the time he was making this survey for the company. That was the fourth survey of the canal which has been made. He addressed to me a letter on the 6th day of January, 1897, in which he says:

UNITED STATES SENATE, PRESS GALLERY,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1897.

DEAR SIR: Referring to my conversation with you yesterday in regard to the statement made by Colonel Ludlow, in effect that Mr. Menocal had not been over the embankment line of the San Francisco basin, I would say:

I was present in the room of the House Committee on Commerce last spring when Colonel Ludlow said that he and the other members of the Commission of which he was chairman were the only ones who had ever gone over the entire line of the canal, and when questioned as to this statement, pointed to the map of Nicaragua, at a place on the San Francisco line of embankments, near the mouth of the San Francisco River, as the place where Mr. Menocal had never been.

I was at once struck by this statement, because I had a clear remembrance of the time when Mr. Menocal had gone out frequently from the headquarters of the company on San Francisco Island to direct the surveying work on that particular line of embankment. I was in the employ of the company, stationed at that time (winter of 1887-88) on San Francisco Island, which is at the mouth of the San Francisco River. I remember the period of time when Mr. Menocal was paying especial attention to an examination of the San Francisco embankment line. Parties were at work there and he, on numerous occasions, left camp to direct their work, which was carried on in the locality referred to by Colonel Ludlow.

The embankment line, being the keynote of the "upper route," was the subject of much careful work, and I remember the great amount of personal attention that Mr. Menocal gave to it. You may well imagine my surprise when Colonel Ludlow stated that Mr. Menocal had never been over that line. The statement seemed still more remarkable because it was Mr. Menocal's preliminary surveys in that vicinity made previous to 1887 that had resulted in his causing a thorough examination of that line in order to demonstrate whether the range of hills forming the groundwork of that embankment were of a character to make the "upper route" practicable, and it was on the existence of such a range of hills that the practicability of the "upper route" rested.

When Colonel Ludlow claimed credit of having gone over that ground in his flying visit in a manner more thorough than was that of Mr. Menocal, it appeared to me quite as absurd as would have been an attempt on his part to claim the discovery of America, and to belittle Columbus and take from him the credit for that feat, because he (Colonel Ludlow) might believe he had rested his feet on parts of the American Continent which had never been pressed by the feet of Columbus. As you are aware, Mr. Menocal was the first man to suggest the practicability of what is known as the "upper route," and that practicability rested upon the existence of the chain of hills forming the groundwork of the San Francisco embankment. I have never seen this fact called in question, and never heard anyone attempt to belittle Mr. Menocal's credit for that discovery until Colonel Ludlow claimed to have gone over places never traversed by Mr. Menocal. Perhaps every man who has gone on the line of the Nicaragua Canal may claim the distinction of having placed his feet where no other human feet have trod, and for any one man to claim that he has materially and in detail covered every foot of ground would be to confess extraordinary feet. But with my remembrance of the great attention Mr. Menocal was paying to the embankment line and of the numerous occasions when he left camp to go over it, the idea that Colonel Ludlow, in the few days he was in that vicinity, had in any way gone over that line more thoroughly than did Mr. Menocal seemed to me the height of absurdity.

Very truly, yours,

CHAS. E. KERN.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. Who is the gentleman who writes the letter?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Kern, a very reputable gentleman, living here in the city.

Mr. Menocal, having seen that he had been arraigned on the floor of the Senate by the statement of Mr. Ludlow, which has been brought in here, also wrote me a letter on the same subject. He is a modest gentleman. He does not indulge in strong expressions about anybody or anything; but he denies in this letter absolutely the correctness of Mr. Ludlow's statement.

NAVY-YARD, New York, February 8, 1897.

DEAR SIR: I have just seen in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 5, page 1652, under the heading "Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," a letter from Lieut. Col. William Ludlow relative to certain statements made by him to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in May last, to the effect that the United States Nicaragua Canal board were the only engineers who have been over the entire route as laid down, and to my testimony before the same committee in opposition to that statement, in which it is claimed by Lieutenant-Colonel Ludlow I admitted the correctness of the above statement, inasmuch as I had not been over the San Francisco embankment line as located through the hills between Ochoa and the east divide, and also had not been over the line of the San Carlos ridge embankments since either of these important lines had been laid down.

I beg to quote the testimony referred to as the San Francisco embankments. I stated:

"I explored that region, I pointed out on every one of those hills where embankments should be built, and put the engineers to work developing the topography. Its development was finally concluded about 1891. I was rearranging the line of embankments just before I left, in order to conform it to the topography as developed by the engineers, and some slight changes were made from one hill to another in order to get a better location; and I will add that since that final development of the topography by the engineers I have not been over the line finally located over those hills, but I have been over every individual hill, and I selected the line of embankments."

As regards the San Carlos Ridge line, I stated in my testimony:

"If he (referring to Lieutenant-Colonel Ludlow) refers to the San Carlos region, I have explored the San Carlos and all those hills, commencing in 1873 and again in 1885. I have examined that region and those hills in the valley of the San Carlos, and placed engineers there to develop the topography, and from the developments of the engineers the embankment line was laid down. Since that embankment line was laid down, I have not been over the line myself. There was no necessity for doing so. That is a statement of the facts. I selected the line for the embankments over those hills, and while there may have been slight changes in the final location of these embankments from one hill to another, that strikes me as rather immaterial, as I have been over the ground, every foot of it."

In view of the above plain statement of facts, Lieutenant-Colonel Ludlow's assertion that the Nicaragua Canal board are the only engineers who have been over the entire route of the canal, on the ground that I had not visited a portion of the line laid down by me after the engineers had measured it with a tape and put the pegs in the ground, seems to be a disingenuous misrepresentation of the facts.

Had I known at the time I gave my testimony that the lieutenant-colonel intended to be so precise in his statement, I would certainly have reminded him of what he well knew to be a fact when he appeared before the committee. He knows quite well that the board did not go over many miles of the route as laid down, in some places not approaching it by thousands of feet, and that the only knowledge the board possess of the advantages and disadvantages for construction of the canal presented by the topography over that distance has been obtained from an inspection of the plans of the company. This is particularly true of those sections of the route between Grey Town and Lock No. 2, and from the western end of the divide cut to the crossing of the Chanchos on the east side, and through the valley of Tola west of the lake, in all a distance of about 20 miles of the canal route as laid down, which the board did not go over. Yet it is in these sections of the canal where the board propose radical changes in location.

There are other portions of the route, between Ochoa and the San Francisco and between the eastern end of the divide cut and Lock No. 2, where the examination made by the board was limited to crossing the located line where it met the paths of travel or at the sites of locks, where only a few minutes were spent.

It has not been my purpose nor my province to criticise in any way the distribution by the board of the time at its disposal while in Nicaragua. If I have stated that they spent but about fifteen days in the actual examination of the canal route between Grey Town and Brito, it was to show that the examination of 170 miles of canal route, including the sites of numerous important works, such as locks, dams, embankments, etc., extending over many miles of hilltops, in a country covered by dense tropical growth and without roads or convenient means of transportation, had, necessarily, to be in a great measure superficial.

That the board was forty days in Nicaragua, and that a portion of this time was spent in examining Grey Town and its surroundings, and in obtaining a general knowledge of the country, has not been questioned, nor does it in any way disprove my statement as to the time actually spent in examining the canal location.

As to Lieutenant-Colonel Ludlow's assertions as to errors and omissions in the plans of the company, and to what he chooses to call fallacious estimates of cost, I beg to refer to my written statement submitted to the House committee, in which I endeavored to meet the objections to the plans raised by the board and to show that its recommendations were based on lack of information and insufficient consideration of all the features of the problem, and not on the line of either economy or of good engineering.

Respectfully, yours,

A. G. MENOCAL,
Civil Engineer, United States Navy.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Now, the truth is just this: Those forests in Central America are so dense that you could not see to the wall across the Chamber here except under very extraordinary circumstances. Even from the top of a tree you could not see. You can not see the contour of the country by climbing to the tops of the trees, because your vision is obstructed by vegetation until it does not reach out, unless the hills are very high. Mr. Menocal, after there had been two surveys made in that part of the world, conceived that there was a route between the Ochoa Dam or a place at the mouth of the San Francisco River, just above Ochoa Dam (I think it is the mouth of the San Francisco River), and Grey Town, where by going straight through with his canal he would save many miles of route, and would save the canal from overflow, which is a great danger in that very rainy country, by throwing it upon ground that was entirely above the line of overflow. Mr. Menocal, at great personal labor and exposure—exposure of which I suppose very few gentlemen on this floor have any conception, because they have never been thrown in contact with such work—went out for the purpose of exploring this upper route, as it is called, across the divide.

What is the divide? A great stone barrier, about 2½ or 3 miles across, lying between Grey Town and the Ochoa Dam. He conceived the idea that there was a range of hills in there, the foothills of which he could see from the bank of the San Juan River at places, behind which we could construct a basin that would enable him to pour the water of San Juan River, which is nothing but a lake outlet, through that outlet and across this divide, which is rocky and had to be cut through, of course, and carried to Grey Town, and without any sort of danger of flooding and at great saving of distance, which, of course, meant a very great saving of expense. Having conceived the idea, he prosecuted it personally under the circumstances I have referred to. He verified by actual demonstration, by measurement, that the line was possible, that possibility including a continuance of a range of hills lying on what I will call the south side of his canal project, and, by some of them being embanked upon and others being filled in between, he could construct there embankments which would hold the waters of the lake as they came down and form an estuary of perhaps 9 or 10 miles in length through which there would be no canalization at all, a vast inland flow of lake water which he would dam up and hold in that position.

I can suppose that an engineer who would make a discovery of that kind would necessarily be very much elated by the character it would bring him and by the fact that he was making such a discovery in respect to such a great enterprise. So he went to work after he had located his parties and instructed them where to find these hills. He then came back to his work in Washington, where he built the gun shop and various other works for the Government of the United States. He was notified that Mr. Peary, of Greenland fame, who was the chief of the engineers left in charge when he was not there, had made his explorations and could not find these foothills, and he reported that they were not there. That of course struck a deathblow at Menocal's reputation as a man of truth. Being sick at the time, he immediately, however, got a leave of absence from the Secretary of the Navy and started the next day to Nicaragua. He there found Mr. Peary and his companions at work. He went out with these companions and again relocated the line and pointed out the hills, took the survey, mapped it, and measured it perfectly; and from that moment to this there never has been a doubt about the existence of the hills there. Colonel Ludlow refers to that ridge as the hills over which Mr. Menocal had never been.

Now, there is a reason for all this, an unfortunate one, and that is in those professional jealousies which sometimes occur in all professions, and in the further fact that this commission had recommended a search through that country to continue for three or four years, long enough to absorb an enormous appropriation—I believe $300,000 is what they claimed—so that a great deal of surveying and a great deal of work might be done there for the purpose of merely proving, merely reestablishing what Mr. Menocal had done. For when these gentlemen got through with their dashing tramp over this proposed line of canal, in the twenty days, we will say (it was not more than seventeen days that they devoted to the investigation of it; not having passed actually over many parts of the line, they could not do it of course), they came back and went into the office at New York where Menocal's calculations and his maps were; the company freely yielded them up to them; and it was upon Menocal's measurements and bases of calculations that they came to a different conclusion, not as to the practicability of this route, but as to the cost of it. As I said before, that is a subject about which men might very well differ; but, after all, their entire report is based upon Menocal's measurements in the field, and they never put a line upon the earth or stuck a peg in the ground.

They used Menocal's survey to ascertain all they knew about the canal line, and then attempt to build up a reputation for superior knowledge of the canal and its proper location by a series of unfounded criticisms, of a very caustic sort, upon his work.

So we have here Mr. Menocal's statements as torn to pieces and criticised by a set of men who, through professional jealousy, have found it necessary to make some assault upon some other engineer's work. I say professional jealousy, for the reason that Colonel Ludlow could not in sincerity and in justice have indulged in the remarks he made about Mr. Menocal in the statement that he made to the committee unless he had been incited by some feeling of professional jealousy toward Mr. Menocal.

Now, in closing my remarks upon the bill, I could not afford to drop this subject without doing justice to that honorable man. Mr. President, there is no man who has ever done a great work in the world who did not receive scurrilous lashing from men who were not as good as he. Columbus left the Island of Cuba with chains on his legs, arrested, and sent back to Spain for punishment; and so with every man, it seems, who has accomplished any great work; he is bound to pass through that ordeal. But I think that we ought to be somewhat generous toward men who have done these great things when they are set upon by men who seek to find some opportunity to criticise and tear down their reputation. Fortunately in this case the heedlessness of the attack was such as that the man who made it had to first ensconce himself behind Mr. Davis, who, he said, told him so. Mr. Davis is not accessible; we do not know where he is. Then he adhered to his statement after he had made it, and here it is entirely refuted.

This is a matter of no concern to this canal at all; but in dealing with a subject of this kind, and in acting as this Government has acted time and again upon Mr. Menocal's statement, and as this commission has acted upon his measurements, I think it is a privilege I ought to employ to defend an honest gentleman and a great engineer against an assault that is entirely untimely, unnecessary, and unsustained.

Mr. President, before I leave the floor, in part support of some things I have said here, I desire to read a letter from a distinguished man in California, addressed to one of the honorable Senators from that State, parts of which I will necessarily omit because they have personal references which it would be improper to lay before the world. The writer of this letter is Capt. William L. Merry, president of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, who has been its president for many years. He is now and has been for seven or eight years the consul of Nicaragua in San Francisco, and therefore he knows about the Government and much of what it is doing. There are Senators here who know him, who know his merit and his high standing. For many years he was a sea captain, and has conducted and sailed his ships around Cape Horn in many voyages. He understands commerce in all its relations connected with navigation. He is a friend of this canal and has always been, and writing a confidential letter to his friend Senator PERKINS he says:

I wired you yesterday as follows: "Rodriguez's action probably unauthorized. Think President Zelaya holds concession valid. Suggest cabling."

* * * * * * *

The reasons for the opinion expressed are based on the following facts: About four months since Hon. Lewis Baker, minister to Nicaragua, called to see me en route homeward on leave. I asked him plainly how the Nicaraguan Government regarded the lapse of the canal company respecting the Tipitapa Canal and the general delay of the work. He assured me positively that "President Zelaya had told him just before he left to tell the United States Government that whenever it actively aided the canal company the Nicaraguan Government would grant all additional time needed; that it wanted the canal, and would do everything possible to aid it."

* * * * * * *

I have here a letter from Gen. Joaquin Elizondo, of Managua, a friend since 1865, and formerly secretary of the treasury (ministro de haciendo) in Nicaragua. I had written him to see Zelaya about the Nicaraguan Government policy in relation to the canal, suggesting a line of action favorable to the company and to American interests. Elizondo replied under date of November 1, 1896, that he had consulted with the Government officers, and that they had decided to instruct Rodriguez about on the lines I had suggested; also that he would do all he could at Washington to aid the prompt construction of the canal. For these reasons, unless Zelaya has had a very recent radical change of heart, I can not think he would have authorized Rodriguez to send such a letter to Olney as he did, especially when, by application to the company, he could have obtained anything fair and reasonable. That the writer of that letter is not sincere or knows very little about the canal question is proven by his suggesting to Mr. Olney the renewal of the Zavala-Frelinghuysen treaty, which Cleveland has already condemned as "an entangling alliance."

As to British influence, I am confident it is constantly at work in Nicaragua against us, and will give you an instance where it came to my notice straight. Last year a Mr.—

A gentleman whose name is stricken from this letter—

formerly of Chicago, called on me with excellent letters. He had been examining Nicaragua and Guatemala in a business way, and had spent several weeks at Managua. The gentleman is an American of fine appearance and address. At Managua he had become well acquainted with the British minister. Meeting him frequently at dinner, one day when in confidence he told him that he had to remain at Managua more than at the other two Republics to which he is accredited, on account of the canal; that his people had instructed him to do this and to watch the canal matter very closely, acquiring all the benefits possible for his country, and full control of the canal if by lapse of the company such a thing became possible.

* * * * * * *

That came from the British minister.

Another Managua correspondent—

Whose name is given here—

a gentleman of European birth, but an American citizen, known to me for thirty years, wrote me from Managua two or three times during 1895 and 1896 that England was making stringent efforts to get a foothold in Nicaragua through various agencies, one of them the English bondholders of the Nicaraguan debt in London, about £500,000. I have written particulars to Senator MORGAN of the deal they have made with the Nicaraguan Government by which they have secured an export tax of 1 cent per pound on all coffee for their benefit, and are authorized to send a resident agent to Nicaragua to collect it; really, I believe, a political agent of the British Government. I have also written Senator MORGAN of concessions given to Englishmen for a railroad from San Ubaldo (on Lake Nicaragua) to the Atlantic, at the same time passing a law permitting the Zelaya Government to sell the Government railway from Corinto to Granada, on the same lake, for $1,000,000 gold, thus aiding the English syndicate in obtaining an interoceanic transit near the canal, using the same lake—

I will remark here that these concessions expressly prohibit Nicaragua from making any such grant to any other company for any railroad that by any means would interfere with the business of this canal and its earnings.

In fact, the matter was presented to me with the idea that I could checkmate the English interest by getting American interests to take it up. There are large land grants and special privileges with these railway franchises. And, furthermore, why should there be any doubt of this when we know very well that England has used every effort to obtain control of the Nicaragua Canal route for many years? I have no doubt that the proposed five-year arbitration treaty has this object in view. Recognizing that the Nicaragua Canal question has reached a stage where construction is certain in the near future, it is England's purpose to open a dispute with the United States on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and then submit it to arbitration. You can foresee the result with dead certainty. Joint control with England of the canal, or, if we are quiescent, as France was, about joining England in occupation of the Suez Isthmus, England would leave us out and build the canal herself. I consider the arbitration treaty a danger we should now avoid, unless all possible questions affected by the Monroe doctrine could be eliminated—not an easy task.

I believe Nicaragua without protest will grant that time and extensions of articles on the canal concession which are now the basis of Rodriguez's note. In any event, although the company has not complied with all the requirements, none of the clauses named as forfeiting the contract (articles 8, 46, 47, 48, and 49) have been violated. The claim that the company has transferred its concession can not be maintained. The Government is to obtain control, as demanded by the American people, but the franchise remains in the company precisely as the franchise of the Panama Railroad Company remains in the company, with its American charter, although the control is at Paris. In fact, the Panama case is a more rigorous control, as it involves the purchase of the entire railroad by the French Company. But I hear no complaint of the conditions there, or that the Panama Railroad Company has lost its rights as an American corporation, because owned in France, although, for obvious international reasons, not owned by the French Government. It is still an American corporation managed in New York.

A difficulty we now encounter is this new "Republica Mayor de Centro America," composed of Nicaragua, Salvador, and Honduras. It is a deal made to keep each of the parties in power, and is avoided by Guatemala and Costa Rica, possibly a short-lived nationality, to be ended by another "revolution." One of my Managua correspondents writes that the people are very much dissatisfied with the Government, and the authorities have to be constantly on the alert to avoid active hostilities. In Honduras also revolution is imminent. But in the canal matter I suppose we must now deal with this new Government, although Nicaragua has made treaties which she must regard.

The rest of the letter relates to other matters. Here is a man who has had this official connection with the Government of Nicaragua for more than seven years as its consul. I suppose he knows something about what is going on down there. We flatter ourselves that because Great Britain holds an olive branch out to us she has thrown her sword away. What right have we to flatter ourselves with any such nonsense as that? How can we be supposed to have retained our reasonable common sense when we refuse to judge of the future by the experience of the past? What has occurred here to give us this sublime and reliant confidence that the great lion of England will not crunch the bones of your arm, Mr. President, when you put it in his mouth? What has come over the people of the United States and the Congress of the United States that they are clamorous for British favors? No, Mr. President; I say in the presence of the honorable Senator who is going to be Secretary of State, if he blinds his eyes to the truth and takes the anodynes of flattery that are to be fed to him like spoon victuals from Great Britain, he will find that the people of the United States will not sustain his administration.

Those are not words, Mr. President, that I utter in defiance or criticism or in any other spirit but in that American sense which I trust I feel in common with all my fellow-Senators, that it is the duty of the Senate and of the Representatives in the Congress of the United States to feel at least some of the throbs of the great American heart that pulsates always for justice, for right, for independence, and for truth.

Now, having said this much about the canal, Mr. President, I announce my intention not to press the final vote on the pending bill at this session. I yield to those gentlemen who have exercised the power to obstruct its passage. They take the responsibility. I have done according to the poor ability I possess, faithfully and firmly, the duty that has been devolved upon me, not as a matter of choice. When I first came in contact with this canal subject I was ignorant of what the Senate of the United States had done about it. I did not know that a resolution had passed in executive session here to have the canal investigated and its relations to the United States ascertained. I stepped into the committee room and found the Senators engaged in its discussion after I had been absent from Washington with a sick child. But at once I saw the importance of it, and when I asked for the explanation, that splendid man whom the Senate could not forget if it would, George F. Edmunds, explained to the committee what was the purpose of this movement.

It was to prevent the capitalization of the canal at such a sum of money as that the tolls upon it would be an excessive and exorbitant burden upon the commerce of the United States that might pass through it. He thought it was better, and it was and is better, that the Government of the United States should lend the encouragement of its credit to these men to build the canal rather than to throw them upon the markets of the world, where they would have to make great sacrifices of stock and bonds and percentages of interest in order to get the money to build it. He thought it was a patriotic duty that he owed to the people of the United States, and especially to the agricultural and industrial classes, that the tolls upon that canal, which no man here doubts will be built by somebody, should be placed at a figure that was somewhat just toward American enterprise. That was his motive, his only motive, and in the persistency of it, in a way that is characteristic of the man, who is an upright and a just man in his dealings, but a strong man in his convictions, he laid his hand upon this company and brought them into executive session and examined them against their will, and promised to keep their secrets, and he did keep them until they consented that they should be laid before the world.

Here are their statements all printed and laid before the Senate precisely as they were taken down by a stenographer. Whoever examines them will never more say, at least without blushing, that this company came to Congress seeking aid. Time and again, and in every form that was necessary to contradict that statement, it has been contradicted, by personal letters of Mr. Edmunds, personal letters of Mr. Warner Miller, the personal statement of Mr. Hiram Hitchcock, made before that committee, which is here printed, and also that of Mr. Miller; personal statements made by the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and by Mr. Dolph and myself. We have all stated that this company never came before the Congress of the United States asking assistance; and when the Senator from Ohio the other day, by a lapse of the tongue, falling into the common current of wrong that has been done to these people, said they appeared here to seek our assistance, I called his attention to the fact, and he corrected himself and said they had not come here seeking our assistance, and that is true. Now, let Senators reiterate it as much as they please; the man who does it simply has to stand against the testimony of a number of honorable gentlemen, and he has to be a very great man, very pure, before he can venture to try to break that down.

That fact, Mr. President, being now stated and the error now corrected, it ought to stand corrected. Senators ought to have enough respect for the fact to admit it in debate, and they should not cast contumely and reproach upon a set of men as bankrupts and beggars and mendicants and all that, and as men who come here seeking the aid of the Government of the United States to get them out of difficulties. The difficulties they have encountered, Mr. President, have been of our own making. They were prosperous when we called them. They raised more than $1,000,000 and expended it, after they were called before our committee. They were going on; and but for those troubles in the financial world, which seem to have sprouted, if I may use that expression, in Argentina, and scattered themselves like a baneful influence all over Christendom, those men would have gotten through with an enterprise which has been compared with the Suez Canal, which history has established is so profitable and successful. Now, we have drawn them within the reach of our power, and, as they stated then and have stated frequently since, after the Government of the United States had indicated a purpose to take charge of this canal, they had no more credit with bankers, for the reason that they expected the Government to build it, they thought the Government ought to build it, everybody thinks the Government ought to lead it and build it. By reason of that fact private enterprise will not go into it, because they expect that, whenever they might establish the canal, the Government of the United States would find political reasons of sufficient importance to go there and take it out of their hands and appropriate it to the public use, to their great detriment. Men will not venture upon such an enormous scheme as this with such difficulties staring them in the face. So that is the situation.

I asked Mr. Hiram Hitchcock a question—and there is not a more honorable man on this floor than Hiram Hitchcock—before the committee recently, and reported it to this Senate, and here it is in print: "It has been stated that your company, Mr. Hitchcock, is bankrupt." He said: "That is not the fact. We do not owe a cent in the world that we can not pay—not a debt. This confusion has arisen out of the fact that the construction company which had a contract from us to build this canal went down in the cramp of the times, and under the fact that Congress is legislating here and proposing to take this business out of our hands. There is where the confusion has arisen. We are not bankrupt. On the contrary, we have money to pay every debt we owe; and we do not owe but a very few hundred dollars, and that for ordinary current expenses which are not yet matured."

The other view of the question has been put here time and again, to the great disparagement of these gentlemen. There are men amongst them who, out of their own pockets, have established institutions of charity for the people of this country—hospitals and charities of that kind—broad-minded, splendid Americans. Such men as those are hauled up in the Senate of the United States because they are not willing to come here and yield $6,000,000, to which they are entitled under this concession, absolutely in the stock of this company, and submit their property into the hands of the Government of the United States; because they are patriotic and willing to help through with this canal they are hauled up here and denounced clamorously before this Senate as a set of mendicant bankrupts who are besieging these corridors for the purpose of getting money from Congress. It is untrue, unjust, and extremely wrong.

Now, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I will give way with this bill as a special order, not taking it off the Calendar, and I will consent that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] may bring in the bill in which he is so much interested and in which we are all so much interested. I thank him for his kind indulgence in this matter.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 982, being the House bankruptcy bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The Nicaragua bill is merely displaced as the regular order. It takes its place on the Calendar, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Chair understands from the statement of the Senator from Alabama that the bill loses its place as the unfinished business and takes its place on the Calendar.

Mr. TURPIE. I did not understand whether the statement of the Chair was a ruling as to the parliamentary status of the bill or not. I do not understand that the bill keeps its place on the Calendar if another bill is taken up without unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I have moved to take up Order of Business 982, which is the House bill known as the bankruptcy bill, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. TURPIE. I remind the Senator from Massachusetts that I am not objecting to the bill moved by the honorable Senator; but just before the honorable Senator made his motion the Chair declared that the bill laid aside keeps its place on the Calendar, and I rose to a point of parliamentary order to ask whether that is a parliamentary decision, or whether it depends on the consent of the Senate? In my judgment the bill loses its place on the Calendar when another bill is taken up.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand by the announcement of the Chair that the bill kept its place in the Order of Business which it now occupies, but that it went to the General Calendar like any other bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to state that the bill would not be pressed and would lose its place as the unfinished business and take its place on the Calendar. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moves to proceed to the consideration of the bankruptcy bill, and if his motion prevails, that would, as the Chair understands, displace the Nicaraguan Canal bill as the unfinished business.

Mr. TURPIE. The Senator from Indiana understood the Chair to say that the bill would hold its place in the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Oh, no; the Chair did not so state.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill be laid before the Senate by title.

Mr. PASCO. Before the motion is submitted, I desire to state that I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] wishes to be heard before that motion is put, and he is temporarily absent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that debate is not in order upon the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me one moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to ask a vote of any kind upon the bankruptcy bill this afternoon, as it is now so late, and I shall not even urge a formal reading of the bill if there are other matters which Senators prefer to take up, like appropriation bills. Let the bankruptcy bill be the order of business at 2 o'clock tomorrow, and if there be anything else which Senators now want to attend to it can be done.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that there are two or three appropriation bills awaiting the consideration of the Senate, and I have now one before me, the consideration of which I desire to ask.

Mr. HOAR. I will agree to lay the bankruptcy bill aside temporarily.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask, if the Senator from Massachusetts has concluded his remarks, that the bankruptcy bill, so called, be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill relating to the Agricultural Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill taken up on motion of the Senator from Massachusetts be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

ESTATE OF GEORGE M'DOUGALL.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will give way for a moment, there is a bill here in which several Senators feel a great interest, particularly my friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], which has been passed through the Senate three times, I think, and has been favorably reported many times in the House of Representatives. It was laid over the other day because there was not a full attendance of the Senate. It is a very short bill, and I ask that it be taken up. It is Senate bill 621.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. CULLOM. As the Agricultural appropriation bill has been taken up, if the bill of the Senator from Nevada takes no considerable time, I am willing to yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the bill?

Mr. STEWART. It is the bill (S. 621) for the relief of the legal representative of George McDougall, deceased.

Mr. TELLER. We have passed a similar bill several times.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is to be no discussion on the bill, I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. STEWART. I do not propose to discuss it. It is an honest claim and has been already passed by the Senate three times.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 621) for the relief of the legal representative of George McDougall, deceased.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest that if the bankruptcy bill is now up as the unfinished business, as there are quite a number of Senators, like the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who have bills they wish to have considered, I am willing——

Mr. CULLOM. The Agricultural appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that, but the bankruptcy bill has been only informally laid aside. What I desired to suggest was that, by unanimous consent, the bankruptcy bill go over until to-morrow at 2 o'clock and be taken up then as the unfinished business. Of course, it will then have first place. Meantime Senators may have the floor without having to ask my consent every time they wish to have a bill considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HILL. What is the request?

Mr. HOAR. Merely that the bankruptcy bill may now go over until 2 o'clock to-morrow as the unfinished business, as there are a number of bills which Senators wish to call up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HILL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CULLOM. If objection is made to the consideration of the bill——

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was made to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to the request I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is before the Senate. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by him?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for the purpose of action upon that bill, provided it occupies no time in its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 621) for the relief of the legal representative of George McDougall, deceased. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representative of the estate of George McDougall the sum appropriated in the general deficiency bill of August 4, 1886, to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of John Paul Jones, administrator, in the same manner as though the judgment had been affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to wit, the sum of $81,250, but without interest or costs.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that bill should be amended so that the sum appropriated shall be accepted in full for both principal and interest of that claim.

Mr. STEWART. I accept that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. So that we shall not have next year a claim for interest on that amount to run for thirty years.

Mr. STEWART. Let there be added to the bill the words "which said sum shall be accepted in full for all claims of principal and interest."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF ALFRED W. GREEN.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution reported by me this morning from the Committee on Claims referring a claim to the Court of Claims.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That Senate bill 3300, for the relief of the estate of Alfred W. Green, late of Carroll Parish, La., together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government, approved March 3, 1887.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that after the pending resolution shall have been disposed of I shall object to any other business until the Agricultural appropriation bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution which has been read.

The resolution was agreed to.

CAROLINE D. MOWATT—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing that the House had passed by a two-thirds vote over the veto of the President of the United States the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the message will be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be read.

Mr. CULLOM. As that is a vetoed bill, I hope the bill, with the accompanying message of the President, will be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and I make that motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the veto message should be read.

Mr. CULLOM. Oh, no. I move that the bill, with the accompanying message, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I decline to yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to everything but the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Agricultural appropriation bill having been taken up by unanimous consent and informally laid aside, it is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted upon as they are reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" and in the same line, before the word "thousand," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "seventeen;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500; one assistant chemist, $1,800; one assistant chemist, $1,600; one clerk class 1, $1,200; employment of additional assistants in Division of Chemistry when necessary, $10,000; in all, $17,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 10, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one assistant in Pathological Division, $1,200," and insert "two assistants in Pathological Division, at $1,200 each;" and on page 8, line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "sixty-seven thousand four" and insert "sixty-eight thousand six;" so as to make the clause read:

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of Bureau, $4,000; one assistant chief, $2,500; one chief clerk of Bureau, $2,000; one chief of Inspection Division, $2,500; one assistant chief of Inspection Division, $1,800; one chief of Dairy Division, $2,500; one assistant chief of Dairy Division, $1,800; one chief of Pathological Division, $2,250; two assistants in Pathological Divisions, at $1,200 each; one assistant in Pathological Division, $840; one chief of Bio-chemic Division, $2,250; two assistants in Bio-chemic Division, at $1,200 each, $2,400; one assistant in bio-chemic laboratory, $720; one chief of Miscellaneous Division, $2,000; one zoologist, $2,000; two veterinary inspectors, at $1,800 each, $3,600; two veterinary inspectors, at $1,400 each, $2,800; one assistant at veterinary experiment station, $1,000; one clerk class 4, $1,800; one clerk class 3, $1,600; one clerk class 2, $1,400; five clerks class 1, $6,000; seven clerks, at $1,000 each, $7,000; one clerk, at $840; two firemen, at $720 each, $1,440; four messengers, at $720 each, $2,880; two skilled laborers, at $660 each, $1,320; for employment of artists, laborers, and charwomen, $5,000; in all, $68,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 13, to strike out:

Total salaries Department of Agriculture, $316,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 22, to increase the appropriation for "botanical investigations and experiments, Division of Botany" from $15,000 to $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 2, after the word "arboriculture," to insert "including an investigation into the ravages of the gypsy moth;" so as to make the clause read:

Entomological investigations, Division of Entomology: Promotion of economic entomology; investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture, including an investigation into the ravages of the gypsy moth; ascertaining the best means of destroying those found to be injurious; chemicals, insecticide apparatus, and other materials, supplies, and instruments required in conducting such experiments and investigations; freight and express charges and necessary traveling expenses; compensation of additional temporary assistants, investigators, and agents, and preparing, illustrating, and publishing the results of the work of the division, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 11, to increase the appropriation for "the biological survey, Division of Biological Survey," from $17,500 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 17, to increase the appropriation for "pomological investigations, Division of Pomology," from $6,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 16, after the word "charges," to insert "and for repairing roadways and walks;" so as to make the clause read:

Experimental gardens and grounds, Department of Agriculture, Division of Gardens and Grounds: Cultivation and care of experimental gardens and grounds, including the keep of the lawns, trees, roadways, and walks; management and maintenance of the conservatories, greenhouses, and plant and fruit propagating houses; employment of foremen, gardeners, laborers, carpenters, painters, plumbers, and other mechanics; machinery, tools, wagons, carts, horses, harness, plows, lawn mowers, sprinklers, hose, watering cans, tubs, pots, and other implements required in cultivation; lumber, hardware, glass, paints, tin, stone, gravel, and other material required for repairs; fertilizers, insecticide apparatus, and chemicals; blacksmithing, horseshoeing, and repairs to implements and machinery; seeds, plants, and bulbs for propagating purposes; labels, potting, and packing materials, feed for horses, freight and express charges, and for repairing roadways and walks, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "fifty-five;" and in line 6, after the word "eighty-seven," to insert "and $5,000 of which sum may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report to Congress upon the agricultural resources and capabilities of Alaska, with special reference to the desirability and feasibility of the establishment of agricultural experiment stations in said Territory, as has been done in other States and Territories, and the selection of suitable locations for such stations;" so as to read:

Agricultural experiment stations, Office of Experiment Stations: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," and to enforce the execution thereof, $755,000, $30,000 of which sum shall be payable upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, to enable him to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the said act of March 2, 1887, and $5,000 of which sum may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report to Congress upon the agricultural resources and capabilities of Alaska, with special reference to the desirability and feasibility of the establishment of agricultural experiment stations in said Territory, as has been done in other States and Territories, and the selection of suitable locations for such stations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 14, on page 17.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the item on page 17, from line 3 to line 14, in reference to fiber investigations, be stricken out, as I desire to look into it in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 3 to line 14, inclusive, on page 17, as follows:

Fiber investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the investigations relating to textile fibers indigenous in, or adapted to, the United States, including their economic growth, cleansing, and decorticating, preparatory to manufacture; the testing machines and processes for said cleansing and decorticating; for the purchase of material for said tests; for the purchase of fiber plants and seeds for distribution, propagation, and experiment, and for the labor and expenses incident thereto; and for traveling expenses in connection with said duties, $5,000: Provided, That no more than $3,000 shall be used for salaries.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Illinois to move to strike out the clause in order that we may have further inquiry as respects the utility of the investigation?

Mr. CULLOM. That is the reason. I have some statements in my pocket in reference to the matter that lead me to doubt whether the committee ought not to consider it more fully, and it is for the purpose of doing so that I have moved that it be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois, to strike out the clause which has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Publications, Department of Agriculture, Division of Publications," on page 18, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "seventy;" so as to read:

For the preparation, printing, illustration, publication, indexing, and distribution of documents, bulletins, and reports, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the same head, on page 18, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-five;" in line 16, after the word "Congress," to insert "as each Senator, Representative, or Delegate shall direct;" in line 24, after the word "title," to strike out "and character;" and on page 19, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "seventy;" so as to read:

Of which sum $45,000 shall be available for the preparation and printing of farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interest of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of two-thirds of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as each Senator, Representive, or Delegate shall direct: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify Senators and Representatives of the title and character of each such bulletin and also of any other publication of the Department of Agriculture, not sent to the folding rooms of the Senate and House, with the total number to which each Senator, Representative, and Delegate may be entitled for distribution; and on the face of the envelope inclosing said bulletins shall be printed the title of each bulletin contained therein; for the pay of artists, draftsmen, and engravers, and of proof readers and indexers when necessary; for the purchase of tools, instruments, and artist's material; for printing proofs, charts, and maps; for drawings, engravings, photographs, paintings, lithographs, other illustrations, and electrotypes, and for traveling expenses when necessary; and for labor, paper, envelopes, gum, twine, and other necessary materials, $25,000; in all, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. My attention was called away for a moment. Has the amendment, found on page 18, increasing the appropriation for publications from $65,000 to $75,000 been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the vote by which it was agreed to may be reconsidered, in order that I may obtain some information about it.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no objection to that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri indicate what amendment it is?

Mr. VEST. It is the amendment in line 9, on page 18, under the head of "Publications for the Department of Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. VEST. I should like to know why that increase is proposed to be made.

Mr. CULLOM. The Assistant Secretary of the Department regards it as important that the amount specified here should be given, and the Committee on Appropriations concluded, after hearing him, that it was perhaps a proper sum to allow. It is the same amount that was appropriated last year for this purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me for one moment? The Senator from Missouri will see that under the phraseology employed here an additional expenditure will be necessary for the distribution of the bulletins, for printing, and for paper, envelopes, etc. If they are of any utility whatever, they should be distributed as provided for in this arrangement, and if so, it will necessarily require a larger sum than is proposed to be appropriated by the House.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this is an appropriation for the preparation, printing, illustration, publication, and issuing of bulletins for the information of farmers and the advancement of agriculture.

Mr. President, I think if there has been an abuse in any Department of this Government more flagrant than any other, it has been that accompanying the publications of the Agricultural Department. If the money of the people has been perverted from its legitimate purpose in any bureau or Department of this Government, the example has been most conspicuous in the Agricultural Department. I have before me a bulletin published recently, immediately after the Presidential election, by the Department of Agriculture, entitled The Farmer and Finance, in which there is not one word about any agricultural product, any agricultural process, any agricultural interest, unless it be that indirect interest which every citizen of the United States has in everything that appertains to this country. In this publication the Secretary of Agriculture undertakes to prove that the twenty-two States which voted for Bryan are States in which illiteracy prevails, and that the twenty-three States which voted for McKinley are paragons of educational refinement and advancement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was the document printed at the expense of the Government, I will ask the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VEST. It was printed by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. BATE. Out of this fund?

Mr. VEST. Out of this fund, I suppose. He has no other fund. It was printed with the statement that he considered it necessary that the farmers of the country should know from what direction came the votes that supported Bryan; that it was the vote of ignorance and illiteracy, and that the vote which supported McKinley represented the refinement and educational advancement of this country. No Senator will say that this is a legitimate use of public money by the Secretary of Agriculture when he publishes a bulletin discussing the financial question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that I think it was an utter perversion of the power of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that he ought to be rebuked for issuing a publication of that kind at the expense of the Government. I agree with the Senator from Missouri in that view.

Mr. VEST. Very good. That is not all. I have here a bulletin published by the Secretary of Agriculture entitled Arbor Day, and I find in it an address—a most eloquent rhetorical production—delivered in 1887, before the University of Nebraska, by the Hon. J. Sterling Morton, long before he assumed the duties of his present position. In the middle of that address is the picture of a palatial country residence, surrounded by exotics, with a magnificent piazza, on which are found luxurious rocking-chairs and all the appurtenances of wealth and intellectual refinement. This is the country seat of the Secretary of Agriculture, and this is a costly illustration paid for by the tax money of the people of this country. In front of the villa is a tree, surrounded by palings, brought from Pikes Peak and planted in front of this humble agricultural retreat. This cut, I take it, was placed here at the expense of the people of the United States to show the prosperous farmers, of whom the Secretary of Agriculture speaks, to what intellectual and luxurious refinement they might reach if they followed in the footsteps of the illustrious Secretary of Agriculture. This farmer's home ought to have been seen by Bulwer before he painted his picture of the palace by the Lake of Como, "where the rosy light stole through the perfumed air of marble halls."

This is the home of a farmer, and the illustration is paid for by the people of the country, and our committee wants to increase the appropriation for similar objects from sixty-five to seventy thousand dollars. Banish the thought that I would detain so illustrious a tribunal as the Senate to save even $5,000; but I must enter my protest against spending one other cent in the direction pursued by the Secretary of Agriculture as to what he calls his farmers' bulletin.

I will ask permission to expend a few more dollars of the public money, as the example is set by so illustrious a source, by having the picture of this farmer's home placed in the RECORD, in order that the farmers of this country may see how this eminent preserver of their interests is by day and night sweating and toiling in order to improve their condition and to introduce economical methods in his Department.

He has told us repeatedly of the amount of money he has saved by cutting off seeds from the farmers of the country and reducing the publications that are gratuitously distributed by the Government. If he has been eloquent in anything, it has been upon the utter recklessness with which Congress appropriates money for gratuitous bulletins to the farmers of the United States; and yet he finds ample room in his bulletin on Arbor Day to insert an old speech which he made before the University of Nebraska in 1887, and to place in the bulletin this expensive woodcut of his magnificent home in Nebraska. I am opposed to giving 5 cents more for that purpose. I ask to have the illustration reproduced in the RECORD.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a circular issued from the Department of Agriculture which I think deserves the notice of the Senate. I intend to call attention to it again on Monday next, when I shall speak in behalf of bimetallism. I find myself confronted with a circular from the Department of Agriculture, which should naturally confine itself to the subject of agriculture, but which seems to have been issued for what I should call under the circumstances a political purpose. At any rate, it could not have been issued for the principal purpose of promoting agriculture. It was issued on the 23d day of November, after the clouds of the election had rolled by and the peaceful citizens of this country were supposed to have settled down to their ordinary avocations. The circular of the Secretary first asks Mr. Henry A. Robinson, his chief of the Division of Statistics, to obtain certain useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, and then comes this paragraph. I ask for it the attention of the Senator from Missouri:

> A large number of citizens have contended that the relative value of a silver dollar to a gold dollar depends upon an enacted ratio; in short, upon a law of Congress. But a larger number of American citizens have contended that the relative value of gold coins and silver coins is entirely dependent upon the relative commercial value of the bullion contained in those coins.

I suppose that the Secretary concluded that the larger number of citizens made this contention on account of the pronouncement of the election of November 3. He continues:

> It is desirable, therefore, in this connection, to show also what relation, if any, exists between the prices of either of the money metals and the price of any farm staple, like wheat, for instance.

There the Secretary strikes an agricultural subject; he tries to make his gold monometallist tendencies take hold of agriculture in some appropriate way. Then he adds:

> And the reply, taken as a whole, ought to show whether the mint value of a money metal can be made by statute greater than the bullion value thereof.

There he again disconnects himself absolutely from agriculture. I ask why, upon any pretext, the Secretary of Agriculture instructed his Statistician to write to him a letter or deliver to him a paper which, as a whole, should show "whether the mint value of a money metal can be made by statute greater than the bullion value thereof?" Yet that is the preposterous instruction he gives to his agricultural Statistician.

Mr. COCKRELL. A subordinate officer under him.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly. His own Chief of his Bureau of Statistics, to whom he is giving directions to prepare crop statistics; and he winds up by ordering him to enter into a discussion of a monetary question, and to show "whether the mint value of a money metal can be made by statute greater than the bullion value thereof," which is a controverted point in monetary science.

Mr. President, here is Mr. Robinson's reply. I shall have occasion to allude to it on Monday next. I will content myself now by saying that it does not show anything that the Secretary expected and asked for. The tables connected with it are a powerful argument in favor of the remonetization of silver, but when Mr. Robinson closed his circular, as if conscious that he had utterly failed consistently with fact and reason to make the reply which his superior required, in despair on that account, the whole tenor and effect of report having been the other way, he tries to hold out a little hope and adds:

> It may be that in a supplement to this circular some additional facts bearing upon the subject may be presented for consideration.

This was certainly a lean haul of fish for a very large net, and so far as I know, the agricultural Statistician of the Department has not yet reported to the Secretary whether or not by law the mint value of a metal can be made greater than the commercial value thereof.

Mr. President, it is a belittling of an office which ought to be of great value to the country in the exercise of its legitimate functions when the Secretary of Agriculture sets the subordinates of the Department to the work of gathering political statistics prearranged to vindicate a political position previously taken by the head of the Department.

Mr. CULLOM. If I thought the gentleman who it is announced in the papers is to be the next Secretary of Agriculture, and who I suppose will be appointed by the distinguished gentleman who this afternoon was declared to have been elected President of the United States, would pursue the same course that has been pursued by the present Secretary of Agriculture, I myself would feel very much like striking this item out of the bill. I confess what is known to everybody connected with either branch of Congress, that there has been great difficulty, great confusion, great embarrassment in reference to agricultural matters and appropriations therefor since the present incumbent has occupied that position. But after the 4th of March we are going to have a Secretary of Agriculture who is a real farmer, and who knows what it is to be a farmer, to live as a farmer, and to think as a farmer.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend the Senator from Illinois permit me ask him one question?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Does not the Senator think if political publications, publications on financial questions, and illustrations of magnificent private residences should be left out of the subsequent reports of the Secretary of Agriculture, $65,000 would be enough?

Mr. CULLOM. I should certainly be in favor of leaving out that kind of material.

Mr. VEST. Then I submit that this appropriation, which covers those extravagancies, certainly ought to be ample to meet the economical administration so eloquently portrayed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no doubt that the real interest of the farmers in receiving these publications and bulletins has been neglected to the extent of the amount that those extraneous items cost the country. What I want to do, and what the Committee on Appropriations who have had charge of the bill desire to do, is to give the next Secretary of Agriculture money enough so that the real interests of the farmers will be promoted by the proper administration of the affairs of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. STEWART. Is there a deficiency in the appropriation of last year for printing?

Mr. CULLOM. I think not. There is no deficiency.

Mr. VEST. No; this is an increase of $5,000.

Mr. CULLOM. These bulletins and farmers' publications, etc., for distribution to the farmers are greatly sought after. They are of great value to the farmers if properly edited and issued and distributed, and the agricultural interests of the country ought to have substantially what they ask for in the conduct of that branch of the public service. So I hope the Senate will not reduce the amount. The Committee on Appropriations put the amount back just as it was last year, believing that the new Secretary would bring about reforms in the administration of the office which would result in Congress knowing in the end exactly what we ought to appropriate; and I confess it is difficult to know exactly the amount that should be appropriated at this time.

Mr. STEWART. Is this appropriation the same as it was last year?

Mr. CULLOM. The appropriation proposed is the same as it was last year.

Mr. VEST. It was $65,000 last year.

Mr. CULLOM. No; $70,000, exactly as we propose to amend it. I hope the Senate will allow it to stand in that way. I would not hesitate to guarantee that the next Secretary of Agriculture, who is a farmer and an intelligent gentleman, and is not engaged, as a hobby, in writing upon the question of gold or silver, will administer the office in the way that will be satisfactory to the Senate and to the farmers of the whole country.

Mr. STEWART. If the appropriation is the same as it was last year, I do not know that I have any special objection to it; but I desire to remark in this connection that it is a growing custom in various Departments to take jurisdiction of politics, financial questions, and nearly everything else with which the Department has nothing to do. I think if all the reports made by subordinates and by heads of Departments were scrutinized, and the printing confined to the jurisdiction of subjects within their respective Departments, much money would be saved and much scandal would be avoided.

I think there is nothing more scandalous than for a subordinate in a Department to obtrude his views on all political questions and assume to instruct the people in matters with which he has nothing to do any more than a private citizen, and stuff those instructions in the various reports. There is entirely too much of it. It not only costs the Government a great deal, but it is offensive to those who receive the reports, looking for information on a particular subject. The readers ought not to be burdened with the conflicting views of subordinates when they are looking for information on some topic of agriculture or on the subject of what the banks have done. The legitimate report of the Comptroller of the Currency ought not to be mixed up with essays on finance, nor should the mint reports be loaded with arguments pretending to be official when the officer has no authority to speak on those subjects. It is his duty to report, but his report should be a report connected with that business and not with all the sciences of the country and the politics of the country. Great abuse has grown up in this direction.

I have never felt called upon to indulge in any criticism of the Secretary of Agriculture, because it is too peculiar a subject for ordinary comment. Really, I have been restrained because the thing is so absurd. His whole proceedings have seemed so laughable that I could not induce myself to make an assault upon him or to criticise him in any serious way. He is the most picturesque specimen of any animal I have ever known. He beats them all in his peculiarities. The man who undertakes to reduce him or his thoughts or his actions by any rule of common sense would make a failure. So I have never undertaken it. I am glad he will not be able to stuff another edition of the agricultural reports with his peculiar notions, and I hope that his successor will be such a man as is described by the Senator from Illinois, and that he will give the people of the United States information in regard to agriculture and kindred subjects, and leave some room for discussion to the world at large on other subjects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senate will not reduce the amount. It is exactly the sum which was appropriated during the last session. Let us give the new man who is coming in a chance to do something for the farmers.

Mr. VEST. It is very evident that more than $5,000 has been expended on these illustrations and this political essay; I undertake to say $10,000 at least, including franking. Sixty-five thousand dollars is an ample sum.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senators who voted a moment ago in the negative will not press that matter. As a farmer I know that the bulletins issued by the Agricultural Department on the subject of agriculture are valuable. Our farmers get little enough consideration in this Chamber and the other, and the appropriation should not be cut down because we have had a man in charge of that Department who is unworthy and who has prostituted the power given him to promulgate his peculiarities on finance under the guise of agricultural bulletins. I hope the Senate will give the new Secretary of Agriculture, the one who is to succeed this man, the usual appropriation, and if he should then follow the bad example that has been set him, it will be time enough for us to take this matter up next year and cut down the appropriation.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; that is right.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I can not agree with the position taken here that because Mr. Morton has published matters which are personal to himself, therefore the farmers shall not have the amount necessary to disseminate information for their benefit. What kind of connection is there between those two matters? The question is, What is the amount that is needed for the information of the farmers? Is it wise to disseminate correct information among the farmers? Can it be done? What does the Senator from Missouri know about the amount required? The Secretary of Agriculture and Mr. Dabney, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, have informed the committee, of which I am a member, that this amount is needed, and that there is a great deal of demand for the dissemination of purely agricultural information. Mr. Morton is not going to be the Secretary again. What he has done that was improper has nothing to do with the probability of the future application of the money. It is appropriated for the dissemination of necessary information in regard to improved processes and to increase the intelligence of the agricultural classes. The item has been carefully considered by the committee, and good, substantial reasons have been given for this increase.

Mr. VEST. I will simply answer the Senator from Florida by stating that the House of Representatives, which is considered as being as near the people as the Senate, investigated the question and fixed the amount at $65,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me one minute?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. The other day the Senate passed a resolution for the printing of a book on cotton, and provided that 20,000 copies should be struck off. I know that that book is very valuable and will add to the information which the cotton planters need. But the House, which is so near the people, reduced the number to one-third of what we agreed to give them. It does not follow, therefore, that the House is any nearer to the people than we are.

Mr. VEST. As I know nothing about the facts of that case, I would rather have them before I bring in a verdict. The Senator from South Carolina doubtless, in his honest way, states his side of it. He thought there ought to be 20,000 copies printed. The House reduced it, he says, to one-third the number. I do not know anything about the matter, but I assume, by way of legislative comity, that the House was trying to do what it thought to be right. It takes the two branches of Congress to make a law.

Now, the House had the officials of the Agricultural Department before it when it fixed the amount of the appropriation at $65,000. The same officials then appealed, you might say, legislatively, to the committee of the Senate and obtained an increase of $5,000. It is not a matter of life and death, but I wanted to express publicly my opinion of the way in which the appropriation for publications and illustrations has been abused by the Department of Agriculture. That was my principal object.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the debate on this question, but the amount appropriated for this purpose, in the nature of things, must be somewhat flexible, depending upon the judgment, sense, discretion, and intelligence of the Secretary of Agriculture and the various divisions and bureaus under his charge. Here are several divisions constantly engaged in making investigations supposed to be for the benefit of agriculture. If the investigations are of value, they should be printed, and if they are printed from time to time they should be distributed among those who are benefited by the instruction given in them.

These bulletins have hitherto been issued in small editions of 1,000 or 1,500, I believe, though perhaps sometimes in larger editions. They have been distributed by the Agricultural Department according to the will and caprice, if you please, or the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture or the particular divisions that publish the bulletins. Now, for the first time in the history of this distribution, we have provided here that two-thirds of the publications shall be delivered to members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and shall be distributed according to our judgment and discretion, in order that we may judge of their value and of the necessity of their distribution, and also as to any additional copies that may be ordered printed.

So with this appropriation of $70,000; after we have eliminated from the bulletins the pictures which the Senator from Missouri shows us, they may be in some sense cheaper than they are now, but it may be possible that the new Secretary of Agriculture will think that some other subject which has been investigated by him or his subordinates will be of value to the agriculturists of the country. I take it for granted that he will not authorize publications unless they are useful. I do not suppose that we are likely to have all the time Secretaries who will deal with economic questions in the sense of the ratios between silver and gold or in the sense of the bullion value as compared with the mint value of money, but that as a rule the Department of Agriculture will confine itself to the general topics relating to agriculture.

The Senator from Illinois has been kind enough to allude to the gentleman who is to occupy that office, if the reports in the newspapers are true, after the 4th of March. This appropriation bill will not take effect until the 1st day of July next. It is my fortune to know the gentleman whom rumor fixes as the future Secretary of Agriculture. He is, as the Senator from Illinois has stated, a practical farmer, having lived on a farm for more than forty years. He is not only that, but he is a man of affairs, having been a member of the other House of Congress for a good many years. He has occupied public stations in our own State. But in addition to that, and most of all, for the last six years he has expended his time and his ability, which is great, in investigation, experimentally and scientifically, of the identical subjects that are embraced in the bill. I am willing for one to trust these appropriations, having them general in their character and flexible in their nature, to his intelligence and judgment for their expenditure. So they will not be extravagantly expended, but they will be utilized for the benefit of the agriculturists of this country in disseminating the useful information which in this bill we have appropriated large sums of money to collect through the scientific divisions and bureaus of the Agricultural Department.

I hope the Senator from Missouri, who like myself represents a large agricultural State, will not, simply because there has been one mistake made as respects a single bulletin, undertake to strike down or diminish this valuable appropriation relating to the dissemination of information to the farmers of our country.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Iowa is right. My State is one of the largest agricultural States in the Union; and I am the last Senator to cut off my constituents from any information of a useful kind in regard to their pursuits. With the assurance of the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Iowa that we are to have no more financial nor pictorial bulletins from the Department of Agriculture, I will withdraw the opposition to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the item for fiber investigations on page 17. I was not in the Chamber when something was done with it. I understand that that appropriation of $5,000 has been stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph from line 3 to line 14, on page 17, was stricken out.

Mr. CULLOM. The committee, or some members of it, rather, since the consideration of the provision referred to by the Senator from Minnesota in committee, came to the conclusion on representations made and some facts given to them that perhaps we ought further to consider it, and therefore I asked that it be stricken out, so that we might consider it in conference later.

Mr. DAVIS. I trust that that item will not be prejudiced by such a mode of proceeding. I only have this to say, that my own State and South Dakota and Iowa produce about five-sevenths of the flax produced in this country, and it was largely through the instrumentality of the members from those States that this small appropriation of $5,000 was put into the bill. I understand that in another place the question was fully investigated and all sorts of representations pro and con were made.

Mr. CULLOM. Can the Senator from Minnesota state as a matter of information on his part what has been done by the use of that appropriation by the parties who had charge of the work?

Mr. DAVIS. There has been considerable done in the past. I can not state it in detail, but I can state that the results have been very gratifying to my constituency and undoubtedly to that of the Senator from Iowa. I wish the paragraph may be restored. It is a small matter.

Mr. CULLOM. There seemed to be some evidence given to me to the effect that there was nothing done except for the parties in charge of it to draw their salaries: that they made out in some way or other to draw all but about $150, and there is no evidence of any actual work done.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that is an error. But, under the happy auspices that are going to prevail, according to my friend from Iowa, in the course of a few weeks, I move that that item be restored.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest to the Senator to let it go over for the present.

Mr. CAFFERY. I hope the Senator from Illinois will yield to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota. There have been of late years very exhaustive experiments made in the fiber of decorcative plants, for instance, of the ramie. If a decorticating machine can be invented to separate the fiber, to make the fiber ready for the purpose of manufacturing cloth, it would very largely revolutionize a large portion of the crops of the Gulf States. Ramie makes a fiber of most excellent character.

Mr. CULLOM. Has the Senator from Louisiana information that there has been actually any work done by the parties employed in that business under the former appropriation?

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not know whether any work has been done under the authority of the Agricultural Department, but I know that experiments are constantly going on in my State in regard to the invention of a machine that would properly decorticate the fiber of the ramie plant. It is confidently said——

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow an amendment to be made as to the amount of the appropriation, so that we can have the matter in conference and confer about it and get further information, if there is any, I will agree that the vote striking out the paragraph shall be reconsidered, so that we can keep control of it in conference if we find it is important that it should be left in the bill.

Mr. CAFFERY. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move that the word "three" before "thousand," in line 13, be stricken out and "two" inserted; so as to read:

That no more than $2,000 shall be used for salaries.

Mr. PASCO. Can not we retain the amount in the bill without submitting it to the risk of a conference? All the Senators from the Gulf States are interested in the matter, and I hope the appropriation will not be stricken from the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota. Let the vote be reconsidered and an amendment agreed to striking out "three" and inserting "two," in line 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote by which the paragraph from lines 3 to 14 on page 17 was stricken out will be reconsidered. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, to reduce the appropriation for salaries from $3,000 to $2,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PASCO. Now I ask that the amount be kept as it was before, then it will not be subject to the risks in conference. We are very anxious to have the investigation proceeded with.

Mr. CULLOM. I am unwilling to allow the action to be reconsidered unless I can either have the total amount reduced from $5,000 to $4,000, or limit the salaries to $2,000, so that we can consider it further in conference. I am willing to agree to either proposition.

Mr. PASCO. The matter will be in the hands of the new Secretary, in whom the Senator from Illinois has entire confidence. All that the Senator has said with reference to the other subject will perhaps be applicable here, and I hope he will trust the new Secretary with that amount, so that these very valuable experiments may be carried on, if they have not been done so as fully as should have been the case in the past.

Mr. CULLOM. Is the Senator aware that anything has been done under that provision except to draw salaries? I have not been able to find out that there has been anything else done.

Mr. PASCO. I do not know how much has been done in the past, but let us hope that in the future, under the new Administration, there will be great results accomplished.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I do not care to spend time upon this small item. There seems to be a very great desire that the paragraph shall be retained in the bill, and I am willing to let it stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois withdraws the motion to strike out the paragraph. If there be no objection, the amendment will be withdrawn and the paragraph will stand as reported. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 8, on page 19. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, line 12, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses, Department of Agriculture, from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Division of Seeds, purchase and distribution of valuable seeds," on page 21, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty," and on page 22, line 2, before the word "thousand," to insert "and thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of Seeds, purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expense of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $150,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, empowered, directed, and required to expend the said sum in the purchase, propagation, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and is authorized, empowered, directed, and required to expend not less than the sum of $130,000 in the purchase at public or private sale of valuable seeds, the best he can obtain, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask why it was considered necessary at this time, when the revenues of the country are certainly not excessive, to add $30,000 to the House appropriation for seeds? The usual appropriation for many years has been $120,000, sometimes $130,000, but never over that, I think, until last year, when there was so much sympathy aroused by the Secretary of Agriculture in his attack on the seed matter that the House raised the appropriation to $150,000. This year they put it back again to about the usual sum. Under the present methods of purchase, if I am not misinformed, we get about twice as many seeds as we used to get under the appropriations formerly made. The appropriation of last year was an exceptional one, and the House recognized the fact that it was an exceptional one and fixed the amount at $120,000.

It is stated that it is for the purchase of valuable seeds. We all know that this appropriation started for the purchase of valuable seeds, rare seeds, etc., with a view of giving the Government assistance to encourage the planting and development of rare seeds and bulbs. We know that that has degenerated into a mere wholesale distribution of the commonest kinds of vegetable and flower seeds. I think myself that it has become a great abuse and a great waste of the public money in the way in which it is at present done; but certainly it seems to me that we might be content this year to stand by the House appropriation of $120,000, which is the usual appropriation, and not increase it by $30,000.

This does not interfere with the Secretary of Agriculture in the least. It is not like cutting down the appropriations for publications, which I agree have been greatly abused under the existing system. This is merely for seeds for our own distribution. I think it is a mistake in the present condition of the revenues to add $30,000 and carry up the usual appropriation to $150,000, which never reached that point except under the exceptional circumstances of last year.

Mr. CULLOM. I was just going to state what the Senator said in his last remark—that the item as the Senate committee has amended it carries the same appropriation that was made during the last session.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will excuse me. I stated that in the very beginning of my remarks, and said that it was owing to the fact that last year the Secretary of Agriculture undertook to reform this abuse, and he caused so much sympathy by the method in which he did it that the House lifted the appropriation to a higher point than it had ever been lifted to before; and this year the House put it back. I am aware of the facts in the case.

Mr. CULLOM. It is true that the Secretary of Agriculture is not in favor of any appropriation for agricultural seeds to be scattered over the country, and has persistently refused to recommend such an appropriation, as he has refused to do this year. The two Houses last year made an appropriation of $150,000, and the committee on the part of the Senate, notwithstanding the House this year reduced the amount to $120,000, concluded to restore it in view of the change which was going to take place in the administration of that office. I presume I ought to say that I have no special dislike to the present incumbent of that office. He has undertaken to administer it according to his views, which have not been according to mine. I therefore have not much confidence in him in connection with that business, but I have great faith that we are going to turn over a new leaf, and that we shall have the business of that Department so administered in the interests of the agriculturists of the country as that they will be benefited thereby. In view of my confidence, I have been in favor of the appropriation of the same sum we appropriated last year, and I think the Senate had better allow the $150,000 to be retained in the bill, and that a part of it, $130,000, which is the same appropriation as was contained in the bill of last year, be expended for the purchase at public or private sale of valuable seeds, etc.

It is simply a question of judgment as to what amount ought to be appropriated, but I have not felt that, as the representatives of the agricultural people of the country, we ought to be parsimonious in our disposition to make appropriations for their benefit. They do not get much out of this Government, they say, whatever we do. Now, let us give them information, especially with regard to their own great interest, which is the controlling interest of the country. I hope the amount will be allowed to stand.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it seems to me there is nothing in the consideration which has been suggested here which is pertinent to the reduction of the amount appropriated in this bill. Suppose this has degenerated into an abuse. Is the abuse of a thing any reason for abolishing its proper and reasonable use, or is it a reasonable use that rare and valuable seeds should be distributed, such as may be acclimatized and may improve the products of agriculture throughout the country? Is there anything unreasonable in that? Is it not a wise thing to do to improve the products of agriculture and to improve them by the cultivation of superior kinds? That is the law. If you can not find an executive officer to execute it, you must only amend those provisions which are pertinent to him and bear upon him.

I say, in my own judgment and observation, that there is no appropriation in this bill which is more useful to the people of this country, when properly used, than this for introducing rare and valuable and improved seeds, plants, and shrubs. In my own State it has been the cause of a great deal of advantageous production of new things, acclimatizing them, and but for the frosts which have occurred in the last few years there would have been added to the commerce of this country some very valuable contributions from new and rare plants acclimatized in that section of the country. We may take as a specimen the orange, which has been greatly improved beyond any other part of the world.

This appropriation is more in touch with the people of the country, with the farmers, than any other. In my judgment, the appropriation in this bill to the great farming interests ought to be twice what it is, because upon that interest, upon its progress and its improvement, depends the whole prosperity of this country. Those things which are added to it in manufacture and inventions must rest upon the substratum of agricultural prosperity. The farmers of this country are exceedingly poor. The pressure of the times bears upon them more severely than upon any other class in the country. There is an absolute want of money throughout the whole farming region of the country, and there is a necessity that they should have this assistance from the Government, not of the ordinary seeds, but of the kinds which are required to be purchased for the improvement of the present productions of agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have the consent of the committee for an amendment which I propose to offer, on page 22, after line 8. I propose to insert what I send to the desk:

Of which $1,000 shall be expended in the purchase of an extra supply of tobacco and other seeds for the sufferers by cyclones and frosts in the State of Florida who are unable to purchase them.

I only wish to say that for the last three or four years there has been a succession of disasters in the State of Florida, commencing with the great frost three years ago, which destroyed the orange groves of the country, and the growers lost many millions of dollars. That has been succeeded by a cyclone in the present year.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will reduce the amount to $500, I shall make no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I will do that; but the amount ought not to be reduced.

Mr. CAFFERY. I move to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida by including the State of Louisiana and enlarging also the scope of the seeds he proposes to distribute by adding corn to the list.

I will state that a very large portion of my State was visited last year by a most severe drought. Some ten or twelve parishes were absolutely burned up and their whole crop destroyed, so much so that the people of that State are now engaged in charitable contributions to relieve the sufferings of the people in the drought-stricken districts. I do not know that this will be acceptable to them, inasmuch as their wants are being relieved by the efforts of their fellow-citizens.

Mr. CALL. Then they need not take it.

Mr. CAFFERY. But at all events, when an amendment of this sort is included for Florida, I think the condition of the State of Louisiana, of which I can speak knowingly, where the people are absolutely in a starving condition, deserves as much consideration at the hands of the Senate as the State of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I submit to the chairman of the subcommittee that the amount named in my amendment should stand at $1,000.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question will be on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which has been stated,

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 8, on page 22, it is proposed to insert:

Of which $500 shall be expended in the purchase of an extra supply of tobacco and other seed for the sufferers from cyclones and frosts in the State of Florida who are unable to purchase them.

Mr. CAFFERY. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "corn" after "tobacco," and after the word "Florida" by inserting "and the drought-stricken regions of Louisiana."

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to see our friends from Louisiana and other Southern States, who are such sticklers about the jurisdiction of Congress in appropriating money for these general purposes, offering such amendments as those now proposed. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that his amendment enlarges the scope of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida by inserting "drought." We have made appropriations heretofore for overflows of the Mississippi and other rivers; we have made appropriations for cyclones. Now the Senator from Florida adds "frosts" and the Senator from Louisiana proposes to add "droughts." We have some very severe frosts in the Northwest, and I should be willing to allow that appropriation of $500 for frosts, but I submit to the Senator from Louisiana that he is widening the scope of this appropriation by adding droughts. I should be glad if he would change that portion of his amendment.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that it is not droughts, or cyclones, or frosts that we are appropriating money for, but we are appropriating money for the suffering which can not otherwise be relieved, and for the improved production of the country which will be created by these appropriations. It is not the thing that caused the suffering, but what results from it.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I was misled by the phraseology of the amendment. I understood the Senator in his amendment to state the reasons why it was offered.

Mr. CALL. That is the reason, undoubtedly, but it is the result for which we are appropriating.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not notice whether the amendment of the Senator from Florida proposes to appropriate so much money from the sum already appropriated.

Mr. CALL. That is all. I do not propose to increase the amount.

Mr. CULLOM. If that is so, very well.

Mr. CALL. That is all.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I make no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "tobacco" the word "corn," and after the word "Florida" the words "and the drought-stricken regions of Louisiana."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendment be read as it will stand if amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as proposed to be amended will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment in line 8, on page 22, so as to read:

Of which $500 shall be expended in the purchase of an extra supply of tobacco, corn, and other seed for the sufferers from the cyclones and frosts in the State of Florida and the drought-stricken regions of Louisiana, who are unable to purchase them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There will have to be a yea-and-nay vote on that amendment if it is to go into the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. If a yea-and-nay vote is to be called for, I hope the Senator will withdraw the amendment. We are appropriating $150,000 to buy and distribute seeds. The chances are that the regions referred to in the amendment, which seem to be in a suffering condition, can be supplied out of the appropriation without any special legislation. I hope, therefore, the Senator will not embarrass the bill by urging the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I will submit to the suggestion of the Senator, though I should be very glad to have a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment, because I think what it proposes is a very important and proper thing to do; but in the present condition of the Senate I shall not press the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 23, line 14, after the word "represents," to strike out:

And in determining the number of packets of flower, vegetable, and other seeds, respectively, which shall be placed in the quota of each Senator, Representative, or Delegate, the Secretary shall be controlled by the written instructions filed with him by such member at any time prior to the 1st day of May each year, indicating the relative proportions of the flower, vegetable, and other seeds which said member desires in his quota. And the Secretary shall furnish to each such member either his entire quota or such part thereof as he may desire in sealed packets containing the names of the seeds contained therein printed upon the cover, together with a sufficient number of unsealed envelopes with properly printed blank frank slips attached thereto for inclosing and mailing said seed packets. If any member shall fail to express his wish in regard to the various kinds of seeds to be apportioned in his quota before the 1st day of May, the Secretary may apportion the same to said member according to his own judgment. The provisions of this amendment shall apply to the distributions succeeding the 1st day of May, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 16, to strike out:

Total miscellaneous, Department of Agriculture, $1,955,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "General expenses, Weather Bureau," on page 28, line 15, after the word "inspector," to insert "at a salary not to exceed $2,000;" and in line 18, after the word "Washington," to insert "who, without additional expense to the Government, may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be granted such leaves of absence as are now authorized to employees in the office of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, not to exceed thirty days in any one year, $352,195;" so as to make the clause read:

Salaries of one inspector, at a salary not to exceed $2,000, thirty local forecast officials, section directors, observers, operators, repairmen, messengers, laborers, and other necessary employees, outside of the city of Washington, who, without additional expense to the Government, may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be granted such leaves of absence as are now authorized to employees in the office of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, not to exceed thirty days in any one year, $352,195.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 20, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$717,162" and insert "$364,967;" so as to make the clause read:

All other expenses, itemized as follows: Maps, bulletins, and stationery for stations, and the maintenance of a printing office in the District of Columbia for printing the necessary circulars, weather maps, bulletins, and monthly weather reviews (including the hire of printers, lithographers, and other necessary working force); for traveling expenses; for freight and express charges; for instruments and shelters therefor; for telegraphing or telephoning reports and messages, the rates to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture by agreement with the companies performing the services; for rents and other incidental expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation; for maintenance and repair of seacoast telegraph lines; for river observations and reports; for storm and other signals; for cotton-region observations and reports; for corn and wheat observations and reports; for aerial observations and reports; for special observations and pay of observers of West Indian, Mexican, and Central American stations during the hurricane season; for supplies for climate and crop services; and for investigations on climatology, including assistance and all necessary expenses, $364,967.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 23, to strike out:

Total, Weather Bureau, $883,702.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 30, to strike out:

Total, Department of Agriculture, $2,272,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 2, to strike out:

Total, $3,155,702.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I propose an amendment which I understand the committee is willing to accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

Domestic sugar production: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue inquiry and ascertain the progress made in the production of domestic sugar from beets and sorghum, including the area of available lands adapted thereto, by irrigation or otherwise, and to investigate all other matters concerning the same; for cost of labor, traveling, and other expenses, $5,000.

Mr. CULLOM. I make no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

IRA H. SWEATT.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1323) for the relief of Ira H. Sweatt.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information, subject to objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Ira H. Sweatt, late of Company I, Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, a pension of $12 per month, under certificate No. 121863, issued October 27, 1892, and that no part of it shall be retained by any authority to reimburse the Government for any pension heretofore paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF J. W. TUCKER.

Mr. BATE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BATE. Very well.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask unanimous consent to call up a resolution reported this morning from the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his motion?

Mr. BATE. I withdraw the motion to enable the Senator from Louisiana to call up the resolution to which he refers.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a formal resolution reported from the Committee on Claims this morning to refer Senate bill 3463 to the Court of Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read for information, subject to objection.

Mr. CAFFERY. It is a resolution reported from the Committee on Claims to refer to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 3463) for the relief of the estate of J. W. Tucker, of Lafourche Parish, La.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the resolution has gone to the Public Printer, and is not now in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 11, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 10, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful Father, in whose sacred presence we dwell and under whose divine guidance we have been led as a nation through prosperity, through adversity, through sunshine and through storm, unto the present hour, continue, we beseech Thee, to thus guide us. Thou hast taught us in Thy revealed word and through many experiences that righteousness exalteth a nation, that sin is a reproach to any people. Help us, therefore, we beseech Thee, to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with Thee, O God, that the genius of our nation may more and more obtain until we become the beacon light of all the world, leading on to peace and prosperity in all the earth; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, on page 1677 of the RECORD the yea-and-nay vote on the immigration bill appears. Understanding that I was paired on that bill, I was engaged in some urgent committee work. The RECORD, however, does not show that I was paired. If I had been present, I should have voted "yea."

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have it appear by the RECORD that I was absent when the vote was taken on the immigration bill by reason of necessary attendance on a joint committee of the House and Senate, of which I am a member. If I had been present, I should have voted "yea."

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 3666 and ask for the immediate consideration thereof. When the bill, which is brief, is read, I will make a statement to the House explaining this request.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in case of a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia, the supreme court of said District may fill the same, and the person appointed by said court shall serve until an appointment is made by the President, and the appointee is duly qualified, and no longer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if there was any contest in the Senate over the passage of the bill?

Mr. HENDERSON. None whatever. The bill was considered in the Senate and passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Iowa what is the emergency that makes the passage of this bill necessary?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Georgia, I will say that there is a vacancy for the time being in the office of the United States district attorney for this District. Criminal cases are called and there is no one to represent the Government. There is doubt as to the right to fill the vacancy pro tempore, and this bill is for the purpose of giving that power to the supreme court of the District.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I would inquire whether the body which originated this bill might not very easily dispose of the matter by confirming the nomination for this office that is now pending?

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no doubt about that. They could fill it in that way, but they have not done so, and that is not a matter for us to inquire into. The vacancy exists, the public business is suspended, and this bill is proposed as the remedy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.

The question being taken, the motion was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following order:

Ordered, That at ten minutes before 1 o'clock on Wednesday, February 10, 1897, the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to take part in the count of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution (H. Res. 234) providing for the distribution of the maps and atlases of the United States Geological Survey in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre, in Mississippi River; and

A bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn.

COMMITTEE EXPENSES, ETC.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order. This is a privileged report, as the Chair understands.

The report sent to the desk by Mr. ALDRICH was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred sundry resolutions, beg leave to report as follows:

The resolution providing that the "Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be directed to transfer to the 'soldiers' roll' of the employees of the House the name of W. H. Grimshaw, disabled soldier of the late war, vice John Ryan, deceased," is hereby reported adversely.

The resolution directing that the "Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, to Kendall Lee, the sum of $100, for caring for the room of the Committee on Accounts during the past session and recess," is approved.

The resolution authorizing the "chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills to appoint two additional assistant clerks for the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the pay of said clerks to begin on January 6 and to continue during the remainder of the session," has been amended by your committee so that the pay of said clerks shall be $6 per day and begin on February 1, 1897, and in that form is approved.

The resolution authorizing the "chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency to expend not to exceed $120 as compensation for the employment of stenographers and typewriters" for the balance of this session is approved.

Your committee, therefore, beg leave to report and recommend the adoption of the following, to wit:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Kendall Lee, the sum of $100 for caring for the room of the Committee on Accounts during the past session and recess.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint two additional assistant clerks for the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the pay of said clerks to begin on February 1, 1897, and to continue during the remainder of the session, said clerks to be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives out of the contingent fund of the House, and at a rate not exceeding $6 per day each.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency be authorized to expend not to exceed $120 as compensation for the employment of stenographers and typewriters in addition to the $300 covered by resolutions passed during the first session of the present Congress, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I observe that one of these resolutions provides two additional assistant clerks for the Committee on Enrolled Bills. I believe a resolution for additional assistance in the enrollment of bills has been usual heretofore toward the close of a Congressional session; but have we not changed the method of enrolling bills? Are they not now printed instead of being enrolled on parchment, as formerly?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I believe they are.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then what is the necessity for this increase of clerical force?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I have been informed by the chairman of that committee that the adoption of this resolution is absolutely necessary for furthering the work before the committee from the present time until the end of the session. That was the statement of the chairman of the committee. I do not know whether he is here now or not. [A pause.] I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The question being taken, the resolutions favorably reported by the Committee on Accounts were adopted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the remainder of the report of the committee will be adopted. The Chair hears no objection.

CLAIMS OF KNOXVILLE WHIG.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill No. 21.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 21) to authorize the investigation by the Attorney-General of certain claims alleged to be due the late proprietors of the Knoxville Whig for advertising, and authorizing the payment therefor by the Secretary of the Treasury of any amounts found by the Attorney-General to be legally or equitably due.

Mr. DOCKERY. Reserving the right to object, I should be glad to hear the report read.

The report of the Committee on Claims (by Mr. COLSON) was read.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, does this matter require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I object.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30,1898; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to reserve all points of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 1091) to repeal sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885.

Mr. BAILEY. I reserve the right to object, pending the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I remember that when the public building at Detroit was provided for a large appropriation was made for that purpose; and one of the inducements in obtaining that appropriation was the statement that by reason of the central location of the old site the proceeds of its sale would go very far toward paying for the new building. I do not see in this report any sufficient excuse for stopping the return of that money to the Treasury and retaining a building which, so far as we now see, the Government does not need. Therefore I must object to the bill.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman allow me to explain? The bill appropriating money for the purchase of a new site and the erection of a new public building was passed fourteen years ago.

Mr. McMILLIN. This bill proposes to stop the sale of the old building.

Mr. CORLISS. The old site is not valued at over $100,000. The Government is now paying $6,000 a year for the use and occupation of private property.

Mr. HICKS. I object to the consideration of the bill.

MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1632) to permit owners of mining claims on forest reservations of the United States to perfect their title thereto, and to procure a patent therefor, and for other purposes.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right of objection until I can hear some explanation of this matter.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who will explain fully the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to give a right of way for the construction of tramways or railways from mines that are situated in forest reservations. At present there is no mode of acquiring such right of way by mine owners; and the purpose of this bill is to enable the owners of the mines under these circumstances to construct tramways or railways, so as to market their ores. The Government's interest is guarded in every particular. The Secretary of the Interior prescribes the manner in which the lines shall be located and requires the filing of maps of location. The owners of mines situated within forest reservations ought to have the right to market their ores, and it can be only done by granting them the right of way for the construction of tramways or railways in some such manner as is contemplated in this bill.

Under the circumstances it seems to me that there ought to be no objection to the consideration of the bill or to its passage.

Mr. LOUD. I would like, with the consent of the gentleman, to ask him a question for information.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. I would ask the gentleman if the effect of the first section of the bill is not to establish a right to perfect title where the title is not good?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the gentleman from California that that section in the bill is surplusage. Whenever a man locates and works a mine, he has a vested right in the mine and he has a right to perfect his title thereto even if it be within a forest reservation afterwards set apart by the proclamation or order of the President.

Mr. LOUD. But even if he had only made a filing, this would enable him to perfect the title.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The act giving the President the right to declare and establish forest reservations gives to the miner the right to perfect his title when he has once filed his location certificate as prescribed by law.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. If that be the case, I would ask the gentleman why not strike out this first section of the bill altogether?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because the Senate has passed the bill in this form, and to amend it now and send it back at this time of the session would mean the absolute loss of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. This grants a right to perfect title; and if that be not the purpose and is not necessary, why was it put into the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know why it was put in the bill, except possibly that it was drawn by some one who did not understand that provision of the law. It is the law now; but even if it were not the law, miners should have the privilege of perfecting their titles. The person who discovers and locates a mine under the general laws of the United States ought to have the privilege of perfecting his title at any time. But under the present law my contention is that the right is preserved to him.

Mr. BRUMM. There is no land grant here?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Nothing of the kind. Only a right of way for a tramway or railroad.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of considerable importance, apparently, and may be a very meritorious bill. But it is impossible to find out exactly what it does, and therefore I object to its consideration.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up at this time for consideration the bill (S. 1862) to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes, which has been considered and reported favorably by the House Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second section of an act to establish circuit courts of appeals, passed March 3, 1891, be amended so that the clause therein which now reads, "The costs and fees in the Supreme Court now provided for by law shall be costs and fees in the circuit court of appeals," shall read, "The costs and fees in each circuit court of appeals shall be fixed and established by said court in a table of fees, to be adopted within three months after the passage of this act: Provided, That the costs and fees so fixed by any court of appeals shall not, with respect to any item, exceed the costs and fees now charged in the Supreme Court." The senior justice of each circuit court of appeals shall, within three months after the fixing and establishing of costs and fees as aforesaid, transmit the same to the Chief Justice of the United States, and within one year thereof the Supreme Court of the United States shall revise said table, making the same, so far as may seem just and reasonable, uniform throughout the United States. The table of fees, when so revised, shall thereupon be in force for each circuit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

The report (by Mr. BROWN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary has had before it the bill (S. 1862) entitled "An act to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes," and recommend the passage of said bill with the following amendments:

In lines 13 and 14 strike out the words "the senior justice of," and in line 16 strike out the words "the same" and insert instead thereof the words "said table."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the report, I desire to have read a letter from the Attorney-General in regard to this bill.

The letter was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1897.

SIR: Referring to your inquiries at the Department, I have to say that I have examined the bill passed by the Senate (S. R. 1862) for the purpose of enabling each of the circuit courts of appeals to fix its own table of fees and costs, instead of charging the same fees and costs as the Supreme Court.

The latter plan is undoubtedly burdensome to litigants, and seems to me unbusinesslike. I had the honor of preparing myself the bill in question, to carry out the recommendation made in my annual report. (See report, 1896, page xix.) I regard its passage as very important.

JUDSON HARMON, Attorney-General.

Hon. FOSTER V. BROWN, M. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I object, Mr. Speaker, pending an explanation by the gentleman from Tennessee,

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to say that under the act of 1891, establishing our circuit courts of appeals, it was provided that the costs and fees of these courts should be the same as in the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, it has been found that the costs and fees charged in the Supreme Court of the United States are too high, and are burdensome to litigants. That fact was called to the attention of Congress in the annual report of the Attorney-General, which will be found on page 19 of the document of December of last year, and he recommended the passage of such a bill as this.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will not the effect of the bill be to give to the judges of the circuit courts of appeals absolute power in the matter of fixing the fees?

Mr. BROWN. The purpose of the bill is to allow the courts of appeals to reduce the costs and fees in those courts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but you do not require it, do you? The bill does not require the judges to reduce the fees, does it? There is no doubt about the necessity for the reduction——

Mr. BROWN. I do not understand the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWN] will suspend for a moment. The House will please be in order. The attendants in the gallery will see that conversation ceases.

Mr. TAWNEY. I say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWN] that there is no doubt about the necessity for the reduction of fees in the circuit courts of appeals. The only question is whether this bill requires the courts to reduce the fees, or whether it gives the judges discretionary power to allow the fees to remain as they are at the present time.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Or to increase them.

Mr. BROWN. If the gentleman will read further on in the bill, he will see that it provides that each circuit court of appeals shall make out a table of fees. That table of fees from each circuit court is to be submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States. The language of the bill is as follows:

Each circuit court of appeals shall, within three months after the fixing and establishing of costs and fees as aforesaid, transmit said table to the Chief Justice of the United States, and within one year thereof the Supreme Court of the United States shall revise said table.

The bill further provides that, so far as may seem just and reasonable, the Supreme Court may make the fees uniform throughout the United States. There is no question about the necessity for the passage of this law; but the Judiciary Committee thought it not advisable to set out in the statute a bill of fees, but thought it would be more advisable to pass this law to allow the courts to fix the fees.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the law at the present time fix the rate of fees to be charged in the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BROWN. It certainly does.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why is it not practicable, then, for the Judiciary Committee to report a bill fixing a reasonable rate of fees for the circuit courts of appeals, as it has been in the past to enact a law respecting the rate of fees in the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BROWN. Well, perhaps it would be better to do that, but it is not thought practicable to do that now, and we thought that to follow the recommendation of the Attorney-General and present the best bill which could be presented under the circumstances was the wise thing to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that the only effect of this bill will be to perpetuate the present system, the present rate of fees charged in the circuit courts of the United States?

Mr. BROWN. I do not think so.

Mr. TAWNEY. In other words, is it not a fact that the Supreme Court of the United States will, in all human probability, merely ratify the recommendations made by the circuit courts of appeals, and that those recommendations will be exactly in accordance with the suggestions made by the clerks of the several circuit courts of appeals of the United States?

Mr. BROWN. I do not think so, because the clerks have no interest in the rate of fees. The fees of the circuit courts of appeals go into the Treasury of the United States, and the judges of the circuit courts of appeals have urged the passage of this bill because they say that the cost charges in the circuit courts of appeals are too high.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BROWN. I know that the judges in our circuit, which is the sixth circuit, have urged the passage of this bill, because they say that the fees are too high and ought to be reduced. That is the object and purpose of this bill, to allow the judges to fix a scale of fees lower than the present scale, which is the same as that in the Supreme Court of the United States.

We hope to have good results from this bill, and I hope the gentleman will not interpose an objection. The bill has the indorsement of the Department of Justice and the unanimous approval of the Judiciary Committee, who thought it was the best bill that could be presented under the circumstances.

Mr. TAWNEY. If I thought that the bill would result in a reduction of fees in the circuit courts of appeals, I certainly should have no objection. My only object in calling attention to the matter was in the hope that the committee might possibly report a bill which would, as a matter of fact, reduce the fees, rather than leaving the reduction to be made by the courts in their discretion.

Mr. BROWN. I should have been glad myself to report such a bill. That was my idea; but we can not get everything that we want in this world, and I think this is the best that can be done under the circumstances.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the hope of a reduction, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BROWN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LYING-IN STATION FOR NAVAL VESSELS AT FOOT OF PALISADES OF THE HUDSON RIVER.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to appoint a board of naval officers to report upon the advisability of locating a lying-in station for naval vessels, or as the permanent anchorage, with dock and supply store, and also naval magazine, at the foot of the Palisades of the Hudson River.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this been reported by a committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think such a proposition had better be considered in the usual way.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS FOR TRAMROADS, CANALS, AND RESERVOIRS.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9607) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of right of way upon the public lands of the United States, not within limits of any park, forest, military or Indian reservations, for tramways, canals, or reservoirs, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, or corporation, for the purposes of furnishing water for domestic, public, and other beneficial uses; and all rights of way heretofore granted, or the applications for which have been made under the act approved March 3, 1891, and entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' may be used for said purposes."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof," in line 13, on page 1, and inserting the words "to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the canals and reservoirs, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, or 50 feet on each side of the center line of the tramroad."

On page 2 strike out, in line 15, the words "or corporation."

On same page strike out of line 16 the words "and all rights of way," and also strike out all of lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

Amend by adding a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That rights of way for ditches, canals, or reservoirs heretofore or hereafter approved under the provisions of sections 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the act entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, may be used for purposes of a public nature. And said rights of way may be used for purposes of water transportation for domestic purposes or for the development of power, as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation."

Mr. BLUE. Reserving the right to object, I would like a little explanation about this.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Let the report be read.

Mr. BOWERS. The report is very short, and will give an explanation.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9607) to amend "An act to permit the use of right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes." The bill was referred to the Interior Department, and the opinions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the honorable Secretary of the Interior are herewith printed as a part of this report, and the bill amended in accordance with their recommendations.

The purpose and effect of this bill is to allow the use of the right of way through the public lands for the purpose of furnishing water for domestic purposes. The right of way is now allowed by law for furnishing water for irrigation, mining, and reservoir purposes, and your committee can not conceive of any better or higher purpose for the use of the right of way than for furnishing the water for domestic and public use.

We therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "and 50 feet on each side of marginal limits thereof," in line 13, on page 1, and inserting the words "to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the canals and reservoirs, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof; or 50 feet on each side of the center line of the tramroad."

On page 2 strike out, in line 15, the words "or corporation."

On same page strike out of line 16 the words "and all rights of way," and also strike out all of lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

Amend by adding a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That rights of way for ditches, canals, or reservoirs heretofore or hereafter approved under the provisions of sections 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the act entitled: 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, may be used for purposes of a public nature. And said rights of way may be used for purposes of water transportation for domestic purposes or for the development of power, as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation."

And as so amended the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 2, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a report from the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 29th ultimo, upon House bill 9607, entitled "A bill to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way on public land for tramroads, canals, reservoirs, and for other purposes." I concur in the suggestions and recommendations made in the report of the Assistant Commissioner so far as they relate to that portion of the bill which seeks to amend the act approved January 21, 1895; but I would strike out from the bill all that portion of it after the word "uses," in line 16 thereof, which portion refers to the rights of way heretofore granted under the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes."

Sections 18 to 21, inclusive, of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095), grants a right of way through the public lands for reservoirs and canals under the regulations of this Department, and maps filed for the approval of this Department are required to contain a certificate that the right of way is desired for irrigation purposes only.

I do not believe that it would be for the public benefit to have the rights of way granted under that act to be subject to the uses contemplated in the act in question, but that it would tend to confuse the right-of-way acts now in existence.

Very respectfully,

D. R. FRANCIS,
Secretary.

Hon. W. W. BOWERS,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1897.

SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from the Department, for report in duplicate and return of papers, of a letter of Hon. W. W. BOWERS, of January 27, 1897, inclosing a copy of a bill (H. R. 9607).

The bill provides that the act of January 21, 1895 (28 Stat. L., 635), be amended by adding thereto the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of right of way upon the public lands of the United States, not within the limits of any park, forest, military or Indian reservation, for tramways, canals, or reservoirs, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, or corporation, for the purpose of furnishing water for domestic, public, and other beneficial uses; and all rights of way heretofore granted, or the applications for which have been made under the act approved March 3, 1891, and entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' may be used for said purposes."

So far as this bill proposes to extend the scope of the act of January 21, 1895, there seems to be no objection except as to the language used. The width of the right of way is given as "50 feet on each side of the marginal limits" of the "tramways, canals, or reservoirs." This language is indefinite, and I would recommend that for the words in line 13, "and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof," there be substituted the words used in the act of 1895 above, viz, "to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the canals and reservoirs, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, or 50 feet on each side of the center line of the tramroad." The bill allows such applications "by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States." The act of 1895 uses the same language, which has been held by the Department to include corporations organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory. But the present bill adds "or corporation," which, in view of the construction adopted by the Department, would add nothing to the language used in the act of 1895 except to admit applications by corporations organized under the laws of a foreign country. I would therefore recommend that the words "or corporation" be omitted from the fifteenth line.

The last clause permits the rights of way granted or those for which applications are pending under sections 18 to 21, act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095), to be used for "furnishing water for domestic, public, and other beneficial uses." The effect would be to destroy all distinction between the acts of 1891 and 1895 above noted. The act of 1891 grants an easement, irrevocable so long as it is used for the purposes provided by the act, held by the Department to include irrigation purposes only, while the act of 1895 authorizes merely a license to use the public land, which is revocable, and which terminates with the disposal of the land by the United States, for the purposes of "mining or quarrying or cutting timber and manufacturing lumber," the easement for irrigation under the act of 1891 being of the nature of a public benefit, the license under the act of 1895 being of the nature of a private benefit. By allowing the easement granted under the act of 1891 to be used for "other beneficial uses," it would permit the right of way to be used for mining, quarrying, or lumbering, and would open the grant of the easement to all sorts of private uses, under the well-settled rulings of the courts of the Western States in construing the words "beneficial use" in the local laws. This would be contrary to the spirit of the acts of 1891 and 1895 as understood by this office, in distinguishing between public and private uses, and appears, therefore, very objectionable.

I am of the opinion that if it were allowable to use the right of way for domestic or public purposes or for certain other purposes, which will not diminish the amount of water available for irrigation, as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation, the act of 1891 would be much more satisfactory in its operation, and the intention of the act as conferring a general benefit would be fully subserved. I would therefore recommend that all after the word "uses," in line 16, be omitted and the following added:

"SEC. 2. That rights of way for ditches, canals, or reservoirs heretofore or hereafter approved under the provisions of sections 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the act entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, may be used for purposes of a public nature. And said rights of way may be used for purposes of water transportation, for domestic purposes, or for the development of power, as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation."

A copy of this letter and the papers are herewith inclosed.

Very respectfully,

E. F. BEST,
Assistant Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, this measure is of too much magnitude to pass at this time without proper consideration. It should go to the Committee of the Whole, in my opinion, and I therefore object.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until five minutes to 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the motion, the Chair desires to state to the House that the seats from the main aisle on the right to the side of the House and the rows back to the seat of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] will be cleared by members of the House for the use of the Senate. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House take a recess until five minutes to 1.

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand from the reading of the resolution that the Senate would come to the House at ten minutes to 1 o'clock, and it might involve the House being in recess when the Senate arrived if this resolution were adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the gentleman from New Jersey had better withdraw the motion.

Mr. PITNEY. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is withdrawn. Gentlemen will please vacate the seats indicated.

COUNTING OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

At three minutes before 1 o'clock the Doorkeeper announced the Vice-President and the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms, and headed by the Vice-President of the United States and the Secretary of the Senate, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT took his seat as presiding officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying the chair on his left.

Senators BLACKBURN and LODGE, the tellers appointed on the part of the Senate, and Representatives GROSVENOR and RICHARDSON, the tellers appointed on the part of the House, took their places at the Clerk's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate and House of Representatives are now in joint session, pursuant to law, for the purpose of opening and counting the votes of the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States. The certificate of the State of Alabama will be read by the tellers.

Mr. BLACKBURN (one of the tellers) read at length the certificate of the vote of the State of Alabama, giving 11 votes for William J. Bryan, of the State of Nebraska, for President of the United States, and 11 votes for Arthur Sewall, of the State of Maine, for Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN of Ohio. Mr. President, I move that the formal reading of these credentials be omitted, and that the result only be announced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unless demanded, the reading of the certificates will be omitted, when the tellers are satisfied they are in due form and properly certified, and the result will be announced.

The tellers then proceeded to announce the electoral votes of the several States in the alphabetical order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This completes the roll of the States. The tellers will announce the result.

Mr. LODGE (one of the tellers). The state of the vote for President of the United States, as found by the tellers and now delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, has received for President of the United States 271 votes;

William J. Bryan, of the State of Nebraska, has received 176 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice-President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for Vice-President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, has received 271 votes;

Arthur Sewall, of the State of Maine, has received 149 votes, and

Thomas E. Watson, of the State of Georgia, has received 27 votes.

The report, as officially certified by the tellers, is as follows:

The undersigned, JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN and HENRY CABOT LODGE, tellers on the part of the Senate, and CHARLES H. GROSVENOR and JAMES D. RICHARDSON, tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, report the following as the result of the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1897:

JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
H. C. LODGE,
Tellers on the part of the Senate.

C. H. GROSVENOR,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Tellers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, has received for President of the United States 271 votes; and William J. Bryan, of the State of Nebraska, has received 176 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice-President of the United States, as delivered to the President of the Senate, is as follows:

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for Vice-President of the United States is 447, of which a majority is 224.

Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, has received 271 votes;

Arthur Sewall, of the State of Maine, has received 149 votes; and

Thomas E. Watson, of the State of Georgia, has received 27 votes.

This announcement of the state of the vote by the President of the Senate is, by law, a sufficient declaration that William McKinley, of the State of Ohio, is elected President of the United States, and that Garrett A. Hobart, of the State of New Jersey, is elected Vice-President of the United States, each for the term beginning March 4, 1897, and will be entered, together with a list of the votes, on the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The count of the electoral votes having been completed and the result declared, the joint meeting of the two Houses is dissolved, and the Senate will now return to its Chamber. [Loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The Senate then retired from the Hall (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), when the Speaker resumed the chair, and the House was again called to order.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Field McCauley; of members of the Bear Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends, of Dexter; of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Stark Congregational Church, of Stark, and of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Council Bluffs, all in the State of Iowa, and a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of East Fishkill, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of members of the Asbury Methodist Church; of members of the Pilgrim Congregational Church; of members of the East Side Christian Church, and of the Willard and Brookmuller unions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in any Government building; to prevent the nullification of State antigambling laws; to raise the age of protection to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and to restore the former Sabbath law of the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Okland, Cal., praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BACON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Augusta, Ga., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Grout bill, prohibiting the importation of oleomargarine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin presented the petitions of John F. Cavaugh, publisher of the Weekly Courier, of Clear Lake; of Ingram & Goodrich, publishers of the Entering Wedge, of Durand, and of A. S. Roethe, publisher of the Highland Press, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of House bill No. 4566, to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TILLMAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, S. C., praying for the ratification of the pending treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NELSON presented the petition of L. Erickson and sundry other citizens of Isante County, Mich., praying for the establishment of postal savings banks; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST. I report back from the Committee on Commerce, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, the bill (H. R. 9736) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River in the State of Washington. I wish to state that this identical bill, word for word, was passed by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President. The House of Representatives again passed the same bill and sent it here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4178) providing for the use by the United States of devices covered by letters patent, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 853) providing for the erection of a light-house at Orient Point, Long Island, New York, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3294) for the relief of officers and crews of the U. S. gunboats Kineo and Chocura, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. DAVIS on the 29th ultimo, reported it with amendments, and moved that it be printed and referred, with the accompanying report, to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PASCO on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3538) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1893, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 446) to increase the pension of Julia H. H. Crosby, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2599) to amend section 5399 and section 5406 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to unlawful interference with justice, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8443) to amend section 4878 of the Revised Statutes, relating to burials in national cemeteries, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3926) to correct the war record of David Sample, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 588) for the relief of William H. Hugo, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6417) to complete the military record of Caleb L. Jackson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3628) to provide for the revision and codification of the criminal and penal laws of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 1st instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

COURTS IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3675) to provide times and places for the trial in Oklahoma Territory of cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, to report it favorably without amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3513) to authorize the appointment of an additional judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment, and to ask its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to let the bill lie over a day, because another committee has been considering the proposition and perhaps an amendment will be proposed.

Mr. HOAR. They are ready to move the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Very well, if the committee are ready to move it.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator ready to move the amendment this morning?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; it is simply to provide for two additional judges.

Mr. HALE. That is all right. I do not object to that. I did not know the Senator was ready to propose the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, as I did not catch the reading exactly. Does the bill designate the point where the judge shall hold court in the Territory?

Mr. HOAR. That is to be determined by the court of appeals.

Mr. PLATT. There ought to be two additional judges there instead of one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I move to amend the bill, in line 4, by striking out, after the word "Senate," the word "an" and inserting the word "two," and after the word "additional," in the same line, by striking out the word "judge" and inserting the word "judges;" so as to read "two additional judges."

Mr. HOAR. I think that ought to be done. There are 400,000 inhabitants, or thereabouts, to be dealt with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not insist upon that amendment. We had this question before the Judiciary Committee this morning, and the committee decided upon an increase of one judge. Some suggestions were made about another judge. It strikes me that if the amendment is pressed the matter should go before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee on Indian Affairs have considered this matter carefully, and they think, and I entirely agree with them, that there should be two additional judges, although the Judiciary Committee determined upon but one. But that will make some delay necessary, and my plan was, after the Senator had made his amendment or proposed it, to have the bill laid aside for further consideration and call it up at a later day.

Mr. HILL. I would rather have it laid aside before the amendment is made.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let the amendment be moved and pending.

Mr. HILL. Yes; that is all right.

Mr. HOAR. Then let the bill be laid aside for the present.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to say one word, if the Senator from New York will give me his attention, because, being a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, it seemed perhaps strange that I should come here and move this amendment. I happened to be called away from the committee this morning when the bill was under consideration. I desired to present, and if I had been present I should have presented, the reasons which to my mind seem imperative why there should be two additional judges there. I wished to make that explanation of the reason why I moved the amendment under these circumstances.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is to be laid aside temporarily, I understand.

Mr. HILL. It is to go over without prejudice.

Mr. HOAR. It goes to the Calendar, to be called up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. A vacancy occurred in the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States by the death of General Beal. The House of Representatives passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 249) for appointment of a member of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled

Volunteer Soldiers, appointing to the vacancy Gen. John Marshall Brown, of the State of Maine. He is entirely acceptable to the Senators from Maine and to everybody, and I report back the joint resolution favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, and ask the Senate to concur in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask whether the joint resolution shows who are the other members of this Board?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; it is a mere recital that John Marshall Brown be appointed to fill the vacancy in the Board, and so forth, to succeed General Beal. It is the mere formal appointment of a member of the Board.

Mr. HILL. Who are the other members of the Board?

Mr. HAWLEY. I could not name them now to save my life. I know that General Franklin is the president of the Board and that it is composed of a number of other very active and prominent citizens, some of whom have given twenty years of very faithful devotion to the work.

Mr. HALE. This is simply the appointment of a Maine soldier—a gallant officer in the war—to take the place of another Maine soldier who died.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is merely to fill a vacancy.

Mr. HILL. I suppose in making these appointments we should equalize them over the country, so that all portions of the country would be represented, and therefore I desire to know where the others are located.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will explain that to the Senator. The members of the Board are scattered about the country. Each one of them has a particular Branch Home under his charge, in his parish or bishopric, but they altogether control the Home so far as possible. General Brown, who is put in the place of General Beal, will have special care of the large Soldiers' Home at Togus, in Maine. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] gives his paternal supervision to the Home down at Hampton, and so forth. There is an Ohio man who looks out for the Home at Dayton, Ohio. The thing is as well managed as possible.

Mr. HILL. How many are there in all?

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. There are eleven active members of the Board.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are two members of the Board present, the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] and the honorable Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. There are eleven active members of the Board.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me?

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall be very glad to have the Senator from New Jersey make an explanation.

Mr. HALE. If the joint resolution gives rise to debate, I shall have to object.

Mr. HAWLEY. There will be no debate.

Mr. SEWELL. I wish to satisfy the Senator from New York in relation to these appointments.

Mr. HILL. We simply ought to have a list of them.

Mr. SEWELL. The appointments have been made generally from among prominent officers of the late war who live, where possible, near Branch Homes of which they have supervision. In this case the appointment is to take the place of a gentleman who died recently, and he lives near the Home which he is expected personally to look after. There is no salary and there are no emoluments connected with the appointment. It is a pure labor of love.

Mr. HILL. Has the Senator with him a list of the Board, so that he can tell us their names and residences?

Mr. SEWELL. The president of the Board is Gen. W. B. Franklin, of Hartford, Conn. The next on the list are the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] and myself as vice-presidents. Gen. Martin T. McMahon, of New York, whom the Senator knows very well, is the secretary of the Board. The next on the list is Gen. A. L. Pearson, of Pittsburg, Pa. Then follow Col. GEORGE W. STEELE, of Marion, Ind.; Gen. A. W. Barrett, of Los Angeles, Cal.; Gen. C. M. Anderson, of Greenville, Ohio; Col. S. G. Cook, of Herington, Kans., and Gen. Thomas J. Henderson, of Princeton, Ill., with the President of the United States, the Chief Justice of the United States, and the Secretary of War as members ex officio. The vacancy on the Board was caused by the death of Gen. George L. Beal, of Norway, Me., for which place General Brown has been named, who is eminently qualified and was a distinguished soldier.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COST AND PRICE OF ARMOR.

Mr. CHANDLER. In pursuance of the resolution of the Senate adopted December 31, 1895, I submit a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs in relation to the prices of armor for vessels of the Navy.

I move that the usual number of copies of the report and appendix without the testimony, and that the same number of additional copies of the report and appendix with the testimony, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3678) to fix the salaries of the several district judges of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3679) to extend certain patents; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin introduced a bill (S. 3681) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes, approved June 16, 1880,' approved February 13, 1895;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3682) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Boltin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 3683) to amend the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 200) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3678) to fix the salaries of the several district judges of the United States, reported it without amendment.

PERRINE GRANT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by the full committee or by a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, be authorized to investigate the issue of patents for the lands embraced in what is known as the Perrine grant, in the State of Florida, with power to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths.

Mr. BERRY. The resolution should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution does not in terms provide for an expenditure, but indirectly of course there would be an expenditure.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the resolution should go over, at any rate, until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. It had better go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BERRY. Let it go over until to-morrow morning. I want to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection, and the resolution goes over.

THE MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

Mr. WALTHALL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the following information:

First. A copy of the memorial of the Choctaw Nation of December 24, 1889, relative to the Mississippi Choctaws.

Second. Deposition of Greenwood Leflore, ex-chief of the Choctaw Nation, of February 24, 1843, before United States Commissioners Clayborne and Graves relative to importance of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830.

Third. Whether or not the Choctaws entitled to remain in Mississippi by the fourteenth article were reported by United States Commissioners Murray and Vroom to the President of the United States on July 31, 1838, as having been in a great number of cases forced to remove from the reservations granted them by the fourteenth article.

Fourth. Whether or not the Mississippi Choctaws were parties to any subsequent Choctaw treaty, or have ever executed a relinquishment of their rights of Choctaw citizenship.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 10th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1624) to quiet title and possession with respect to certain unconfirmed and located private-land claims in the State of Louisiana.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GALLINGER were appointed.

GASPAR A. BETANCOURT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of February 4, 1897, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, submitting copies of correspondence relative to the arrest and detention of Gaspar A. Betancourt, a citizen of the United States, by the Spanish authorities in Cuba.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 11, 1897.

KILLING OF SEGUNDO N. LOPEZ.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of February 2, 1897, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, relative to the killing of Segundo N. Lopez, son of M. F. Lopez, at Sagua la Grande, in Cuba.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 11, 1897.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I appeal to the Senator from Maine——

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator wait until I get the bill up.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the Senator from Maine yield, that I may make a suggestion?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask that the resolutions which are before the Senate as a part of the morning business, on which I have been addressing the Senate, may go over without prejudice as a part of the morning business and without losing their place until Monday morning next. I expect to be absent from the city until that time. I wish at some time to conclude my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the resolution submitted by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], instructing the Committee on Pacific Railroads to inquire and to report to the Senate whether the executive department has, by existing law, authority to foreclose the Government mortgage or lien upon the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads, etc., may be laid aside informally until Monday morning, holding the place it now occupies.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is not in his seat at this time. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he wait until his colleague is in the Chamber before he asks consent.

Mr. HALE and others. There will be no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10134) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] has a short bill that he wishes to have considered, and I yield to him, reserving the right to object if it gives rise to debate.

RETIREMENT OF ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 3673) to amend chapter 67 of volume 23 of the Statutes at Large of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the act approved September 30, 1890, so as to read:

That when an enlisted man has served thirty years in the United States Army or Marine Corps, or as an enlisted man or appointed petty officer in the United States Navy, he shall, by making application to the President, be placed on the retired list with 75 per cent of his pay and allowances of the rank or rate upon which he was retired: Provided, That all active service in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during time of war, insurrection, or rebellion shall be computed as double time in computing the thirty years necessary to entitle the applicant to be retired: Provided further, That all honorable service in the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall be computed as within the period necessary to entitle the applicant to retire under the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the title ought not to be amended so as to give some idea of what the amendment of the law is. The title simply states that it is an amendment to a certain chapter of the Statutes at Large of the United States.

Mr. CAMERON. The bill is as it came from the Navy Department. It was proposed by the Department.

Mr. HALE. The suggestion is in regard to the title. The title ought to state what the bill is.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well; let the title be amended.

Mr. HOAR. I think the title should be amended so as to show the subject to which it relates. What is the subject?

Mr. HALE. It relates to the time of enlisted men in the Navy.

Mr. HOAR. Then add to the title "relating to the retirement of enlisted men."

Mr. CAMERON. "The time of enlisted men in the Navy."

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend chapter 67 of volume 23 of the Statutes at Large of the United States, and to further provide for the retirement of enlisted men in the United States Army and Marine Corps and enlisted men and petty officers of the United States Navy."

DANIEL T. TOLLETT.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me to call up a pension bill which I should like to have considered by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HALE. If it gives rise to no debate, but after this I can not yield to any further bills.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2832) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Daniel T. Tollett, of Centerpoint, Howard County, Ark., late a private in Captain Moore's company, Arkansas Mounted Volunteers, Sabine Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRATERNAL BENEFICIARY SOCIETIES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Maine to permit me to make a motion simply, which will not lead to debate.

Mr. HALE. It is only a formal motion, I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday at my suggestion the bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations in the District of Columbia was laid upon the table. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HALE. I can not yield for anything that will take any time. I am under pressure to go on with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which is before the Senate. I have told several Senators that I could not yield for any more bills.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I shall not call up the matter now, but I wish to state that it refers to a bill which was recalled from the President, and as soon as the pending appropriation bill is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to dispose of that matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to give notice that after the appropriation bill is disposed of I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10134) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 15, on page 2, the last clause read being as follows:

Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Guatemala and Honduras, $10,000.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine having this bill in charge as to the item of this bill which has just been read. It has been alleged on the floor of the Senate, by what authority I do not know, that the President has given us information of a change in the diplomatic relations of Central America of some kind, which would make the sending of a minister to these three States inappropriate, and I should like to have some explanation about that.

We have been informed here in some irregular way of the fact that a diet has been established in Central America, which has jurisdiction of international affairs. We are informed that that diet is represented here by a minister plenipotentiary, who represents three States—Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua. Two of those States are embraced in this clause, and the third is omitted; the State of Costa Rica is put in here in place of Honduras.

That leads, Mr. President, to a very awkward complication there. I have information of an unofficial sort, derived through newspapers and through some statements made on the floor of the Senate here by other Senators who may have better advices than I have about it, that the foreign offices in the States of Nicaragua, Honduras, and Salvador have been closed; that they have no foreign offices now, and our ministers sent to these respective States can have no communication through any foreign office there with the Governments to which they are accredited. That leaves a very awkward complication, it seems to me. We accredit a minister to Nicaragua, and when he goes there he finds no foreign office; we accredit another to Salvador, and he goes there and finds no foreign office; he can not hold communication with the Republic of Salvador; but somewhere amongst the three States of Nicaragua, Salvador, and Honduras there is an establishment, a foreign office, which does hold official communication with the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, if this arrangement has been made, and if it has been duly notified to the Senate of the United States, then of course the passing of a bill here to recognize that diet as the true representative of the official relations of these three Republics would be a very important matter to them and to us; but a bill passed here now which entirely overlooks that arrangement, which the President has submitted in his message to the Congress, would be not only a very awkward business, but it would discredit the diplomatic functions of the diet. Notwithstanding we are informed here that this diet exists, that it represents all of the foreign relations of these three Republics in some way or other, we send a minister to two of these States and another State of Central America, without taking the slightest notice of the powers and authority conferred by this internal arrangement between these three Republics upon the diet and its representative at this capital.

I wish to hear from the Senator from Maine who has this bill in charge why it is that this awkward lapse occurs in the bill, and why we should not reform this bill so as to accommodate it to the arrangement suggested in the President's message?

Mr. HALE. I see the force of the inquiry of the Senator from Alabama, and I am very glad he has made the inquiry. This appropriation deals not with the question of the ministers sent from those countries to us, but with ours sent to them. We have now ministers, under the old subdivision, to Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador upon one side, and Guatemala and Honduras on the other. Those ministers are there. Their pay will cease unless we appropriate, and in dealing with them it has not been thought advisable to change that basis for the present, as they are there and they need their salaries. But in the meantime, if any new arrangements are made and the two other countries which have not sent a joint minister here do not, the Department will have to arrange the matter at the end of the fiscal year; but it can not now, as the Senator will see, arrange what shall be done in the way of sending ministers. It is not well to disturb this order until it is all adjusted. I do not think any better way can be found than to continue the old arrangement, as we have ministers there now—one to Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador, and one to Guatemala and Honduras—until the Department can see whether there is anything further to be done in the way of a change of our ministers there. That is all the explanation, I suppose, that is necessary.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, of course that is a very candid explanation, but it leaves us still in a very difficult situation toward these Republics. Our minister goes there accredited to three Republics.

Mr. HALE. He is there now.

Mr. MORGAN. And he is there now accredited to three Republics, with whom we can not hold any communication at all, except with a diet, which represents two of them and does not represent the third; that is to say, it is supposed to represent two of them. It certainly does not represent Costa Rica. Costa Rica has nothing to do with it; and I have information that Costa Rica is quite stirred up about it, and is not at all agreeable to this diet arrangement.

Here comes a minister from the Greater Republic of Central America; he is accredited here and received by the President of the United States; his credentials are said to be in due form, and he is placed amongst the class of ministerial representatives to this capital. We have even gone so far here as to get an official communication from that minister before the Senate, which has been debated here for days together, and upon his statement there have been made some very strong and earnest appeals to the Congress of the United States not to proceed upon a certain very important matter that we are connected with by our legislation as well as historically.

Now, I think, Mr. President, in view of the facts which are known, for us to accredit our minister now to these three Republics under the old régime, without taking any notice of this official change in their diplomatic relations toward us, must have the double effect of denouncing and discarding any recognition of that Greater Republic of Central America, and also of placing our ministers who are there, and those who may be sent there under this appropriation, in such a position as that they can hold no diplomatic intercourse with either of these States. Our minister, Mr. Baker, who is there now—and a very excellent minister he is, too, and a very able man—could have no communication at all with this diet under this act of appropriation or under any other act of Congress of which I have any knowledge. He could have no authority at all to address the Government of Honduras, for instance, because he is not accredited to that Government; he is accredited to Salvador, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica. He can not possibly have any diplomatic relations with the Government of Honduras. So it leaves this matter in a very awkward shape.

Mr. President, this has all arisen from the fact that the President of the United States has not considered it worth his time to inform the Senate of the United States of the actual state of diplomatic relations between this Government and foreign governments. He seems to have the idea that he can regulate it all by himself, and that it is not necessary to call upon the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States to do anything at all in respect of the recognition of the existence and the authority or the integrity of any foreign country.

Now, that is a new Government, entirely new, as entirely new as the Government of the Republic of Cuba would be if that Government were to appear here, as it has appeared, with a minister and we should undertake to recognize him. That Government has a minister now in the United States—that is to say, a diplomatic agent, with supreme diplomatic powers and functions rising above those of an ordinary minister—but we pay no attention to that. Well, perhaps that is all right. At the same time this other minister, if we fail to recognize him, stands upon no better ground than a minister from Cuba. He comes here now with his credentials from an entirely new Government, not one that is known to this Government—one that is ignored in this bill, one that has no provision of law in the United States in the slightest degree to sanction his existence, or the regularity of his appointment, or the value of his credentials. It is perfectly new; and here we are left floundering about in this condition, with the Executive recognizing a minister from a foreign Government here, representing the States of Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua, and we are making an appropriation to send a minister to Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador, who can not find access there to a public office of foreign affairs where he can present his credentials and have himself recognized and through which he can hold any intercourse with either of those Republics. His credentials, his powers, his duties there as a diplomatic agent are confined entirely to the Greater Republic of Central America, if there is such a thing as that, because we are informed that the Greater Republic, consisting of three States, two of which are in this bill and the other is not, has accredited a minister to this Government who is said to have full diplomatic power and recognition.

It is time, Mr. President, that we should do one of two things: We should either proceed, as this bill is proceeding, to ignore entirely the whole of the operations of the President of the United States on this subject, pass them by as if they had not existed, or as if they were the idle wind, or else proceed in conformity with some suggestion of his, if we had such a suggestion, to send a minister to the Greater Republic down there, that seems to have a diplomatic organization, at least for the purpose of being represented in foreign governments.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to inquire whether the President of the United States has ever communicated to Congress the fact that he has received a minister from the Greater Republic of Central America?

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that the fact is stated in his annual message.

There is another very important matter arising out of this to which I think the attention of the Senate ought at least to be called as we pass along. I do not propose to change this appropriation at all; I want to let it stand there, because it is exactly in accordance with the laws of the United States and its political and diplomatic history, and corresponds precisely with the actual legal diplomatic situation in the United States; the appropriation is all right. But while we are doing that we can not avoid the conclusion that we are ignoring the existence of the Greater Republic of Central America as a diplomatic establishment entitled to hold intercourse with this Government. After we pass this bill, I do not see what the President of the United States can do with Mr. Rodriguez except to say he has no further use for him. How can he represent a republic here, a new republic with a new name and new powers, while we are acting in our votes in the House of Representatives and in the Senate upon appropriation bills on the line of the old policy, in which that Republic has no recognition; on the contrary, in which we recognize distinctly the existing régime, the existing arrangement, and make appropriations to supply it and provide for it? It is a very awkward situation, to say the least of it, and the Congress of the United States and the Senate of the United States are not in the slightest degree responsible for it.

I have called attention to this because I should like to see corrected, if it can be, amicably and without raising a fuss in the family, this condition of embarrassment and distrust that seems to obtain between the Executive and the Congress of the United States upon a question of great importance like this. Here we are left in the dark; here we are with a minister, recognized here at this capital, who sends messages actually through the Secretary of State into the Senate, and they are here received and debated and commented upon, and yet, when we come to pass an appropriation bill, instead of accrediting the minister we sent out there to that Government, we accredit a minister to an entirely different set of States—not entirely different, but two of those States and another, Costa Rica, which is not included in the programme at all.

I do not know what can be done about it. I have no motion to make, because I have no facts upon which to make a motion. If we had a communication here from the President of the United States that he had recognized that Republic, and that it was an existing entity as a government, and had some description of the powers of that Greater Republic of Central America, then I should be prepared in good faith to make a motion to respond to their overtures in sending a minister here by returning a minister to that tribunal, to that court, or to that diet, or whatever you please to call it.

I understand, but from the newspapers—I do not know whether the President's message refers to the fact I am about to state or not; I do not remember—but I understand that Nicaragua, Honduras, and Salvador, in forming this diet, have not created between themselves any political union for any internal affairs, but that their relations are entirely those which concern foreign intercourse.

Mr. HALE. For purposes of negotiation.

Mr. MORGAN. And, I suppose, of concluding treaties. That is a curious state of affairs, Mr. President, and very awkward and very embarrassing, because we do not know how far we can go or in what direction really in making negotiations with that minister here. For instance, if a dispute should arise—as disputes have arisen and have been reconciled and settled between the Governments of Costa Rica and Nicaragua on the one hand and the Government of the United States upon the other in respect of the Nicaraguan Canal—what right would this minister have to represent the Government of Nicaragua and the Government of Costa Rica—he does not pretend to any right to represent Costa Rica; but to represent the Government of Nicaragua—in a diplomatic arrangement of some question which concerns the internal polity of Nicaragua as connected with its obligations and rights toward the United States? He can not do anything of that sort, so far as I know. On the contrary, the brief and very imperfect intimations we have had, even through the newspapers, in regard to the scope of his authority show that he can not do anything of the kind. He can not negotiate a question of that kind; he can not arrange between the United States and Nicaragua even, which he represents as the minister from the diet, any questions which concern the separate individual policy and obligations and rights and duties of the State of Nicaragua. He could not do it as to Costa Rica, with whom we have the identical relations that we have with Nicaragua upon that important subject; he could no nothing at all.

I thought I would get before the Senate and before the country all that we know about this matter. Having effected that purpose, I have no further suggestions to make, and I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. BACON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that he was mistaken in suggesting that the President had communicated to Congress in his annual message the fact of the reception of the minister from the Greater Republic of Central America. That minister was received on the 24th day of December last, long subsequent to the date of the President's annual message. It may be that the fact of the reception of that minister has been communicated to Congress in some special message, but if so, it has escaped my attention.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think it has been.

Mr. BACON. Unless it has been by a special message, the fact has never been officially communicated to Congress that that minister has presented himself and been received.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I stand corrected, Mr. President, and I do it with cheerfulness, because it seems to show still more fully that the welcoming of this minister here is a mere perfunctory affair, a piece of politeness, which does not amount to anything in law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning at line 16 on page 2. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Salaries of secretaries of embassies and legations," on page 5, line 7, before the word "Germany," to insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "Germany," to strike out "and Mexico;" and in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

Second secretaries of embassies to Great Britain, France, and Germany, at $2,000 each, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to insert:

Second secretary of legation to Mexico, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 2, to insert:

PAYMENT TO LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF LATE PIERCE M. B. YOUNG.

To pay to the legal representatives of Pierce M. B. Young, who died while envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Guatemala and Honduras, six months' salary of said officer subsequent to the date of his death, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 9, to insert:

DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW OF THE UNITED STATES.

For revising, reindexing, and otherwise completing and perfecting, by the aid of such documents as have become available since 1886, the second edition of the Digest of the International Law of the United States, Taken from Documents Issued by Presidents and Secretaries of State, and from Decisions of Federal Courts and Opinions of Attorneys-General, the work to be done under the supervision of the Secretary of State, $10,000, said sum to be immediately available.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine what is the necessity for inserting the restriction in these words, on line 14, page 12, "available since 1886?"

Mr. HALE. That is the time of the old edition.

Mr. MORGAN. I know it is; but there is a good deal of matter which is referred to in the old edition which ought really to be incorporated in the text.

Mr. HALE. Then let it be amended so as to read, "by the aid of such documents as may be useful."

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. HALE. In lines 13 and 14, on page 12, I move to strike out the words "have become available since 1886" and to insert "may be useful."

I think the Senator from Alabama is right in his suggestion. There may be other documents beyond those.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "as," in line 13, on page 12, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the words "have become available since 1886" and insert "may be useful;" so as to read:

DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW OF THE UNITED STATES.

For revising, reindexing, and otherwise completing and perfecting, by the aid of such documents as may be useful, the second edition of the Digest of the International Law of the United States, Taken from Documents Issued by Presidents and Secretaries of State and from Decisions of Federal Courts and Opinions of Attorneys-General, the work to be done under the supervision of the Secretary of State, $10,000, said sum to be immediately available.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Salaries, consular service," on page 13, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Total, $105,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to increase the appropriation for salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents from $425,000 to $432,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 23, to insert:

Brazil:
Consul at Santos.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 17, to insert:

Belgium:
Consul at Ghent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 16, after the word "Dunfermline," to insert "Newcastle on Tyne;" so as to read:

Great Britain and British Dominions:
Consuls at Barbados, Cardiff, Chatham, Cork, Dublin, Dunfermline, Newcastle on Tyne, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Switzerland," on page 18, line 17, to strike out "Consul at Zurich" and insert "Consuls at Horgen and Zurich."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 23, to strike out:

Brazil:
Consul at Santos.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Great Britain and British Dominions," on page 19, line 18, after the word "(Canada)," to strike out "Newcastle-on-Tyne."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 19, after the word "at," to insert "Alexandretta;" so as to make the clause read:

Turkey:
Consuls at Alexandretta, Harpoot, and Sivas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 24, to strike out:

Belgium:
Consul at Ghent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 8, to insert:

Greece:
Consul at Patras.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Allowance for clerks at consulates," on page 24, line 4, after the word "Huddersfield," to insert "Horgen;" and in line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "seven thousand eight" and insert "eight thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

Cairo, Cologne, Constantinople, Huddersfield, Horgen, Mayence, Munich, Nottingham, Odessa, Para, Pernambuco, Tampico, Vera Cruz, and Zurich, at $600 each, $8,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for allowance for clerks at consulates from $105,170 to $105,770.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And of this sum the Secretary of State is authorized to use not exceeding $3,120 for services of employees in the Bureau of Statistics, Department of State, in the work of compiling and distributing such reports, and not exceeding $250 in the purchase of such books, maps, and periodicals as may be necessary to the editing of diplomatic, consular, and other commercial reports.

So as to make the clause read:

PUBLICATION OF DIPLOMATIC, CONSULAR, AND OTHER COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

Preparation, printing, publication, and distribution, by the Department of State, of the diplomatic, consular, and other commercial reports, $25,000; and of this sum the Secretary of State is authorized to use not exceeding $3,120 for services of employees in the Bureau of Statistics, Department of State, in the work of compiling and distributing such reports, and not exceeding $250 in the purchase of such books, maps, and periodicals as may be necessary to the editing of diplomatic, consular, and other commercial reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. After the word "copies," in line 18, page 27, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "copies," in line 18, on page 27, it is proposed to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to change the name of the Bureau of Statistics to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, and that the foregoing provision shall apply with the same force and effect to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce as to the Bureau of Statistics.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I will put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from the Secretary of State explaining it.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 10, 1897.

SIR: I observe that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill as reported by you to the Senate contains the paragraph relating to the publication of diplomatic, consular, and other commercial reports in the form which I had the honor to submit with the estimates, with the exception of the final clause, viz:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to change the name of the Bureau of Statistics to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, and that the foregoing provision shall apply with the same force and effect to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce as to the Bureau of Statistics."

Upon the assumption that the omission of this paragraph was accidental or that the committee was not fully informed on the subject, I deem it proper to call your attention to the practical need of some permission of this character. You will observe that the language is not mandatory, but merely authorizes the Secretary of State to change the name of the Bureau of Statistics to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce. The reasons for this change are found in the embarrassment caused the Department by the confusion arising from the fact that there are three Bureaus of Statistics in the different Departments, viz, those of the Department of State, the Treasury, and the Department of Agriculture. The name Bureau of Statistics, moreover, does not properly designate the functions of the Bureau for this Department. It is, in point of fact, a bureau of foreign commerce, and, if designated as such, would have a more distinct individuality and would attract more general attention in the business community. Notwithstanding the greater publicity which has been secured in recent years for this feature of the Department's work, there is still a regretable lack of information among our manufacturers and exporters as to the practical value of the commercial reports of diplomatic and consular officers. The proposed change of name is, in my judgment, an important step in the direction of placing the Bureau in closer touch with the business interests of the country and enabling it to develop on purely industrial and commercial lines.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

RICHARD OLNEY.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 27, line 18, to strike out:

And provided further, That a sum not exceeding $250 of this appropriation may be expended in the purchase of such books, maps, and periodicals as may be necessary to the editing of the consular and commercial reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 20, after the word "Bureau," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of the fifth and sixth sections of the act entitled "An act establishing post routes, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, for the transmission of official mail matter, be, and they are hereby, extended and made applicable to all official mail matter of the Bureau of the American Republics established in Washington by recommendation of the International American Conference, representing the International Union of American Republics.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I desire now to present and have considered the conference report on the act to amend the immigration laws.

Mr. FAULKNER. Before that is done, I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] informed me a few minutes ago that he had received a telegram from Lexington, Va., stating that the brother-in-law of Mrs. Gibson, Hon. John Randolph Tucker, is at the point of death. The Senator from Maryland had to leave the Senate to inform Mrs. Gibson of that fact and to make arrangements for her to leave the city. He requested me to ask that the bill should not be taken up for action to-day.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I have no desire to press the matter under such circumstances; and if I can have an agreement as to taking a vote on the report at any reasonable time, I will very gladly let it go over to accommodate the Senator from Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the conference report may be taken at 4 o'clock on Saturday.

Mr. HALE (to Mr. LODGE). Make it 3 o'clock.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest that the Senator do not fix the time for a vote before Monday.

Mr. LODGE. Well, on Monday, then, at 4 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that a vote may be had on the conference report relating to what is known as the immigration bill on Monday next at 4 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. For the moment, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. LODGE. In the presence of objection, I feel it my duty to ask the Senate to go on with the report to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me for one moment?

Mr. PALMER. If I can speak without interruption for a minute, I will say that I objected for the moment. I desire to address the Senate on the report, and the junior Senator from Maryland also wishes to speak. When he will return, I am unable to say.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Maryland expects to be here to-morrow. He is not going to leave the city, but he had to go to inform his wife of this sad occurrence.

Mr. PALMER. In his absence, I do not see how we can make an agreement.

Mr. LODGE. I have gone over two days beyond the time asked by the Senator from Maryland. This is a conference report in its last stage. It has been debated at every point. I desire to be as reasonable about it as possible. The bill has been amended to suit the wishes of the Senate; it comes back in the form the Senate desires, and I think it is not unreasonable for me, if I do not press it to-day——

Mr. HALE. Or to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Or to-morrow, to ask that a time shall be fixed for taking a vote on Monday.

Mr. HALE. That is fair.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is a perfectly fair request. If it is objected to, I shall feel it my duty to force the consideration of the report to-day, which I am most reluctant to do. I ask the Presiding Officer again to submit the request, and ask if there is objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he let his request go over until to-morrow morning. If he fails then to secure an agreement, I will assist him in taking up the bill. But under the circumstances, when this request comes from the Senator from Maryland who is absent——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Florida will allow me, I will state that all that the Senator from Maryland asked was that I should put the matter over until to-morrow, and I propose to put it over until Monday.

Mr. PASCO. I understand this is a request to take a vote on the report?

Mr. LODGE. The final vote.

Mr. PASCO. I think the Senator from Maryland ought to be here.

Mr. LODGE. I have made it as liberal as possible. I do not want to press the report to-day.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that the Senator let it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to let the report go over until Monday, but I think that if I am asked to make such a concession, I may ask in return for an agreement. If Monday is not agreeable, I will make it Tuesday.

Mr. FAULKNER. Suppose the Senator from Massachusetts makes it Wednesday?

Mr. LODGE. Very well. I will make it Wednesday, which will give everybody an opportunity to speak.

Mr. PALMER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that at 4 o'clock on Wednesday the vote on the conference report may be taken. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 12, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 11, 1897.

POSTMASTER.

B. R. Doody, to be postmaster at Canton, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOHN M. GUYTON.

Mr. STRAIT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk (S. 1860), for the relief of John M. Guyton, late postmaster at Blacksburg, S. C.

The bill was read, as follow:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $484.79 be allowed to John M. Guyton, former postmaster at Blacksburg, S. C., being the amount deposited by him to cover a deficiency arising in his office in the year 1890, which deposit was made to meet a loss by the embezzlement of a clerk on or about the 30th day of January, 1890, without blame or fault on the part of the said John M. Guyton, and that a sum sufficient to pay the allowance now made is hereby appropriated out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HULL. Before objecting, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and the gentleman from South Carolina if it is customary for the Government to make good the embezzlement of employees in post-offices? Is not the postmaster responsible for such a thing on his bond?

Mr. STRAIT. From the opinion of the Attorney-General, it does not seem that the postmaster would be responsible; but he paid the money, and now he asks to be reimbursed, and there is no provision made for reimbursement.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that at the instance of a gentleman from New York on his side of the House a defalcation of this kind of five or ten or fifteen thousand dollars was provided for by Congress only a few weeks ago.

Mr. HULL. That may be; but I think it is very bad policy for the Congress of the United States to pass bills here to reimburse postmasters whose own appointees have defaulted, and I think I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit me——

Several members addressed the Chair, and Mr. EDDY was recognized.

ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3603) to extend the time for the completion of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. BAILEY. I object. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLARKE] has a privileged motion, which will be submitted.

BIRMINGHAM AND WARRIOR RIVER WATERWAY.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate engrossed copy of the joint resolution (S. R. 191) relative to the improvement of the waterway between Birmingham, Ala., and the Black Warrior River, the same having been lost or misplaced.

The resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HULL in the chair.

All points of order on the bill were reserved.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in presenting the annual budget for fortifications, I desire to call attention to some of the salient points of the bill. The bill carries on its face $9,178,325. At the proper time I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], my colleague on the committee, to move an amendment of $75,000 for a sea wall at Sandy Hook, which, through inadvertence, was omitted, so that gentlemen in considering the bill may deem it one for $9,253,000, in round numbers. I desire further to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the estimates submitted to us from the Department aggregated $18,390,256. During the Forty-ninth Congress, for the fiscal year 1887–88, no appropriations whatever were made on account of fortifications, and for the twelve fiscal years from 1875 to 1886, inclusive, the appropriations made by Congress for this purpose averaged only about $540,000 per annum, while the average for the fourteen years, including 1887 and 1888, was only $463,000 per annum. Last year it was decided, after full consideration that the time had arrived when Congress should take a new departure in the matter of fortifications.

Your committee recognized a fact which had been patent to every observer, that our seacoast was practically undefended, and that we were, as I stated on a previous occasion, in the same situation as a wealthy man who, with full knowledge of the facts, seeks unfrequented paths which are beset by footpads and deliberately exposes himself to assault, blackmail, and robbery. We recognized the fact that although a competent board, which had been organized in 1885, known as the Endicott board, had submitted approved plans for fortifications estimated at that time to require an expenditure of $120,000,000 and now estimated to require about $80,000,000, fortifications which would satisfactorily protect our seacoast, yet, during the lapse of all these years, less than $20,000,000 in the aggregate had been expended for the purpose of fortifications, and this money had been expended mainly for purposes which may appropriately be termed "housekeeping" in connection with the work of fortifications, the real work not having been really entered upon. So that the appropriations made at the last session of Congress, aggregating $7,414,000 in cash and making provision for more than $4,200,000 of contracts, practically did more for the fortifications of this country than had been done in all the years since the war.

Encouraged by this action of Congress, the Department made its estimates for $18,390,000 for the next fiscal year. This estimate was less than one-fifth of 1 per cent of the destructible property located at our harbors within the range of the guns of any hostile fleet which may now, without much hindrance, ravage our coast. One per cent of the value of this destructible property would make our coast impregnable. We would be provided with an excellent defense with an expenditure equal to one-half the appropriation we have made during the past fifteen years for our Navy. Is it wise, I ask, to appropriate $30,000,000 per annum for a navy and less than one-third as much for fortification? I submit it is not. Every dime we expend for fortifications yields us as effective defense as a dollar appropriated for a navy. This is a stubborn fact well known to every military man or one who has examined the subject. I make this statement to show that the estimates submitted to us, $18,000,000, have merit, and I make not the slightest quarrel with the Department.

I think that every gentleman familiar with this estimate can see that such amount of money could be judiciously expended in fortifications; that the only reason for not making the appropriation is the lamentable condition of the Treasury. I make no question, and, in fact, no intelligent question can be made, but that if the financial stress of the country is left out of consideration, economy would demand that we give the full amount of the estimate, $18,390,000. But your committee, after careful consideration, felt that we must ex necessitate take into consideration the condition of the Treasury, and we must make a reduction, however strong the economical argument for larger appropriations.

Now then, bearing that in mind and still desiring to keep in the appropriation bill such an amount as would allow the Government to proceed in the matter of fortifications, keeping its several items so happily correlated as that no branch of the service shall be injured more than its fellow, we have arranged on the basis of taking out of the estimate its contract features and such items as do not admit of curtailment, aggregating about $4,600,000, leaving of the estimate practically $13,000,000 upon which we could play, to use that expression.

These contract items are as follows:

Authorized contracts for gun and mortar batteries, act of 1896	$2,500,000
Gun steel	555,038
Gun carriages	364,500
12-inch mortars	510,000
Mortar carriages	178,000
Mortar shells	54,600
Steel shots	32,938
Bethlehem contract	156,184
Total contract provisions carried by this bill	4,351,260

To this must be added the following items which do not admit of abatement:

Preservation and repair	$100,000
Preparation of plans	5,000
Sea walls and embankments	33,000
Torpedoes for harbor defense	150,000
Chemist	1,500
Expenses connected with Sandy Hook Proving Grounds	38,000
Improvements at Watertown Arsenal	17,000
Improvements at Watervliet Arsenal	51,500
Board of Ordnance and Fortification	150,000
Total	546,000

Adding these totals, we have an aggregate of $4,897,260, which is beyond the domain of argument, and only the remaining items of the bill may be considered, which latter items of estimate aggregate $13,417,996.

Thereupon we requested the Department to take of this $13,000,000 two-thirds, one-half, one-third, and one-fourth, respectively, and recast the estimate, having in view the aggregate appropriation corresponding to the several fractions I have already enumerated. I desire to print as a part of my remarks the adjustments made on these several bases by the Department; and in the absence of objection I will, without reading them at length, incorporate them.

Now, taking these items as they were thus furnished us by the Department, your committee felt that they could not reduce the aggregate appropriations to the lowest amount, because it would cripple the service. The several amounts corresponding to the fractions are as follows: Should we reduce the reducible estimate by one-third, we would have $13,821,391. If we reduce the same items by one-half, we would have $11,429,155. If we reduce them two-thirds, we would have $9,178,325, not including the Sandy Hook item to which I have already referred. And if we reduce the estimates three-fourths, we would have an aggregate of $8,036,212.

The lowest estimate makes the following cuts under the next lowest estimate, to which I desire to call attention: In the matter of batteries, it would reduce the item from $1,341,333 to $859,000. This would cripple two branches of our service—first, the engineering work; second, the mortars. Gentlemen will recall the fact that these fortifications are now being erected at various ports along our seacoast. A reduction from $1,341,333 to $859,000, if apportioned among these various ports, would leave the amount so small at many of these places that it would be only a shocking waste of funds to carry on the work at those places at all. Money should be expended in such a way as to provide as many completed emplacements as the sum at our disposal will permit. In other words, to avoid the waste we all discountenance, any material reduction of this item will work an abandonment of the work at important points. Let me call attention to some of the places which must be neglected entirely if we do that. There would necessarily be abandoned all engineering work at Portsmouth, N. H.; Baltimore, Md.; Washington, D. C., the capital of our country; Charleston, S. C.; Savannah, Ga.; Key West, Fla.; Mobile, Ala.; Galveston, Tex., and Puget Sound, Washington. I can not believe that any gentleman who studies the facts which are comprehended in the statement I have made will consent to a reduction in this appropriation involving the consequences to which I have called attention.

Then, too, I ask gentlemen to observe the fact that the mortar branch of our service is one of the most effective and at the same time most inexpensive branches of our fortification works; and unfortunately it is one which has been least regarded thus far. Never for ten years past, until the last year, has any reasonable provision been made for mortars. Under our adopted plans, mortars being necessary adjuncts of direct-fire guns, we must in the orderly prosecution of the project provide a due complement of this arm. We can not with safety reduce this item.

Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that at the eleven great ports of our country where it is proposed to utilize 710 of these mortars, we have but 121 of them. If it is the purpose of gentlemen to fortify our coasts; if we are not making a dress parade of this matter; if we wish to resolve this question as men of business resolve questions, looking to results; if it is our policy to get the most possible for our money, then we do not want to cripple this branch of our service.

Another thing: If we further reduce this appropriation below the point which has been recommended by your committee, we reduce the item for gun steel from $558,000 to $261,830. What does that mean, gentlemen? It means that you will take away from the great arsenals of this country, which are doing the best work done by any arsenals in the world (thanks to the efficient conduct of the War Department)—you rob them of working materials and prevent them from carrying on their work; you leave practically the expense of carrying on those institutions at the points where they are now, with the sole exception of the labor item, but impotent to produce results, for without steel you can make no guns. Under the appropriation recommended we can procure only ten sets of forgings for 10-inch guns, and the same number for 12-inch guns, while a reduction to the fourth schedule would procure for us only five sets of forgings for each of the two calibers. But you must keep those factories running, and business men well know the waste which is involved in keeping a factory running which is not turning out product. That is waste; that is not economy.

Again, the capacity of the Government Gun Factory for assembling these forgings into guns, working eight hours per day, is able to absorb in one year the forgings which the original estimates would procure, and it is therefore plain that a reduction of one-half, which is contemplated by this bill, goes to the utmost verge of safety. No amount of appropriations can hasten the production of these forgings beyond the capacity of a few private plants, and we must face the fact that even the reduction made by the committee compels a serious delay in the procurement of forgings sufficient to enable our shops to carry on their works at their normal capacity.

Further than that, gentlemen, there is a large amount of this work which is necessarily done by contract. These great arsenals of our Government are the most efficient guards against extortion on the part of contractors. Having those great arsenals, and doing this work ourselves at those arsenals, we can determine within reasonable limit what the cost of the manufacture of these heavy seacoast guns, of mortars, and of gun carriages ought to be; and thus we have in our possession information which will enable us advantageously to place contracts required in this service.

The other items of possible further reduction admit of similar analysis; and I may say in general that any reduction of this bill puts a stop to the work of intelligent coast defense, cripples the War Department in its work, so auspiciously commenced, and works material disadvantage, and places it in the power of contractors to extort from the Government. I have discussed at this length, Mr. Chairman, for two reasons: First, for the reason that the facts are of general interest in the discussion of this bill, and, second, because it has been suggested in another place that an effort would be made to reduce the items contained in this bill to the fourth schedule set out in the tables to which I referred, and which I have made a part of my remarks.

In connection with this matter, Mr. Chairman, which I am discussing, I desire to incorporate in my remarks at this point the tables which appear on page 75 of the hearings before the Fortifications Subcommittee.

The tables are as follows:

The approved plans call for the following numbers of 8, 10, 12, and 16 inch guns and 12-inch mortars at the following places:

I also desire to submit some tables in connection with the original estimates of the Department and the reduction contemplated by the subcommittee, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the basis of the original estimate of $5,000,000 for guns and mortar batteries, it was proposed by the War Department to build 25 emplacements for 12-inch guns, 23 emplacements for 10-inch guns, 13 emplacements for 8-inch guns, and 144 emplacements for 12-inch mortars.

On the basis of the reduction contemplated by the third schedule, namely, $1,341,333, only the following number can be constructed: six emplacements for 12-inch guns, 5 emplacements for 10-inch guns, and 88 emplacements for 12-inch mortars.

On the basis proposed by the fourth schedule, the number that can be constructed will be reduced still further to 5 emplacements for 12-inch guns, 4 emplacements for 10-inch guns, and 76 emplacements for 12-inch mortars.

In addition to the foregoing, there would be constructed a few emplacements for rapid-fire guns—on the basis of the fourth schedule only 3 and on the basis of the third schedule only 15.

Thus it will be seen that even on the basis of the third schedule nearly all of the construction work on the new defenses, except for mortar batteries, will have to be discontinued, and continuance of work even on the mortar batteries will be very seriously crippled.

COMPARISON OF HIRED LABOR AND CONTRACT WORK.

The following tabulated statements show the relative cost of emplacements by hired labor and contract under the act of June 6, 1896. They are based on the best data now obtainable, but accurate comparisons can not be made until after the working season of 1897, when all or the greater portion of the contract work will have been completed. Owing to the greater number of emplacements compared, the average cost of the 12-inch nondisappearing, 10-inch and 8-inch disappearing class is entitled to more weight than the cost of the 12-inch disappearing, in which the limited number available for comparison prevents the elimination of specially favorable or unfavorable conditions.

I have little further to add to the remarks already submitted. Gentlemen will understand that this bill has been constructed symmetrically, with a view to carrying on this important work most advantageously. I have assumed in these remarks, what must be conceded, that no expenditure made by this Congress has been more generally commended than that made for fortifications. We cultivate the arts of peace, but can have assurance of amity with all only as we are prepared to resist unjust encroachment. There must always be, in the case of every self-respecting nation, a manifestly fair relation between assertion and ability to maintain. We propose no conquests, and hence have no need for a great Navy, already too expensive; but we should on every consideration of prudence and patriotism properly guard the great ports on our borders. This is a matter of great national concern, and, with due regard to the condition of our Treasury, should be prosecuted, not spasmodically, when baleful war fever sweeps over the country, but each year, until completed in a businesslike, economical fashion. Last year we appropriated $7,400,000; this bill carries about $9,250,000, making over $16,500,000 for this Congress. At this rate eight years more will finish the work. This rate I favor, and along this line this bill is drawn.

And now, sir, unless some other gentleman desires to address the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be considered as closed.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman please explain specifically the difference between the estimates and the amount carried in the bill, which I see is about $9,000,000? I think we would all be glad to know wherein the difference lies, between the estimates of the Department and the amounts recommended in the bill.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I have already asked to have made a part of my remarks the several estimates covering the amount of $18,000,000 estimated by the Department, showing the various items and also indicating the percentages of reduction proposed by the committee. I have explained the most important of them. If the gentleman has in mind any particular item in the bill, I would be very glad to explain it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am satisfied if it goes into the RECORD.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. And now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of allowing another important appropriation bill to be reported, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10288, had come to no resolution thereon.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I desire to report the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

I ask that this bill be printed and appropriately referred.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. All rights are reserved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman withdraw that for a moment, to enable me to make a report?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Certainly.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WATSON VS. BLACK.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of Committee on Elections No. 1, I submit the unanimous report of that committee in the contested-election case of Thomas E. Watson against James C. C. Black, from the Tenth Congressional district of Georgia, and ask that it be printed and appropriately referred. I will state that the committee will, at such time as suits the convenience of the House, call it up for consideration; at which time the contentions of the contestant may be presented to the House, if desired by the House.

The SPEAKER. The report will be printed and referred to the House Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 121) to amend an act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

Mr. BAILEY. How does that come up, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I now renew my motion, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HULL in the chair.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If no other gentleman desires to be heard generally on the bill, I ask that general debate be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] asks that general debate be now closed. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill by paragraphs) read as follows:

Sites for fortifications and seacoast defenses: For the procurement of land, or right pertaining thereto, needed for the site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications and coast defenses, $300,000.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 13, page 2, after the word "dollars," the following:
"For defraying the expense necessary for an investigation of the feasibility of erecting and constructing a fortification and seacoast defense, consisting of revolving turrets or other defense, upon Romer Shoals at the entrance to the harbor of New York, $1,000."

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to be heard.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, briefly stated, the facts in connection with this amendment are these: I caused to be introduced a bill known as H. R. 10080, calling for the same legislation. Romer Shoal, in New York Harbor, at the point indicated in the bill which I introduced, is the best point for defense in the harbor of New York, and is so admitted by army and navy officers who have been interviewed since the introduction of this measure. The three channels entering New York Harbor are known as the Main Ship Channel, Gedney Channel, and Swash Channel. Romer Shoal is situated exactly in the center, so that any vessel entering the harbor of New York must of necessity pass around this shoal. The greatest distance from the shoal to the main channel at any given point does not exceed 2,000 feet, and by reason of the formation of these channels no vessel could enter the port of New York without presenting to any fortifications erected on this shoal a broadside fire for almost the entire distance it is compelled to sail from the time it reaches Sandy Hook light-ship until it reaches the Narrows, at which point we have Forts Wadsworth and Hamilton.

This amendment calls for only a slight appropriation, asking only for a sufficient sum of money to defray the expense of investigation and report as to the feasibility of this project.

I was informed by the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of this bill that by the report of the Endicott board, filed some years ago in the War Department, this scheme had already been taken up and plans for this project had been filed. I have spent some time at the War Department, and have investigated the Endicott report, but I am sorry to say that I can not find anything in it relative to this particular improvement.

Now, no harm can come from this proposition, and much good can; and I want to say, in further explanation of it, that if this project were authorized, the cost of cribbing and filling, turrets and ordnance, everything complete, would not exceed the cost of the machinery alone on a battle ship, and here we should have a fortification in the center of the three channels absolutely unsinkable, requiring no dry docking two or three times a year, requiring no crew, officers, or engineers at an enormous expense per month, a work that might be left in the charge of a small detail of troops from the regular force, and would afford a protection equivalent, so far as armament is concerned, to two monitors, with none of the liabilities of sinkage and none of the dangers of travel by sea.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHERMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1498) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to William M. Dalzell;

A bill (H. R. 1323) for the relief of Ira H. Sweatt; and

A bill (H. R. 9493) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the constructon of railroads, and for other purposes," approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HILL, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. CLARK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISCHER] illustrate anew a peculiarity of human genius. From many different sources we learn of inventions and discoveries. Each inventor and each discoverer believes himself to have a monopoly of whatever credit is due for his invention or discovery. The fact is that the Romer Shoal has not escaped the observation of men who have given their lifetime in study of the fortification of our seacoast, and the detailed plans appear in the War Department for making this fortification. There has been a survey of every single foot of the Romer Shoal, and the locality and use of it have been fully determined by the proper Department.

I suggest also to my friend that there is an inherent vice in undertaking in any event, even if it were in order, to saddle appropriations for any particular point upon this bill. I desire further, in this connection, to urge upon the committee generally, and entirely apart from the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISCHER], but simply taking that as a text, that the general plan of coast defense involves twenty-eight principal points. I may safely say that nine-tenths of the dangers under which this country is resting center about five or six points at the farthest. Unfortunately, no Congress has had the courage to make provisions in appropriations for these points in the order of their importance, and it would be asking too much of the War Department to concentrate these appropriations at these pivotal points. If they do so, we might with truth say that with the appropriations already made and those contained in this bill the great danger to our seacoast would be provided against. But it is not so. These fortifications are scattered along the entire coast, here and there, to meet the importunities of the public—each locality urging its special dangers upon the Department. The Department has in good faith and with rare tact responded to these numerous and diverse calls as well as it could within the limits of the Endicott board plan. Hence we would simply increase that trouble, making these expenditures uneconomical and unnecessarily great by inserting in the bill provisions for beginning work at any particular point. Having said this much, Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Nebraska on the point of order. In what does it change any existing law? The Chair understands there is a Board of Fortifications which has the power now of determining the question of making this very investigation, if the Board so desires.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The Endicott board made a general plan which has since been followed. The law places all discretion in the War Department, where it properly belongs, to determine the details. It is a change of the law to that extent. It takes away the discretion that is invested in the War Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. If it does not change existing law, why is it here?

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not simply directory? The law creating the Board of Fortifications gave it discretionary power over the entire seacoast defense, and, if that be true, wherein does it change any law to make a specific appropriation for one place?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Anything, Mr. Chairman, that changes existing law from either directory or discretionary is a change of existing law. The Board of Ordnance and Fortification have nothing to do with surveys or with making plans for defense at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Nebraska, Would it not be in the power of the Congress in this bill to make a specific appropriation for each particular place wherever they wanted to expend the money; and if so, would that change any existing law?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I think it would. The entire policy and term of the present law is to leave this matter in the hands of the War Department—that branch of our Government trained for this purpose. This amendment would take it away from the hands of the expert branch and put it in the hands of those who are untrained in the matter. It seems to me it would be a startling innovation on both the law and policy to allow an amendment of this kind to be ingrafted in the bill.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman to say that it is an offense to suggest an idea to the War Department. If it is an offense, I may be excused. The only point that I can see in the gentleman's remarks is, this is a change of existing law in that it makes an appropriation for a particular place. I would like to call attention to the bill, wherein you will find many specific appropriations are made in the very line of this amendment—for Watertown Arsenal, for Watervliet Arsenal, for Sandy Hook. Are not these special and particular appropriations? There is no other way by which you can arrive at it.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. My friend is not a novice in matters of legislation. He knows that those are establishments of the Government and are regularly estimated for. They certainly do not stand on the same basis as his amendment; and my friend recognized that when he introduced his bill for making this survey which is now pending before the Appropriations Committee. If it made no change of existing law, my friend would certainly not have wasted his work or wasted his midnight vigil in preparing for introduction that bill.

Mr. FISCHER. I am sorry if I disturbed my friend.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment is in order. The desirability of such legislation can be passed upon by the committee.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Then I ask for a vote.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will pass or receive favorable consideration. The harbor of New York, the great entrance to the city of New York, needs protection, and if this proposed amendment shall pass it will make it possible to increase the defense of this great harbor. It would be sensible and reasonable that this amendment should be favorably considered. My friend has stated that it is unfortunate that these great bulwarks of defense should have been delayed and gone without notice so long. It is high time, Mr. Chairman, for that defense to be considered. This amendment simply calls for a preliminary survey and an appropriation to pay the expense. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say that this survey of these shoals has already been made. This would be a waste of expenditure. Further than that, no estimate has been made by any officer for this; no request has come from the War Department for this. It is just simply a request of the gentleman, who is an amateur yachtsman and has been grounded on this particular shoal. I ask for a vote.

Mr. FISCHER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FISCHER. Will my colleague allow me to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. You can ask him afterwards.

Mr. FISCHER. I will try to remember after the gentleman has finished.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I represent the lower district of New York, the district that would be most affected by the expenditure of this thousand dollars, and I am opposed to this appropriation for two reasons. In the first place, it would be a waste of public money. It is unnecessary to expend this sum of $1,000 for this purpose, because the work has already been done. The survey has been made, as has been stated by the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another reason. We have a competent Secretary of War, and we have under him engineer officers who are competent to discharge their duties. Have they come to the subcommittee and asked for this appropriation? No, gentlemen; because they realize that it would be a mere waste of public money. It is all very well for gentlemen who represent the city of Brooklyn or some other part of the State of New York to rise and talk about "the great harbor of New York" and the "great bulwarks of defense." I believe in the largest and fullest appropriations that are necessary for the protection of the harbor of New York, but I do not believe in taking a dollar of the public money for a purpose which is absolutely futile.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to congratulate my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], on what seems to be a new-born zeal for economy and retrenchment, but still I am very glad that he stands in opposition to this amendment. In my view, and with perfect respect for the decision of the Chair, this proposition does change existing law, because we have now a board which is clothed with general powers to determine such questions as the one raised by this amendment. The amendment is a limitation on this discretion, and directs the board to investigate this particular point. I suppose it is offered under an apprehension, or rather a misapprehension, that there is some danger to this country from foreign invasion. I trust the House will vote down the amendment, for, in my judgment, there is no danger whatever from foreign invasion. There are no enemies in sight, except the enemies of the Treasury of the United States, and this amendment is one expression of their hostility. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to my colleague from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] that this is not a matter which concerns Brooklyn alone. It concerns the defense of the entire harbor of New York; and Staten Island, which is a portion of the district that my friend represents, would be benefited by it, at least as much as any other locality. The matter is of national importance. This amendment simply proposes an appropriation of $1,000 for a survey, and it is a reasonable proposition——

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska (interposing). But the survey has been made. Why does the gentleman insist that this is a reasonable proposition when the survey has been already made and every fact determined?

Mr. BENNETT. I am given to understand that the survey has not been made.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. But I have made careful examination of that question and have seen the detailed sketches of the survey.

Mr. BENNETT. But has a survey been made of this particular point?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Yes, of this particular shoal. I have explained that three or four times.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, if the survey has been made, the expenditure of this thousand dollars would be unnecessary, and then this amendment would virtually carry no appropriation?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Of course it is unnecessary, and the whole scheme of it is vicious.

Mr. BENNETT. Then does the gentleman say that, the survey having been made, all that would be required would be a recommendation from the War Department to bring it properly before Congress?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I say that if you should pass this amendment you would compel the expenditure of $1,000 for work that has been already done, and in addition to that you would establish a vicious precedent, so that any gentleman here might, by a little log-rolling, have an appropriation made for a survey at any particular point in which he took an interest, thus taking this business out of the competent hands in which it now rests (the War Department) and putting it into the hands of novices.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the gentleman accept the amendment if it turns out that the survey has not been made?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. No, I will not, because I think the general scheme of such amendments is vicious, and I do not want to see such a precedent established on any bill with which I have anything to do.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not see what objection there can be to this amendment, either on the part of the gentleman from Nebraska or of any other member of the Appropriations Committee, if the survey has not been made.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The point of objection to this amendment seems to lie particularly in this view; but first let me say, by way of distinguishing this from some other bills, that this is not a river and harbor bill. We have provided for the defense of our coast under the direction of skillful engineering officers, who make surveys and plant fortifications and batteries where they think they will do the most good. Now, this House knows nothing about the propriety of planting a fortification at the point indicated in this amendment, or even of making a survey for that purpose. To pass such an amendment here would be firing absolutely in the dark. If any gentleman thinks the engineering officers are overlooking an important strategic point in New York Harbor or elsewhere, the proper thing to do is to go to the Engineer Department, or to the Secretary of War, and have the matter brought to the attention of the House in an official way, with the sanction of the men who are supposed to know all about such matters. It seems to me very unwise to adopt an amendment of this kind, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, we believe this to be such a reasonable proposition that we beg that it be not voted down. The gentleman in charge of this bill states that the survey has been made. If it has been made, there will be no necessity for the expenditure.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, against an expenditure of $1,000, more or less, where it is necessary, I have, of course, no word of objection to submit; but I want to call the attention of the committee to a few facts. This work of fortifications proceeds under the Endicott plan. When completed, it is to cost a very large sum of money. It is progressing in a very satisfactory way; and I may say, considering everything, it is speedily progressing in accordance with well-defined plans under the direction of the Secretary of War, the Board of Ordnance, utilizing the Chief of Engineers, and the Chief of Ordnance. The plan is comprehensive, and unless gentlemen have given much attention to it, they do not understand how thoroughly the work is being done.

Now, I wish to say another thing: There is no trouble about the Department proceeding fast enough and about expenditures being made fast enough and in the proper places. More than that, at Sandy Hook this scheme of fortification has fructified to such an extent that large expenditures are being made in the erection of posts for the accommodation of soldiers to guard the property of the United States and to operate the guns; and quite properly. The work is progressing more speedily perhaps than most gentlemen realize. I think we had better not undertake to authorize any special matter such as is now proposed, because under the general scheme the authority covers every point, including New York.

One further remark: During this Congress, if this bill should be passed as reported, we shall have appropriated almost $17,000,000 for emplacements and for the making of guns—extraordinary appropriations if we stop and consider a minute as to the progress of the work from the adoption of the Endicott plans down to the commencement of the present fiscal year. I wish to add that when the money authorized by this bill shall have been expended, Portland, Boston, New York, Baltimore, Washington, Charleston, San Francisco, New Orleans, and Puget Sound will be practically well fortified. So that we can rest upon the assurance that the blocks of population at the principal of these ports can not have blackmail levied upon them by a hostile fleet in the event of war. I make this statement after inquiry; and it is not only my opinion, but the opinion of experts, some of whom are in part charged with the administration of these appropriations.

I think that while a thousand dollars amounts practically to little, yet, with all due respect to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT], there is no necessity for the appropriation proposed; and as this whole recommendation is harmonious and there is now abundant authority to carry on the work as may be required, I trust the amendment will not prevail.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. FISCHER was rejected; there being—ayes 34, noes 60.

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Sea walls and embankments: For construction of sea walls and embankments, $33,000.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. At this point the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 21, page 2, insert:
"For construction of riprap wall for protection of the eastern beach of United States lands at Sandy Hook, N. J., $75,000."

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That amendment is acceptable to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read the following:

Armament of fortifications: For oil-tempered and annealed steel for high-power coast-defense guns of 18-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch caliber, $558,663.

Mr. STEELE. I observe that the item embraced in lines 3 to 6, on page 3; the item included in lines 17 to 20, on page 3, and also the item in lines 5 to 8, on page 4, all provide for purchasing oil-tempered and annealed steel for high-power coast-defense guns of 8, 10, and 12 inch caliber. There seems to be some repetition, as the several appropriations seem all to cover the same object.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The gentleman is mistaken. The item embraced in lines 17 to 20 refers to contracts which have already been made. The language is:

To provide for payments that may become due in the purchase or manufacture of oil-tempered and annealed steel.

Mr. STEELE. The item does not say anything about contracts.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. But the language is: "To provide for payments which may become due."

Mr. STEELE. These appropriations made in previous paragraphs will also "become due."

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. No; those are absolute appropriations. If the gentleman will turn to the first line of page 4, he will find this language:

Contracted for under the provisions of the fortifications act approved June 6, 1896, said payments being in excess of the money therein appropriated for these objects.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the fortification appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that as amended by the Committee of the Whole the bill do pass.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 249) for appointment of a member of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2832) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10134) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SENATE BILLS AND HOUSE BILLS WITH AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and House bills with amendments were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898—to the Committee on Agriculture.

A bill (H. R. 10134) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A bill (S. 2832) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3666) to remove doubts as to the power of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to provide for a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre in the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

A bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 3333) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed finally June 3, 1896;

A bill (S. 1296) to commission passed assistant surgeons in the United States Navy, and to provide for their examination preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon;

A bill (H. R. 9345) to enable certain persons in the State of Mississippi to procure title to public lands; and Joint resolution (S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C.

MAPS AND ATLASES OF THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 234) providing for the distribution of maps and atlases of the United States Geological Survey, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The Senate amendment was considered, and concurred in.

FUNDING TERRITORIAL INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. KNOX (when the Committee on the Territories was called). I am instructed to call up the bill (H. R. 10271) authorizing the funding of indebtedness in the Territories of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of liquidating and providing for the payment of the outstanding and existing indebtedness of the Territories of the United States, and such future indebtedness as may be or is now authorized by law, the governor of each Territory, together with the Territorial auditor and Territorial secretary, and their successors in office, shall constitute a board of commissioners for the Territory in which they hold office, to be styled the "loan commissioners of the Territory," and shall have and exercise the powers and perform the duties hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That it shall be, and it is hereby, declared the duty of the loan commissioners of each Territory to provide for the payment of the existing indebtedness of such Territory due and to become due, or that is now or may be hereafter authorized by law, except such indebtedness as has been recognized or covered by reason of an act of the legislative assembly of New Mexico, approved January 28, 1867, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'Militia' and acts amendatory thereof," and for the purpose of paying, redeeming, and refunding all or any part of the principal and interest, or either, of the legal indebtedness hereby provided to be paid, and also that which may at any time become due, or is now or may be hereafter authorized by law, the said commissioners shall from time to time issue negotiable coupon bonds of the Territory when the same can be done in harmony with this act.

SEC. 3. That said bonds shall be issued as nearly as practicable in denominations of $1,000, but bonds of a lower denomination, not less than $250, may be issued when necessary. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by said loan commissioners, not exceeding 4 per cent, except bonds issued by the Territory of Arizona in exchange for indebtedness of the kind and description in this act authorized and required to be funded or exchanged, and which indebtedness has already been presented to be exchanged under existing law, in which case said bonds shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent; which interest shall be paid semiannually, in gold or its equivalent, in lawful money of the United States, on the 15th day of January and the 15th day of July in each year, at the office of the Territorial treasurer, or at such bank in the city of New York, or in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, or at such places as may be designated by said loan commissioners, at the option of the purchaser of said bonds, the place of payment being mentioned in said bonds. The principal of said bonds shall be made payable in lawful money of the United States fifty years after the date of their issue. Said Territories reserve the right to redeem at par any of said bonds, in their numerical order, at any time after twenty years after the date thereof.

They shall bear the date of their issue, state when, where, and to whom payable, rate of interest, and shall be signed by said loan commissioners and shall have the seal of the Territory affixed thereto and countersigned by the Territorial treasurer and bear his official seal, and shall be registered by the Territorial auditor in a book, to be kept by him for the purpose, which shall state amount sold for, or, if exchanged, for what; and the faith and credit of the Territory is hereby pledged for the payment of said bonds and the interest accruing thereon, as herein provided.

SEC. 4. That coupons for the interest shall be attached to each bond, so that they may be removed without injury to or mutilation of the bond.

They shall be consecutively numbered and bear the same number as of the bond to which they are attached, and shall be signed by the Territorial treasurer.

The said coupons shall cover the interest expressed in said bond from the date of issue until paid; but in no case shall bonds bear interest, nor shall any interest be paid thereon, for any time before their delivery to the purchaser, as hereinafter provided; and the issuance of the bonds by the loan commissioners shall be conclusive evidence as to the regularity of the issue and of the recitations in such bonds set out.

SEC. 5. That whenever the said loan commissioners may be authorized by law to issue bonds, or shall have decided to refund or redeem all or any part of the existing indebtedness of the Territory, they shall direct the Territorial treasurer to advertise for a sale of the bonds to be issued for that purpose by causing a notice of such sale to be published for the period of one month in some daily newspaper published at the capital of the Territory, and at least one insertion in a newspaper published in the city of New York, in the State of New York, and in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California. Such notice shall specify the amount of bonds to be sold, the place, day, and hour of sale, and that bids will be received by said treasurer for the purchase of said bonds within one month from the expiration of said publication, and at the place and time named in said notice. The said treasurer and loan commissioners shall open all bids received by him and shall award the purchase of said bonds or any part thereof to the bidder or bidders therefor bidding the lowest rate of interest: Provided, That said loan commissioners shall have the right to reject any and all bids: And provided further, That they may refuse to make any award unless sufficient security shall be furnished by the bidder or bidders for compliance with the terms of their bids.

SEC. 6. That when the sale of said bonds shall be awarded by the loan commissioners, they shall provide and procure the necessary bonds as in this act provided, and any expense incurred by them therefor, and for the publication of notices, cost of remitting funds for the payment of interest or money on said bonds, and all other necessary and incidental expenses of said commissioners in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be paid out of the general fund of the Territory, upon the order of the Territorial auditor, countersigned by the governor; and a sum of money sufficient to cover said costs and expenses is hereby appropriated out of said fund.

They shall, from time to time after signing said bonds, deliver them to the Territorial treasurer, taking his receipt therefor and charge him therewith. The said treasurer shall give to the Territory an additional official bond, with two or more securities, in a sum equal to the amount of bonds delivered to him by the said loan commissioners, which bond shall be approved by the governor and deposited and filed with the secretary of the Territory and recorded by him in a book to be kept for that purpose. And the said treasurer shall stand charged upon his official bond for the faithful performance of the duties required of him under this act.

SEC. 7. That the Territorial treasurer shall sell said bonds for cash, or exchange them for any of the indebtedness for the redemption of which they were so issued, but in no case shall said bonds be sold or exchanged for less than their face or par value and the accrued interest at the time of disposal, nor must any indebtedness be redeemed at more than its face value and any interest that may be due thereon.

That said treasurer shall indorse, by writing or stamping in ink on the face of the paper evidencing the indebtedness received by him in exchange for said bonds, the time when and the amount for which exchanged.

SEC. 8. That moneys received by said treasurer shall be applied by him to the redemption of the indebtedness for the redemption of which bonds were issued; and the treasurer shall give notice, as is provided by law in case of payment and redemption of Territorial warrants, of his readiness to redeem such indebtedness, and thereafter interest on all the indebtedness due and outstanding shall cease.

Before any such indebtedness shall be paid the Territorial auditor shall indorse on each certificate the amount due thereon, and shall write across the face of each the date of its surrender and the name of the person surrendering, and shall keep proper record thereof.

SEC. 9. That there shall be levied annually upon the taxable property of the Territory, and in addition to the levy for other authorized taxes, a sufficient sum to pay the interest on all bonds issued and disposed of in pursuance of the provisions of this act, to be placed in the Territorial treasury, in the fund to be known as the "interest fund;" and forty years after such bonds shall have been issued such additional amount shall be levied annually as will pay 10 per cent of the total amount issued until all the bonds issued under the provisions of this act are paid and discharged.

The Territorial board of equalization, or, on the failure of said board, the Territorial auditor, shall determine the rate of tax to be levied in the different counties in the Territory to carry out the provisions of this act, and shall certify the same to the board of supervisors in each county and to the municipal and school authorities; and the said board of supervisors, or authorities, are hereby directed and required to enter such rate on their assessment rolls in the same manner and with the same effect as is provided by law in relation to other Territorial, county, municipal, and school taxes. Every tax levied under the provisions and authority of this act is hereby made a lien against the property assessed, which lien shall attach on the first Monday in March in each year, and shall not be satisfied or removed until such tax has been paid.

All moneys derived from taxes authorized by the provisions of this act shall be paid into the Territorial treasury, and shall be applied:

First. To the payment of the interest on the bonds issued hereunder.

Second. To the payment of the principal of such bonds: Provided, That all moneys remaining in the interest fund after the payment of the interest, and all moneys remaining in the redemption fund after all said bonds shall have been paid and discharged, shall be transferred by the Territorial treasurer to the Territorial general fund.

SEC. 10. That whenever, after the expiration of the forty years from the date of issuance of any bonds under this act, there remains after the payment of the interest, as provided in the preceding section, a surplus of $10,000 or more, it shall be the duty of the Territorial treasurer to advertise, as in the manner of advertising by the loan commissioners, for bids for the sale of bonds, which advertisement shall state the amount of money in the said redemption fund and the number of bonds, numbering them in the order of their issuance, commencing at the lowest number then outstanding, which such fund is set apart to pay and discharge; and if such bonds so numbered in such advertisements shall not be presented for payment and cancellation at the expiration of such publication, then such fund shall remain in the treasury to discharge such bonds whenever presented, but they shall draw no interest after the expiration of such publication. Before any such bonds shall be paid they shall be presented to the Territorial auditor, who shall indorse on each bond the amount due thereon, and shall write across the face of each bond the date of its surrender and the name of the person surrendering. The Territorial auditor shall keep a record of all bonds issued and disposed of by the Territorial treasurer, showing their number, rate of interest, date, and amount of sale, when, where, and to whom payable, and, if exchanged, for what, and, when presented for redemption, the date, amount due thereon, and person surrendering.

The board of supervisors of the counties, the municipal and school authorities, are hereby authorized, directed, and required to report to the loan commissioners of the Territory their bonded and outstanding indebtedness; and said loan commissioners shall, on written demand of any taxpayer or holder of said indebtedness, require an official report from the board of supervisors of counties, the municipal or school authorities, of their bonded and outstanding indebtedness; and said loan commissioners shall have the same power to enforce said order and compel the production of evidence as a court of competent jurisdiction; and said loan commissioners shall provide for the redeeming or refunding of the county, municipal, and school district indebtedness, and shall refund said indebtedness in the same manner as other Territorial indebtedness, and they shall issue bonds for any indebtedness now allowed, or that may be hereafter allowed by law, to said county, municipality, or school district; the county, municipality, or school district to pay into the Territorial treasury, in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, such amounts as may be directed by the Territorial board of equalization, or, on the failure of said board, by the Territorial auditor, to be levied for the purpose of providing a sinking fund for the payment of the principal of the bonds issued in redemption, refunding, or other bonds issued to such county, municipality, or school district when the same shall become due, and, in addition, a rate of interest paid by the Territory on such bonds.

SEC. 11. That whenever any of the holders or owners of any bonds, warrants, or other evidence of indebtedness of the kind and description in this act authorized to be funded, bearing a higher rate of interest than 4 per cent, desire to surrender the same to the loan commissioners on or before the maturity of said indebtedness and exchange such bonds, warrants, or other evidences of indebtedness for the lower interest-bearing bonds by this act authorized to be issued, it shall be the duty of the loan commissioners to receive and cancel the indebtedness so surrendered and issue in lieu thereof to said holders or owners of said surrendered obligations 4 per cent Territorial bonds, as in this act provided, in full for the principal and interest thereof, subject to the exception as to the rate of interest contained in section 3 of this act: Provided, That the loan commissioners shall, at the time of said exchange, reserve the right, on behalf of the Territory, to redeem, pay in full, and cancel all bonds issued in exchange for unmatured indebtedness at the time such indebtedness would have matured had not the exchange herein authorized been made.

SEC. 12. That when the treasurer pays or redeems any indebtedness, he shall indorse, by writing or stamping in ink, on the face of the paper evidencing such indebtedness so paid or redeemed, the words "redeemed and canceled," with the date of cancellation. He shall keep a full and particular account and record of all his proceedings under this act, and of the bonds redeemed and surrendered, and he shall transmit to the governor of the Territory an abstract of all his proceedings under this act with his annual report, to be by the governor laid before the legislature at its meeting. All books and papers pertaining to the matter provided in this act shall at all times be open to the inspection of the parties interested, or to the governor or a committee of either branch of the legislature, or a joint committee of both.

SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of the Territorial treasurer to pay the interest on said bonds, when the same falls due, out of the said interest fund, if sufficient; and if said fund be not sufficient, then to pay the deficiency out of the general fund: Provided, That the Territorial auditor shall first draw his warrant on the Territorial treasurer, payable to the order of said treasurer, for the amount of such deficiency out of the general fund.

SEC. 14. That it shall be the duty of said loan commissioners to make a full report of all their proceedings had under the provisions of this act to the governor of the Territory, on or before the 1st day of January of each year; and said reports shall be transmitted by the governor to the Territorial legislative assembly.

SEC. 15. That no bond issued under the provisions of this act shall be taxed within the Territory where issued.

SEC. 16. That the provisions and requirements of this act shall apply to and be in full force and effect in all the Territories of the United States; and all outstanding bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness of said Territories, and the counties, school districts, and municipalities within said Territories heretofore authorized by legislative enactments of said Territories, or by Congress, and which said bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness have been sold, donated, or exchanged in good faith, and which are now held by innocent purchasers by purchase, donation, or exchange, shall be funded as in this act provided; and all of said bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness so authorized, issued, sold, donated, or exchanged as aforesaid are hereby confirmed, approved, and validated, and shall be funded as in this act provided.

SEC. 17. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize any future increase of any indebtedness in excess of the limit prescribed by the act of Congress approved July 30, 1886, known as the Harrison Act: Provided, however, That the present existing and outstanding indebtedness, together with such warrants as may be issued for the necessary and current expenses of carrying on Territorial, county, municipal, and school governments for the year ending December 31, 1898, may also be funded and bonds issued for the redemption thereof; and thereafter no warrants, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness shall be allowed to issue or be legal where the same is in excess of the limit prescribed by the Harrison Act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, we would like to find out something about this matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill appears, upon its face, to make it possible to force upon the Territories a policy which Congress has not seen fit heretofore to require of the people of the United States generally, and that is a provision for the issuance of gold bonds or bonds the interest on which is payable in gold. As I understand the bill, by a hasty reading, it provides, not that the interest may be paid in gold, but that it must be so paid, or in its equivalent.

I do not think it is wise at this time, when we have declined to issue gold bonds when called upon to do so by the Government of the United States—I do not think we ought to force on the Territories a rule or policy that we refused to require of the States of the Union for which we directly legislate. I am unalterably opposed to monometallism.

I would call the attention of the committee to the provision itself to which I refer. I take it from the reading of a portion of the third section that the result I have suggested would be accomplished if this bill becomes a law. It provides that—

Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by said loan commissioners, not exceeding 4 per cent, except bonds issued by the Territory of Arizona in exchange for indebtedness of the kind and description in this act authorized and required to be funded or exchanged, and which indebtedness has already been presented to be exchanged under existing law, in which case said bonds shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent; which interest shall be paid semiannually, in gold or its equivalent, in lawful money of the United States, on the 15th day of January and the 15th day of July in each year, at the office of the Territorial treasurer, or at such bank in the city of New York, or in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, or at such places as may be designated by said loan commissioners, at the option of the purchaser of said bonds, the place of payment being mentioned in said bonds.

What I desire to know of the gentleman in charge of the bill is whether that does not commit us to the policy, as a rule for the Territories, which is there prescribed for the Territory of Arizona? If that is not the intention of the provision, it seems to be rather loosely drawn, and such may be the result.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the provision to which the gentleman refers relates to bonds already issued by the Territory of Arizona, which, by the terms of the act authorizing their issue, were made gold-bearing bonds. I have not the slightest idea, nor was such an idea in the mind of the committee, to require the refunding of the bonds of the Territories of the United States in gold or its equivalent. But if the gentleman thinks the language is not specific enough, or is not sufficiently clear to indicate just what the intention of the committee was, I have no objection to making an amendment to cover the point.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to what I think has been the policy of Congress heretofore in the administration of the affairs of the Territories with regard to this matter. We have never sought to impose upon the Territories legislation of a character which would not be properly applicable, under like conditions, to the States or Government.

Mr. KNOX. I fully agree with the gentleman; but I do not think that the language of the bill warrants the conclusion drawn. If he will read carefully the second part of the section of the bill to which he refers, I think he will find that it does not bear out his construction. It provides:

Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by said loan commissioners, not exceeding 4 per cent, except bonds issued by the Territory of Arizona in exchange for indebtedness of the kind and description in this act authorized and required to be funded or exchanged, and which indebtedness has already been presented to be exchanged under existing law, in which case said bonds shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent; which interest shall be paid semiannually, in gold or its equivalent, in lawful money of the United States, on the 15th day of January and the 15th day of July in each year.

Mr. McMILLIN. The question is whether that would not apply to the whole bill, for it is all embraced in that period; and the semicolon, the first semicolon in the paragraph, comes before the description of the kind of money in which the interest shall be paid; and coming just after what seems to be the comment upon the Arizona bonds, it strikes me it might be construed to apply to all bonds authorized in the bill.

Mr. KNOX. I have no objection to adding an amendment at the end of the section that all bonds issued by refunding under this act shall be payable in coin.

Mr. McMILLIN. Shall be payable in the lawful currency of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move, then, an amendment which I will prepare and submit later, providing for the payment of both principal and interest in lawful money of the United States, without allowing it to be confined to gold.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not see that there would be any wrong committed if the language of this bill were allowed to remain as it is. I do not know why the other Territories should not be permitted to issue gold-bearing bonds as well as the Territory of Arizona, which was authorized to do so by a former Congress. I do not remember whether it was the last Congress or a preceding Congress.

Mr. TERRY. I want to suggest to the gentleman from New York that in the case of Arizona, of which it speaks, it did not come to the attention of Congress and members of the House were not aware of the fact that gold was named in the contract at the time the bill originally passed through the Fifty-second Congress, as I recollect.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, Mr. Speaker, I think that if the gentleman will turn to the debate on the Arizona bill he will find that the very question of inserting the word "gold" was debated for some time in the House, and finally it was decided to retain the word in the bill.

Mr. TERRY. It came up later on an amendment, after the bill had passed the House, as I remember it.

Mr. PAYNE. And it was done at the request of the gentleman who represented the Territory of Arizona, Mr. Smith, of Arizona, who was supposed to be in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver as a part of the basic money—I believe that is the term—of the United States, and he said he was in favor of a gold bond because he could save a large percentage in selling the bonds.

This bears no relation to the question whether we should put the word "gold" into the bonds of the United States, although I did vote for an amendment to put the word "gold" into a certain issue of bonds of the Government of the United States, because the Administration had forced us into such a position that if we did not put the word "gold" there we should have to forfeit some ten or twelve millions of dollars to a certain syndicate. The House refused to put the word "gold" in, and the taxpayers will have to pay the ten or twelve millions additional on the bonds that have been issued because the word "gold" was not put into those bonds.

Mr. TERRY. Why, you claim that those bonds are payable in gold now, after we have paid out $16,000,000 for the privilege of paying them off in silver.

Mr. PAYNE. Nearly everybody contends that the bonds of the United States are payable in gold and are to be paid in gold. I did not care to vote to put the word "gold" in, unless under compulsion, because I believed that the bonds were to be paid in gold anyway, and that it was just as emphatic upon us and just as imperative to pay them in gold as though that word were put in, and I did not want to do anything to throw any doubt on the previous issues of the bonds of the United States. That is the only reason why I was reluctant to vote for gold bonds to be issued by the Government. But this is a different question. This is a question of allowing the Territories to issue the kind of bonds that they want to issue in order that they may negotiate them. They know how it is down there in the Territories; and in all the silver States they know that in order to borrow money, they must put in the word "gold," and it does not make any difference whether it is a Territorial bond, or a bond issued by a Senator of the United States, or a bond issued by a leading light in the free-silver party. In order to borrow money, they are obliged to put in the word "gold." And not only that. When these gentlemen who believe in this same doctrine want to loan money, they see to it that the word "gold" is written in the contract. Why, the gentleman who in this Hall yesterday received the second largest vote for the Vice-Presidency of the United States, although he ran upon a silver platform, yet when he wrote a contract, where money was to be paid to him, he nominated it in the contract, as his fellows had nominated in the bond, that gold must be paid, both principal and interest.

Now, what man is there, whether he represents a constituency in the far West, or whether he represents a constituency of which the late governor of Illinois was one of the constituents—what man is there who should refuse to vote to allow the word "gold" to be put into these bonds to be issued by the Territories?

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, just one minute, until I can finish a sentence. Of course, we believe in different theories, but when we come to practice, in our individual private transactions, no matter what we profess to believe on the stump, when we are loaning money or borrowing money, and trying to get it at the lowest rate, we are sure to have the word "gold" nominated in the bond. I think if it was a new question——

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield first to the gentleman on my right.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yielded to the gentleman from New York. I do not want to take him off the floor, but I want him to know in whose time he is speaking.

Mr. PAYNE. I supposed I had taken the floor in my own right.

Mr. McMILLIN. You are in error. You asked me to yield, and I yielded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPKINS). To whom does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Montana, with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I know that the gentleman from New York has no desire to misstate the situation; but when he does make the statement that in the silver States money is not loaned except where the obligation given in exchange therefor is made payable in gold, he does make a misstatement. It is unintentional on the part of the gentleman, and it is probably founded on the information furnished this House and the country by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] who sits on my right, who has repeated it for perhaps three times to my own personal knowledge, and for which he never had a single word from anyone engaged in lending money in any one of the silver States.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman has concluded his inquiry——

Mr. HARTMAN. I did not ask the gentleman to yield for an inquiry. I asked him to yield for an interruption.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman has concluded his interruption, I desire to state that I do not know whether the gentleman from Massachusetts has made that statement or not. I do not make it on information received from him; but if he did state that money is loaned in the Western States, in the silver States, and the creditors are compelled to have the word "gold" written into the instrument, he did not make any misstatement.

Mr. HARTMAN. But he did.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not mean to say of every obligation there it is written in the instrument that it must be paid in gold; not at all; but I do mean to say that millions upon millions of dollars are loaned in the Western States, and in the silver States, where it is nominated in the bond that the principal and interest are to be paid in gold.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is it not a fact that where it is not provided that the interest and principal are to be paid in gold that the money is lent at 12, 15, and 18 per cent?

Mr. PAYNE. I was about to state that, if gentlemen will allow me to make this little speech.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have been waiting for the gentleman to conclude his sentence.

Mr. PAYNE. I was about to state, Mr. Chairman, what I say now, as the gentleman from Arizona knew, that in order to get money at a respectable rate of interest it was necessary to agree to pay principal and interest in gold; and so they inserted in the contract, just as they seek to insert it now, or when they bring it before this House. Now I will yield to my friend from Missouri, with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I believe I have his permission for a moment.

I regret that the gentleman from New York should have precipitated this discussion, inasmuch as I am afraid that the "agitation" of this monetary question may retard somewhat the growth of the McKinley "prosperity" which seems now to be sweeping over the country and imperiling all our industries. Inasmuch as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] advocates the granting of authority to the Territories to issue bonds payable, principal and interest, in "gold," I desire to refresh his memory by recalling the occasion in this House, during the last Congress, when the proposition came to this body from the Executive asking authority to "nominate," as he expresses it, "gold in the bond." If I remember aright, only twenty-seven gentlemen on this floor cast their votes in favor of that proposition.

Mr. PAYNE. "Of whom I was one of which," as I said a moment ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is consistent and in accord with the declaration of his party adopted at the St. Louis convention. He is entirely in harmony with the Republican "logic of the situation." The continuance of the "existing gold standard" of course logically involves the "nomination of gold in the bond" not only in the Territories, but also in the States. The St. Louis platform, if pursued to its last analysis, necessarily requires the retirement of the greenbacks and the Sherman notes, and the circulation of silver in an inferior relation to gold, and the consequent contraction of the volume of our circulating medium. I am pleased to find the gentleman from New York in such thorough accord with his platform. I am opposed to the gold clause of this bill. The "parity" between the two metals can best be maintained by dealing with them upon terms of absolute equality and the coinage of both, free and without limit, at the old tried ratio.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may resume the floor for a moment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I have already stated, as the gentleman from Missouri well knew, that I had voted for that gold clause.

Mr. DOCKERY. My attention was diverted for the moment and I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. And my reason for doing that was in order to save $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 to the taxpayers of this country. I said also, with equal frankness, that the only reluctance I had in voting for putting the word "gold" in the bond was not because it created any new obligation on the part of the people of the United States, because I believe that every bond of the United States will be paid in gold and ought to be paid in gold, but I did not want to throw any discredit upon the previous issues of bonds of the United States by voting for a mere "gold" bond, and only voted for it because, by the action of the executive department, we were compelled to do it to try and save a little money—a few millions, $10,0000 or $15,000,000—for the people of this country.

I did not intend, Mr. Speaker, to get off into a discussion of politics. I was simply trying to reconcile the other side of the House to the use of the word "gold" in these bonds, so that the people of those Territories might be able to refund their debt at a lower rate of interest by reason of their agreeing to pay these bonds in gold and not in some other currency that might be depreciated. I did not know but they might want to borrow money of some distinguished silverite who would require bonds payable in gold, and I wanted them to have that opportunity. [Laughter.] I was in sympathy with the Delegate from Arizona when he advocated the former bill. It was in the interest of those poor people out there that I spoke, and not for the purpose of starting a general discussion of the money question, when I rose to call attention to the fact that that was what those people wanted. I wished to have the word retained in this bill, so that they might be left on a par with the people of Arizona, and that the other Territories might have the privilege of going into the money markets of the world, whether located in Maine, in Chicago, in California, or in Nevada, and borrowing money at the lowest rates of interest.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I indicated my purpose to offer an amendment because I was satisfied that the section, as drawn, applied this principle not simply to the Territory of Arizona, but generally, and the gentleman in charge of the bill thinks that that would be the effect of the section as it stands. All admit that it was not the purpose of those who drew the bill that it should have that effect, and I have therefore prepared a proviso to be added at the end of the first paragraph of section 3, line 25, in these words:

Provided, That the principal and interest of the bonds funded under this act shall be payable in lawful money of the United States, except the Arizona bonds above described, heretofore issued.

I do not propose to interfere with any contract made by the issue of bonds heretofore by Arizona; but when the indebtedness of these Territories is turned over to a board, without any legislative power on the part of the Territorial governments—bear in mind that the funding is done not by act of the Territorial legislature, but by a board of three officers, one the governor, being appointed by the President and he appointing the other two—I do not think they ought to be directed to fund in gold bonds, and I think the gentleman in charge of the bill agrees in that opinion. I therefore offer this amendment, and I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE].

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] attempts to cast discredit upon the advocates of the restoration of the free and unlimited coinage of silver by stating that silver men, or some of them, who have money to loan make the contracts for its repayment and for the interest in gold. That may be perfectly true, but it is not at all inconsistent with their absolute honesty in advocating a return to a free, elastic, and constitutional system of currency. They may fairly and consistently conform, in their business dealings, to the preferences given by existing law, while conscientiously advocating the abolition of the money monopoly established by the present gold standard. Under and by reason of our existing currency laws, and the similar laws of other countries, gold is constantly appreciating in value. Under the artificial conditions created by those laws, the demand for gold increases more rapidly than its supply, and there is consequently a great commercial advantage to the creditor, whether he be a gold monometallist or a bimetallist, in having his contracts payable in gold.

Legislation has made it advantageous to the man who lends money to compel its payment in gold rather than in silver, because silver has been deprived by legislation of its function as money. Its present use is not as money of redemption, but as token money. Does the gentleman think that none should avail themselves of monopoly privileges created or granted by the existing laws of their country save those who favor the continuance of such laws? Must none but the advocates of monopoly be its beneficiaries when it is established by law? Must those who oppose monopoly forever consent to be crushed beneath that juggernaut, when established, and never seek safety within it? Common business prudence—the very instinct of self-preservation—must forever prompt silver men, as well as gold men, to make their contracts with a view to the advantages or disadvantages resulting from existing laws. I do not know to what extent contracts in the silver States are made payable in gold, nor to what extent silver Senators, or silver leaders, take advantage of the existing law; but, while the law, unjust as it is, exists and gives an advantage to the man who secures the payment of his contract in gold in preference to any other kind of currency, I see no reason why a man who is opposed to that law should be criticised for taking advantage of its provisions. The creators of the privilege take advantage of it while the law is permitted to remain on the statute books, and their suggestion that others should not do so is refreshing. I yield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield as much time as he desires to my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, because I think that no man ought to be permitted to contract against receiving any money that is made legal tender by the United States. I regret that the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Miller was not the decision of the court when it originally held that men could contract for a specific kind of money. The lawyers of this body will recall that that decision was by a divided court, and that the greatest lawyer then upon that bench dissented from the decision of the court. He held that whenever the Congress of the United States declared anything to be a legal tender, then every man in the country holding a contract payable in "dollars" must accept the legal-tender dollars. There can be no more important policy than that which establishes the legal-tender laws of a country, and I believe that the court ought to have held that a contract against any legal-tender money was a contract against public policy and therefore void. If I make a contract with any person in any State of this Union that contravenes its well-established public policy, and we go into court to enforce that contract, the judge will turn us from the door and tell us that, having made a contract against the public policy of that sovereignty, he will aid neither of us in the enforcement of it.

Yet, sir, we are asked here in this high place to legalize a contract against the highest public policy known to our law. If this House, by refusing to adopt the amendment or by express permission, as it did in the Arizona case, consents that anybody shall contract for a particular kind of money, it abdicates pro tanto its power to declare the legal-tender policy of the country.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I yield five minutes to my friend from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, as the representative of New Mexico on this floor, I wish to say that this bill, when it shall be amended in the mode proposed, is acceptable to the people of that Territory. The bill was drawn upon the model of the bill which had formerly been passed by this House to aid the people of Arizona in regard to their indebtedness. By the reduction of interest and by securing for all the subordinate municipalities of that Territory a better credit, Arizona saves, under the act referred to, many thousands of dollars each year. By means of the present act, should it become a law, the Territory of New Mexico will save from $25,000 to $30,000 annually in interest upon the indebtedness of the Territory and of its county and other municipalities.

By mistake there has been incorporated in the bill a clause, which, by its terms, appears to be applicable to all the Territories, providing for the payment of interest in gold. That was not the intention of the bill when it was considered before the Committee on Territories. It was supposed that this clause would apply solely and only to the Territory of Arizona, whose bonds had been already issued payable in gold. It was the purpose of the bill not to change the character of any bond already issued, but to allow outstanding bonds to be payable in the same kind of money in which they were payable when issued. By the insertion of a semicolon, or by error in punctuation, this bill has been made to read somewhat differently from what was the intention of the Committee on Territories and of the parties who drafted the bill. For my own part I will say on behalf of the Territory of New Mexico that we favor the amendment which has been proposed. With that amendment the bill is acceptable to us.

Mr. COX. I should like to propound to the gentleman this question: Suppose a bond is issued payable, principal and interest, in gold, and suppose suit is brought upon that bond in any court, what character of judgment would the gentleman, if he were sitting as a judge, render on that bond?

Mr. CATRON. The judgment, of course, would be a judgment payable in gold, as I understand. But I am not advocating anything of that kind in this case.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman is not; but the point I want to draw out is this: Under the construction which the gentleman adopts, a judgment of that kind, if rendered in one court, must be discharged in gold, while in another case it might be dischargeable in legal-tender money.

Mr. CATRON. So far as New Mexico is concerned, we are not asking for any bond on which a judgment could be rendered payable in gold. On the contrary, the amendment which the gentleman from Tennessee has proposed provides that these bonds shall be payable only in lawful money of the United States.

Mr. COX. I am in accord with the amendment.

Mr. CATRON. And the amendment is acceptable to us; we agree to it.

Mr. COX. But the point I wish to bring out is this: Suppose a bond is by its terms payable in gold, and suit is brought upon that bond, what kind of a judgment is the court going to render in such a case?

Mr. CATRON. As I said before, my opinion is that the court would have to render a judgment payable in gold, if the bond is by its terms so payable. That is my understanding of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. COX. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, in bringing forward this bill permitting the refunding of the indebtedness of New Mexico and other Territories, and providing the necessary machinery for that purpose, I did not suppose that it would precipitate in any way a discussion upon the standards of value at present or in the past. This bill proposes simply to permit New Mexico and other Territories to refund already existing bonded indebtedness running at various rates of interest and for various periods. The bill does not authorize the issuing of a single new bond or an increase of the indebtedness of any Territory. Nor does it undertake to legalize any bond heretofore issued. It simply permits the refunding by the Territories of already existing bonds into bonds running for a long term and at low rates of interest. The rate of interest at which these bonds can be refunded by the Territories is the lowest rate at which any single issue of bonds has been made by New Mexico or any any other Territory. In this refunding no bond can be issued bearing a rate of interest higher than 4 per cent.

The advantage to be enjoyed from this bill is that if it be passed there will be one uniform refunding law for those Territories; the bonds will have greater credit for refunding; they can be refunded at this low rate of interest; all the machinery is provided by which the refunding can take place, and provision is made for the imposing and collecting of taxes for the payment of the principal and interest. The bonds may run fifty years; the bill provides that after they have run forty years, at which time it is presumed the Territory will be in condition to pay them off, then payment shall be provided for the principal by paying one-tenth of the principal each year, which, at the expiration of the ten years, will liquidate the whole amount and pay off the bonded indebtedness of the Territory.

The committee in the preparation of the bill fully and closely and carefully followed the provisions of the bill that passed Congress and was approved on the 25th day of June, 1890, authorizing the refunding of the Territorial, county, municipal, school, and district indebtedness of the Territory of Arizona. The provisions of the bill are substantially the provisions of that bill, which was then discussed in Congress and approved; and I am authorized to say by the representative of the people of Arizona on this floor that the practical workings of this piece of legislation in Arizona has been for the benefit of the people. This allows the negotiation of bonds at a lower rate of interest than ever before; but there was, of course, one provision in the bill for Arizona which had to be regarded, because the bonds had already been refunded and the refunding bonds issued. It is provided in the act to which I have referred that such bonds should bear interest at a rate to be fixed by said loan commission, "not exceeding 5 per cent per annum, which interest shall be paid in gold coin or its equivalent in lawful money of the United States."

Now, it was impossible, as far as Arizona is concerned, in the preparation of this bill, not to make an exception, in view of the legislation already had, without repudiating or declaring void the contracts which have already been entered into. Outside of that, it was the intention of this bill that the bonds should be paid in the lawful money of the United States; and the lawful money of the United States to-day rests upon the single gold standard, which the people of the United States have established, and which we may say at least will not be disturbed for another period of four years.

Mr. BOATNER. Unless there be an international monetary conference.

Mr. KNOX. Unless there be an international monetary conference, as the gentleman from Louisiana suggests. I do not hesitate to say, sir, that I am more of a gold man than perhaps my friend from Louisiana. I do not believe in an international monetary conference. I do not believe that it is possible, by international agreement or otherwise, to create or to maintain the value of any commodity by law. Neither do I believe that it is within the power of one government, or the governments of the whole world, to maintain the relative value of one commodity with another.

Mr. MEREDITH. Let me suggest to the gentleman that we will not need an international monetary conference. We will have one four years from now to determine that question for ourselves, and settle it for all time.

Mr. KNOX. Possibly; but I say seriously to my friend from Virginia that the question is one of a single standard. If it could be demonstrated that gold, by its appreciation, by the scarcity of its production relative to the growth of property and relative to the increase in the volume of business, had become, by reason of that scarcity, unduly appreciated in reference to the value of other commodities, so that private indebtedness was largely increased, or doubled, then I say the time has come when it is proper to provide that gold shall no longer be the standard of value, and the people of the country must look elsewhere for such a standard. But believing, as I do, that there is abundant gold in the world to serve as the basis of an abundant, sound, stable, and elastic currency, I am uncompromisingly in favor of the single gold standard, not only for the United States of America, but for every country of the world that regards the commercial prosperity of the people and the welfare of its citizens, as well as the progress of civilization itself.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a question?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I want to hear how you are going to work out that process. You issue a gold bond——

Mr. KNOX. Who issues a gold bond?

Mr. COX. The Territories.

Mr. KNOX. Not at all. On the contrary, the bill provides that they shall not be issued.

Mr. COX. But the interest is payable in gold.

Mr. KNOX. No, sir; but in the lawful money of the United States, which is gold, and which will be gold for at least four years to come, with certainty.

Mr. COX. Well, let me see, now, how you are going to work out this question. You say that the interest on these bonds——

Mr. KNOX. Bonds already issued, you mean?

Mr. COX. I mean one of the refunding bonds; that the interest on these bonds is to be paid in gold or its equivalent. Now, let us suppose a suit; how will you render judgment?

Mr. KNOX. Of course a judgment will be rendered for the money value of the bond.

Mr. COX. How many dollars?

Mr. KNOX. That would depend upon circumstances. It will be according to whatever the figures are.

Mr. COX. Well, here is a bond that promises to pay $10,000 in money, and you say upon the face of it that the interest shall be paid in the lawful money of the United States. Now, what is to be your judgment in a suit for recovery?

Mr. KNOX. You are going to get your judgment for the amount of it in money.

Mr. COX. Ten thousand dollars in lawful money?

Mr. KNOX. In money; yes.

Mr. COX. Ten thousand dollars?

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. COX. Then you do not want to pay it in gold?

Mr. KNOX. We do not provide that it shall be paid in gold. Our bill is to pay in the lawful money of the United States, which is gold.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I understand the gentleman to say that he is in favor of gold monometallism for this country and for all countries.

Mr. KNOX. Gold monometallism for this country and for all countries, under the existing situation to-day. I am in favor of that.

Mr. BOWERS. Is not silver lawful money in the United States to-day—$500,000,000 of it?

Mr. KNOX. Yes, because the Government of the United States is behind it to guarantee that it shall be kept on a parity with gold, and for no other reason. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MAGUIRE. I understand that the gentleman is opposed to international bimetallism, and predicts that his party will prevent its establishment during the next four years.

Mr. KNOX. I predict that the great wisdom of the Republican party in arranging for the extended use of silver will probably take some other form than the calling of another convention of the nations, in view of the fact that those conventions of the nations have proved repeated failures in the past. The Republican party is wise enough and has in its ranks statesmen enough to provide for an enlarged use of silver upon a true basis which will give an enlarged use, and which can never be provided by the free coinage of both metals together.

Mr. COX. As I understand the gentleman's answers to my questions, his ideas and mine are the same——

Mr. KNOX. I am glad if we agree.

Mr. COX. But, now, wait a minute. You issue these bonds, payable in dollars?

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. COX. And then the judgment is discharged by legal-tender money?

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. COX. That is all right.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifty minutes.

Mr. KNOX. I will yield to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] ten minutes, and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is true that I said some months since on the floor of this House that there were certain States of this Union whose monetary system was beyond the reach of Congressional legislation, and it is a matter as notorious as the fact that the sun shines or that water runs, if my information is correct. But I have noticed that there is nothing that is susceptible of such abundant proof that it will not be denied by those who are infatuated with the free coinage of silver.

There are seven States in this Union where, I am informed, there is scarcely an obligation that is not payable in gold; and not only that, but where the currency in circulation among the people is largely gold, and no one finds any fault about it. Those States are California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington. But it is a curious circumstance that the representatives on this floor and in the Senate who come from those States would not only compel the rest of the Union to take a 50-cent dollar, but they would throttle all legislation unless the rest of the Union will permit them to force it on us. That is as notorious as any truth that any man can utter.

I do not propose to make any political speech at this time; but I do say that I remember very distinctly when the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Smith] pleaded on this floor and made a speech which first and last occupied about an hour, that the Territory of Arizona might be allowed to issue its bonds payable in gold. Has it come to this, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress of the United States propose to deny to any citizen the right of free contract, to say that he can not make a contract to be paid in anything he chooses for any obligation he takes, whether it be payment in cotton, or wool, or gold, or silver, or lead, or iron? What does this House propose? Has it come to this, that this House proposes to exercise a tyranny over the States and Territories and individuals, to say that they shall not be permitted to make contracts for the payment of any obligations that they choose to take in anything whatever they choose to agree to accept? Mr. Speaker, it is against public policy to interfere with private contracts. If the States that I have mentioned and the citizens thereof choose to make gold a currency among their own people, who shall say them nay? What we object to is that they should force on us a standard of value which is debased when they themselves are abundantly protected, and our legislation can no more reach them than it can reach the Empire of Great Britain.

Now, these States not only have their obligations payable in gold, but in their banks they have about $13,000,000 of coin; and of this coin only about $850,000 is in silver. They have only $5,000,000 in currency. And they are right and prudent in so keeping their money as to be provided against all contingencies, even the action of their own representatives; and when these things are denied on this floor they must be denied in a Pickwickian sense. There is some substance in their denial that every obligation in those States is not expressed in gold, but the percentage not expressed in gold is so small that it does not materially affect the general results.

I certainly hope that this House will defeat the amendment, for these Territories begged and pleaded that they might be allowed to issue their bonds payable in gold. They were permitted to issue them payable in gold, and they ought to have the right, and it ought to be embodied in the bill that they should have the right, to refund them in gold.

Mr. KNOX. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, as one of the few sound-money Democrats in the House of Representatives, I propose to say a few words about the amendment which has been offered by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]. The State of New York, a part of which I have the honor to represent, has already declared that it is for sound money. The Democratic party of the State of New York in June last, at its State convention at Saratoga, declared itself for the maintenance of the existing gold standard; and under the instructions then and there given I was sent as a delegate to the national convention at Chicago. It matters not what took place at Chicago. I do not propose to discuss the platform of that misguided convention before this House to-day.

Mr. TERRY. What did your State do at the State convention in September?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. At the so-called State convention held at Buffalo, in September, the Democratic party of the State of New York repudiated or rejected the sound-money principles which it had advocated for fifty years anterior; but if a party chooses to go back upon its principles, it is my view that those who belong to that party can not be bound by the national convention.

Now, I ask members of the majority, the men who control this House, to vote down this amendment, because I say if you tolerate it, it will be considered by the country at large as a declaration in favor of silver or of soft money. It will be held to be a declaration against the maintenance of the existing gold standard. Why, gentlemen, look at the report of the committee and see what they tell us. That this is a measure to make the funding laws, or the laws providing for the refunding of the debts of the various Territories, conform to the law of 1891, passed by Congress in reference to the Territory of Arizona. These are the words in the report:

This bill adapts generally to all the Territories the funding act of Arizona, passed by Congress in 1891.

That is the statement of the committee. They tell us that this general law is drawn in conformity to the law of 1891; and what has the law of 1891 provided for? It provides for the payment of these bonds, the bonds of the Territory of Arizona, in what? In gold or its equivalent. Not in gold alone, but in the equivalent of gold. And thank God, to-day, gentlemen, the silver and the paper of this country remain the equivalent of gold. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee proposes to insert an amendment. He can not change the law about Arizona. He can not deprive the people of Arizona of the right to have gold bonds, to have bonds payable, principal and interest, in gold or its equivalent; but he proposes to take from the other Territories the right to have any gold bonds at any time; not leaving it optional whether they shall have gold or its equivalent.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question there?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In one moment——

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question there?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOATNER. When the bill recites that the bonds shall be payable in lawful money of the United States, does not that mean gold or its equivalent, at least so long as the present party is in power?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. My answer to that, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, is that these words "interest shall be paid semi-annually in gold or its equivalent in lawful money" mean that it can be paid either in gold or in any form of money that is the absolute equivalent of gold. Why insert this amendment if it is not for an insidious purpose? Why provide that the principal and interest of the bonds funded under this act shall be payable in any lawful money of the United States, except the Arizona bonds heretofore described? They are payable in gold or its equivalent, and after providing for their payment in gold or its equivalent, we provide for another class of bonds which shall not be payable in gold or the equivalent of gold. What does that mean, gentlemen? It means repudiation in the future, if it be possible. It means to deprive these people and these Territories of the right to issue gold bonds; and I say to you, gentlemen of the majority, that if you do not vote down this amendment, you will adopt a very hazardous course, a course which will not be satisfactory to the sound-money people of this country.

Mr. KNOX. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this financial question should have been injected into this debate. These Territories desire the privilege of refunding their bonds. By a clerical error a provision has been inserted in this bill which was not intended by the committee or by the framers of the bill, by which the interest on all of the bonds is required to be paid in gold, the principal being payable in "lawful money." It is simply a matter of getting a punctuation mark in the wrong place.

Now, we have seen too many good bills run ashore and wrecked on the silver coast to be willing to send another bill out of this House into that same rocky and dangerous sea, and there is no need whatever of our embarrassing the Territories in that way. I recollect very well that in 1891 the gentleman then representing Arizona, who was a very radical free-silver man, explained to this House that his Territory was paying 10 per cent on its warrants and wanted to borrow money to pay them off, and found that it could borrow at 8 per cent on currency bonds or at 5 per cent upon gold bonds, and he insisted upon Congress granting his Territory the privilege of issuing $75,000 of gold bonds, so as to get the benefit of the lowest rate of interest. The bonds of these Territories are now out, and the question is simply about refunding them. It was the intention of the committee that the Arizona bonds, the interest of which is payable in gold, should continue to be payable in gold, but by an error the bill now provides that the interest on the bonds of New Mexico, which is payable in "lawful money," shall also be payable in gold. At present neither principal nor interest is being paid upon most of those bonds, and the holders are glad to refund them for bonds payable in "lawful money." They prefer to do that and get 4 per cent rather than to have the bonds nominally drawing 8 per cent and get nothing.

Now we, by going into the financial question on this bill, are placing these Territories where they will be unable to get the simple relief they ask for. The only question here is whether we shall allow Arizona to refund her gold-interest bonds with like bonds, and allow New Mexico to refund her lawful-money bonds with lawful-money bonds at a lower rate of interest; and if she can get the money at 4 per cent—and the bill expressly provides that not more than that shall be paid—certainly she could not get it at a lower rate if the bonds were payable in diamonds. So, by insisting on retaining this clerical mistake, we shall defeat the object of this legislation. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] will simply conform to the wishes of the people of the Territory and enable them to refund their bonds at about one-half the present rate of interest; and they should not be embarrassed in that work by any views that we may entertain upon the silver question, which is not involved here at all, and should not be.

Mr. COX. Under this proposed bill, if it becomes a law will the character of the bonds of the Territories be changed at all as to their payment?

Mr. LACEY. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee is adopted, then the new bonds will be currency bonds to replace old currency bonds, and the new gold-interest bonds will replace the old gold-interest bonds, and the status quo will be precisely maintained, except that the rates of interest will be reduced about one-half.

Mr. COX. Take, for instance, the New Mexico bonds, which are payable in legal-tender money. When you refund them, what point is gained?

Mr. LACEY. I will explain. Those bonds were issued under various laws, and for a variety of purposes, and questions of form have arisen and other questions, and by adopting a uniform system of bonds to be issued by a commission, all being carefully drawn in the same form, the bonds will be given currency. At present they are not current and can not be sold. At present the Territories have ceased to pay interest upon them, and by this legislation they will be relieved of the necessity of paying 7 or 8 per cent, and it will be better both for the Territories upon the one hand and for the holders of the bonds upon the other, to give authority to the Territories to make these contracts. Now, as I have already said, we ought not to embarrass this question by bringing up the issues of the campaign of 1896 and fighting them over here again, and sending the same question to the other end of the Capitol to be there debated, to the prevention of the relief asked for by these Territories, which are already loaded with all that they can bear.

Mr. COX. Is there any question as to the legality of these bonds?

Mr. KNOX. None at all.

Mr. LACEY. I do not understand that there is any question as to the legality of the bonds, but the Territories have lain down under the weight of the interest. It is like the case of a landlord who has his land rented at $5 an acre and gets no rent because it is more than his tenant can pay, but changes the rate to $2.50 an acre and afterwards gets his rent every year. The burden of the existing rates of interest is more than the Territories can bear, but they will be able to pay the amount that these reduced rates would impose upon them.

Mr. OGDEN. As a matter of information, I should like to know what is approximately the amount of the indebtedness of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico—what is the amount that will be involved?

Mr. LACEY. I prefer that the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] or the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. KNOX] should answer the gentleman's question, as they doubtless have more accurate information than I have.

Mr. OGDEN. We have had no statement as to whether this indebtedness is $100,000 or a million dollars or $10,000,000. We should like to know something as to the amount.

Mr. LACEY. I yield back my time to the gentleman who kindly yielded to me.

Mr. KNOX. The indebtedness of Arizona at the present time, as appeared in the report filed here upon the admission of Arizona as a State, is about $3,000,000, about half of which, as I understand, has already been refunded. The indebtedness of the Territory of New Mexico is between $800,000 and $900,000; and if we include the indebtedness of the different counties and cities, there must be added about $900,000 more. The indebtedness of Oklahoma is very small. The bonded indebtedness of that Territory is now less than $50,000. There were, however, outstanding at the time the report was filed, during this session of Congress, different warrants to the amount of about $150,000, which will probably have to be provided for by the issue of bonds.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the figures stated by the gentleman do not indicate the limit of the amount which this bill may possibly involve, because it provides for refunding not only existing indebtedness, but also future indebtedness.

Mr. KNOX. Certainly. I am simply answering the question of the gentleman [Mr. OGDEN] who wanted to know the present indebtedness.

Mr. BOATNER. Does not this bill provide additional remedies for the collection of taxes to secure the payment of these bonds?

Mr. KNOX. As the gentleman from New Mexico has stated, the bill includes the same provision which in 1890 was enacted with reference to Arizona, creating the auditor and other officers, a board of equalization, and providing the necessary machinery for refunding. The machinery provided in this bill is not different from that authorized by Congress for Arizona, where, I am informed, it has worked well in practice, saving the people there a great deal in interest.

Mr. BOATNER. Does this bill supersede the existing laws of the Territory providing for the assessment and collection of taxes for the payment of these bonds?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, in 1891 it was deemed advisable by the officers of Arizona to come to Congress to secure, if possible, a funding law whereby the indebtedness of the Territory—Territorial, county, municipal, and school district—could be funded into a general bond bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds previously issued. Congress upon our application passed a law which in its original form made the principal of the bonds payable in lawful money and the interest payable annually in gold coin. When the negotiation of those bonds was undertaken, some question was raised in regard to the interest being payable annually, and our people applied to Congress to have the interest made payable semiannually. An amendatory bill being introduced for that purpose, the question arose whether this interest should be made payable in gold coin or in lawful money. The original law required that the interest be paid in gold coin.

The bill as passed by the House—the passage of the measure being advocated by my predecessor—followed in this respect the language of the original law, it being believed that with a provision for the payment of the interest in gold coin we could negotiate the securities more easily than otherwise. The bill as passed by the House went to the Senate, where it created a great deal of discussion; and having been amended by the Senate, it went into conference. The advocates of silver money claimed that the interest should be made payable in lawful money; that the provision of the original law making the interest payable in gold was a mistake. I came here at that time as a representative of the Territory; and going before the conference committee, of which Senator FAULKNER was chairman, I pleaded that the amendment did not in any sense change in this respect the provision of the original law, which required the interest to be paid in gold coin; that our application had been simply to make the interest payable semiannually instead of annually, as we believed that in this form the bonds could be more easily negotiatied. Senator FAULKNER then said that if the amendatory act did not change the original law in this respect, there was no reason for insisting upon the amendment of the Senate; so that, as the bill then passed, the only change which it made in the original law was the change from annual interest to semiannual interest. From that day to this the law has remained in that form.

This bill proposes to adapt the Arizona law to all the Territories, making its provisions general. That law has worked very well in Arizona. It has resulted in saving annually $45,000 to $70,000. Whether the interest on these bonds be made payable in gold or in lawful money makes no difference to me. But as the House has drifted into this monetary discussion, I take the floor for the purpose of stating that the original law with respect to Arizona, passed in 1891 without discussion or opposition, made the principal of our bonds payable in lawful money, and the interest payable in gold coin annually; and the amendatory act made no other change in the original law than to make the interest payable semiannually instead of annually. If at this late day it be deemed necessary by the House to change the law so as to make both the principal and the interest of these bonds payable in lawful money, I have personally no objection. My only object was to correct a misunderstanding as to the provision of the law with respect to our Territory. I think that the law, which we have found to work well, would operate very advantageously if applied to the other Territories.

Mr. KNOX. If the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] will now use his time, I will, at the close of his remarks, say what little I wish to say in conclusion.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, in this discussion gentlemen on this side of the House, as on the other side, who do not believe in making contracts payable in gold have been subjected to more or less ridicule. I wish to state distinctly what animates us in objecting to the provision of this bill and in opposing a proposition to make, so far as the power of this Government is concerned, any obligation in this country payable in gold. It is plain, Mr. Speaker, why the silver men are opposed to this policy. It seems to me that you gentlemen on the other side, and those of you on this side who believe in a gold standard, and who believe, or claim to believe, in keeping up the present greenback circulation, the silver notes, and the silver certificates already in circulation on a uniform basis, so that every dollar shall be equal to every other dollar, should also be opposed to the Government ever giving its approval to a contract payable absolutely and solely in gold.

Our currency is at present composed of the greenbacks, the Sherman notes, the silver certificates, and silver. You people have promised to keep all of that at a parity. But, Mr. Speaker, it is manifestly utterly impossible to do so, if you make renewed demands for gold coin, or make your obligations and contracts payable exclusively in gold. Suppose for a moment you allowed all of the municipal bonds of the country, the railroad bonds, the State bonds, and the Federal bonds to be made payable solely in gold, and the interest also in gold, then it is evident that to that extent you create a demand for gold, and you must provide that much more of gold to meet your obligations. Consequently you keep up and make higher the premium which is already existing upon gold. So, if you gentlemen are determined not to retire the greenbacks or destroy them, or if you are determined to keep silver and silver certificates in circulation, and to utilize the national banking currency, and use all of them as money upon an equality, then the obligation of the Government is to treat all this money exactly alike, and permit no discrimination, so far at least as the contracts of the Government and its legislation are concerned.

Now, we silver people are determined to do what we can to put silver on a parity with gold—to remonetize it—and to maintain it there. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has seen proper, in the limited time accorded to him, to criticise the silver Democrats as having abandoned the previous policy of that party. But who are the judges as to what is Democracy and what is the policy of the party? This Administration, backed by the gentleman from New York and others, appealed to the great toiling, laboring masses of the Democracy of the Union, and we met at Chicago to determine who represented Democracy in the United States; and what was the result? Mr. Speaker, he met there his Waterloo. For the honor of the Democracy I may assert that it has taken a determined, a courageous, and an advanced stand on the financial and the silver question, and it proposes, Mr. Speaker, to beat no retreat. We are determined, so far as we are concerned, to do nothing to increase the demand for gold by making contracts payable in gold, if we can prevent it.

As we look at the question, we believe that the low prices prevailing result from the great demand for gold the world over. We believe that prices can not be restored to their normal condition if gold is not cut down—the demand for it reduced—and it is brought to its proper condition. Whenever you make a contract payable in gold, to that extent you simply create a new demand for gold, and the price is increased the world over, and to that extent, of course, you increase the premium on gold and mark the depreciation of other property in the exact proportion.

These views, Mr. Speaker, briefly stated, animate us and make us consistent in our determination, so far as we are concerned, to give no countenance as members of this Government to gold contracts, thus creating the demand for it and making that demand greater than it is.

How can you who believe in the greenback circulation, who believe in silver certificates and notes and in the national banking system, lend your countenance to a Government contract that tends to depreciate or degrade silver, greenbacks, or silver certificates? If you are honest in your declarations that you will keep up the present currency at a parity, the only way to prove that fact is to create an equal parity, and not give a preference to any one character of money now in circulation in the United States. And the policy, the course that this Administration has pursued, creating a greater demand for gold, has succeeded in putting it at times at a premium over greenbacks, silver certificates, and silver notes. That has been done in the three or four years since the Administration limited the sale of bonds absolutely for gold. People who wanted to get into the bond syndicates, who wanted to secure their bonds cheap, had to procure gold prices in order to enable them to do so, and there never was a bond sold by the Administration in which you have not seen gold at a premium in New York—persons paying a premium on the gold in order to get the bonds at the reduced price the Government had to sell them for.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to that policy. I am opposed to any policy which proposes to separate our currency by promoting one and discrediting the other, and for that reason I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN].

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER]—who I see now enters the Chamber and therefore my regrets on that score are withdrawn—I notice the question of alleged fact that was asserted by the gentleman from Massachusetts in his speech of a few moments ago, which is but a repetition of a similar misstatement of fact made by that gentleman in a speech delivered in this body on the 7th day of last February, and which is found on page 1472 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. At that time I called his attention to the misstatement in the following language. I read from the RECORD. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] gave utterance to these words, referring to the "silver States:"

There is not a single one of those States in which every time obligation is not practically written in gold; principal and interest are made payable in gold.

To that statement I made the following reply:

I desire to interrupt the gentleman. I can not speak for California, but I say that the gentleman's statement is absolutely incorrect as to the State from which I hail. Our notes are not made payable in gold; they are payable in lawful money of the United States.

Upon the repetition of his misstatement by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], I rose to again deny it, but was denied the right by the gentleman, as appears upon that page. Some two or three days afterwards an interview appeared in the New York Commercial Advertiser, in which the following language was used by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER]:

There is not an obligation of any name or nature made in these seven States that is not payable in gold; and if merchants, manufacturers, and traders the country over will adopt the same plan in all the obligations they receive or give, and in all other transactions, it would be the most practical solution of the whole matter.

Those who heard the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] a moment ago know that he reiterated the same statement, nearly twelve months having elapsed since he had notice that it was at least questioned.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] suggests that that denial is made in a Pickwickian sense. I want him to distinctly understand that it is not; but I submit, and I think I will demonstrate before I get through, that his statement was made in a Gulliverian sense.

Mr. Chairman, after that statement was made, I wrote to fifteen or sixteen of the leading banks of my State, stating that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] had made this statement, and asking them what the truth was. I hold in my hand fifteen letters, signed by the cashiers or presidents of fifteen of the largest banks in my State, transacting the greatest amount of business, and I will read one or two of them. I can not read all of them, and I think that even this House, gold standard as it is, will admit that the cashiers of those respective banks know almost as much about the character of their obligations as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], who has furnished more misinformation to the world on this question than all the rest of the House of Representatives put together. [Laughter.] I read the first letter that I happen to pick out from this bundle of letters which I have:

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 28th ultimo received and all noted. I have been cashier of this above bank since 1887, and have been with the house since November, 1876, and never, to my knowledge, has a note or a legal instrument for this firm of any kind been made in which the words "payable in gold" appeared. In all mortgages, notes, etc., wherein nature or kind of money to be paid is mentioned, it has been, and is at present, the custom to use the words "lawful money of the United States."

You will please find herein a blank note that we are using every day in our business; in fact, it is practically the same form used since the establishment of this bank, in March, 1877.

I beg to congratulate you on your position on bimetallism, and hope you may win.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your circular letter of February 28 ultimo, I herewith inclose the blank form of note used by this bank in making loans, and also one used by an "investment company" which we run in connection with the banking business, and doing business in Montana and Idaho.

Permit me to say, in connection with the subject-matter of your letter, that we are willing, always, to accept any kind of money in payment of these obligations which the Government recognizes as such, whether it be gold, silver, legal-tender notes, national-bank notes, or the at present discredited silver certificates. Under existing laws, or rather the interpretation placed upon them by the present "hoodoo" Administration, these obligations would no doubt call for gold in payment, but if we were to exact the payment in that metal, with the whole world scrambling for it and our own Government paying a premium on it, not one in ten of them would ever, in fact, be paid, for it would be impossible for creditors to do so. I do not believe a single bank in Montana or Idaho uses the word "gold" in any of the obligations taken for money loaned.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MISSOULA.

[Capital stock, $150,000. Surplus and profits, $150,000.]

MISSOULA, MONT., March 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 28th ultimo has been received.

As requested, I inclose herein the form of note which is now and has been used by this institution for the last eight years or more since I have been cashier, and I am satisfied a similar form was used prior to that time. In my experience in banking I fail to recall having seen at any time a note or negotiable paper, drawn in the State of Montana, which called for the payment of same in gold. You will notice the inclosed form does not stipulate the kind of money which shall be used in the payment of same.

Hoping that you will be successful in your efforts, and believing that you can readily secure such evidence from the residents of this State as will refute the statement made by Mr. WALKER, I remain,

Yours, truly,

J. M. KEITH, Cashier.

THE THOMAS CRUSE SAVINGS BANK.

(Incorporated.)

HELENA, MONT., March 7, 1896.

Hon. CHARLES S. HARTMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your valued communication of the 28th of February, and same is fully noted. Complying with your request, I take pleasure in handing you herewith a blank note form used exclusively by this institution. You will observe it contains no gold clause, and we would willingly accept silver coin in payment of obligations due us. As a matter of fact, for some considerable time the mutilated currency that we have forwarded to the United States Treasury at Washington for redemption, with the accompanying request that its equivalent be remitted to our Eastern correspondent at New York or Chicago for our credit, has met with no success, and instead the Treasury Department has forwarded to our institution Treasury notes and greenbacks of the denomination of $1 and $2. Why this should be done is evident. As a matter of fact, at the present time silver coins are not by any means a drug in this part of the country, and it becomes necessary at times to express them into the State in order to meet the demand for change. As you are no doubt aware, our president, Thomas Cruse, is largely interested in mines in this State. At the present time he is operating three mining properties and running a mill, and will in the near future operate another mill. To make it understood clearly by those that are skeptical regarding his position on the money question, you will please find herewith copy of a telegram that he sent to the New York World prior to the last issue of bonds by the Government, and in reply to the World's telegram as to how he stood on the sound-currency system.

"HELENA, MONT., January 11, 1896.

"The WORLD, New York City, N. Y.:

"I favor home loans; question of rate of interest undecided on bonds; can not say, therefore, about investing; I will furnish the Government gold bullion over five hundred fine (the product of my mines), Helena delivery, in exchange for silver coin delivered here, and believe the majority of the mine owners of Montana will do likewise, and the probabilities are that all other mining States would do the same, and keep the reserve intact for the Government; if you advocate this principle and mine owners cooperate, it will put a stop to bond issues.

"Respectfully, yours,

W. J. SWEENEY, Treasurer."

HENRY ELLING, BANKER.

VIRGINIA CITY, MONT., March 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your favor of 28th ultimo, only four of the notes held by this bank are payable in gold, and they cover a loan to the Manhattan Company of $40,000 for a term of years. As they are an Eastern corporation, I deemed it proper to measure out to them some of their own medicine.

In all other transactions in this bank no stipulation is made other than lawful money of the United States.

I inclose herewith samples of our notes as used at all times.

Yours, truly,

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of the 28th ultimo, I beg to say that during the seventeen years in which our firm has been engaged in the banking business at this place we have never in a single instance discriminated in favor of gold in any business transaction.

I inclose blank note, and add that we have used this form for at least fifteen years. If your quotation from Hon. Mr. WALKER is intended to apply to us, it is absolutely false.

Hon. CHARLES S. HARTMAN,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] five minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I want to testify to the fact that in the State of Colorado, classed as one of the silver States, the great mass of the obligations are not payable in gold. I do not believe that there is a single bank in the State of Colorado that has an obligation payable in gold. But, Mr. Speaker, I want to say something concerning the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] who has this bill in charge. He has made the statement that he believes in the single gold standard, because he believes that the production of gold is sufficient. If it is sufficient to form a basis for the money of the world, there might be some logic in his position; but, Mr. Speaker, although there has been an increase in the production of gold, the gentleman seems to forget that the uses of gold are multiplying. He seems to forget that to-day we are using millions and millions of dollars in gilding, in dentistry, in medals, in charms, in watches, and jewelry, where we used a very small amount a few years ago.

Why, Mr. Speaker, when a person contrasts the use of gold at the present time with the use of gold twenty or twenty-five years ago, he is appalled at the enormous increase of its use in the arts. Robert Giffen, the statistician of the London Board of Trade and a gold monometallist, declared three or four years ago that there was not a single dollar of the annual product of gold that went into coin. He did not mean that there were no new coins made, but he meant that as many coins found the melting pot of the goldsmith as there were coins made from the annual production. Sir Lyon Playfair a few years ago estimated that 75 per cent of the gold product went into the arts. He is a gold monometallist and a member of the British Parliament. Professor Fawcett, another gold monometallist, has stated that of the gold product of 1892, which was $138,000,000, the sum of $110,000,000 went into the arts. Why, when we look around us and see this beautiful Library building across the way, and find that they are using gold leaf in such quantity that they even spread it upon the dome of that building, and we find that in the interior it is used in large quantities in decorations, we can readily see that this increased production can not keep pace with the use of it in the arts.

Mr. Speaker, the best evidence of the fact that gold is not produced in sufficient quantities to act as a base for the monetary systems of the world is the declaration of the Secretary of the Treasury as compared with former declarations from that Department. Senator SHERMAN in 1876 made the statement that there were $3,500,000,000 of gold in the world. No better authority can be produced on the gold side of this question, and yet I find the statement made by the Treasury Department in the year 1896 that there are $4,000,000,000 of gold in the world. In other words, there has been an increase of only $500,000,000 of gold to the basic money of the world in the past twenty years. And that means what? It means simply $25,000,000 a year. That is all that has been added per annum in the past twenty years. Is that sufficient to add to the basic money of the world to keep pace with the progress of commerce and the increase in the credits of the world?

Mr. Speaker, when we see these facts, it seems to me that no one who looks at them carefully can come to any other conclusion than that the production of gold has not kept pace with the increased use of it. The increased use in the arts is enormous.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HENDERSON). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply, as a Populist, to protest against the making of any contracts, either by individuals or by corporations, which state they are solvable otherwise than in the lawful money of the country. In other words, I take the position that Congress should not give its countenance and sanction to any contract that can not be solvable in the lawful money of the Government. To take any other position is to destroy at once the legal-tender quality of all money. Now, what you shall make lawful tender must be based upon the present and the future. If it is gold, then the contract will be solvable in gold; if it is gold, silver, and legal-tender paper, then it is solvable in those classes of money; but, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to trying to accomplish by indirection what neither party in this country to-day is willing to accomplish directly—that is, to put us upon a single gold standard. The Republican party is committed to international bimetallism, and it has its commissioner abroad to-day to see if this can be accomplished. The Democratic party and the Populist party are committed to the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1. Only the Palmer party of this country is committed to the gold-standard policy.

Mr. Speaker, this may be an ingenious method to put upon the country the Palmer Democrats and its policy to execute contracts to the detriment of the great masses of the American people. Let me suggest this. It may be that the Territories have made gold contracts for the future. To extend a contract is to make a new contract; and if our brethren have been so unwary, as the gentleman from Iowa suggested, that if the contract called for dynamite, it ought to be kept. Now, I believe gold is next to dynamite to the best interests of the common people and the institutions of this land. Yet in our sovereign body, as the great House that represents the people, we should relieve them from any such contracts as those.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is another thought that ought to be suggested, and it ought to be impressed upon the minds of Federal legislators. On page 3, line 12, of the pending measure or bill, I find this langage:

Which interest shall be paid semiannually in gold or its equivalent in lawful money of the United States, on the 15th day of January and the 15th day of July of each year, etc.

The amendment of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], through whose courtesy I am permitted to address the House, adds, at the end of line 25, on page 3:

Provided, That the principal and the interest of the bonds funded under this act shall be payable in lawful money of the United States, except the original bonds above described heretofore issued.

The gentleman from Tennessee is adroit and patriotic in presenting his amendment. It meets the hearty approval of all Populists, of all true silver men of all parties, and will, as it should, be adopted overwhelmingly. This amendment presents squarely the issues involved in the great battle begun in 1896, and which will be finished in 1900, in the interest of human rights and human existence. If I can read and interpret the English language, and if party platforms mean anything, all three of the great parties, to-wit, Democratic, Republican, and Populist, are committed to free silver—the Populist and Democratic party by independent action 16 to 1, and the Republican party by international agreement. The only gold party in existence to-day is the Palmer or so-called National Democrats. The sooner these and the gold wing of the Republicans get together the better for the great battle of 1900, which is inevitable and irresistible.

The Republican party, I repeat, is committed in its platform to free silver; true, by international agreement. If they fail to obtain it in this way, then, since they are committed to the principle, they are obligated and will prove cowards if they fail to act independently to secure this boon to the country. I want to make this prediction, if they fail to do so as an organization the great mass of their followers will act independent of the party and strike for the common weal.

I believe the true policy of all parties and individual citizens is to assist and facilitate the incoming Administration to bring to this country prosperity. This is more desirable than the success of any political party, and the political party that throws obstructions in the way to prevent a return of prosperity to the country and people for the purpose of obtaining a partisan advantage for the future will not deserve and will not receive further countenance or trusts from the people; and the individual who pursues this course to advance his own ambition will find that by such actions he forfeits the confidence of his constituents.

The plain, patriotic duty of the hour is to hold the Republican party to a strict account of the voluntary trust they have assumed to bring prosperity, and if they succeed they will and should be their own successors.

If they fail, then they must give way to the people who are determined that this country shall not be sacrificed upon the altar of the single gold standard and corporate power. The financial independence and individuality of the American people must be established in the interest of civilization and humanity. Hence it is, Mr. Speaker, that I protest against making or countenancing by legislation contracts for the Territories, for the States, for the Union or the individual that is solvable in gold. I do not mean to be understood that I would restrain individual rights so as not to permit private or public contracts payable in commodities, such as iron, copper, cotton, wool, corn, wheat, silver, or even gold, if you will reduce gold to a commodity, and take from it all its monetary functions and restore these where they belong—to the Government, as the representative and agent of the people, from whom it has been purloined by wicked and corrupt legislation of the past twenty-five years.

The propositions contained in this bill were fully carried out by Congressional legislation in the refunding of our national debt, and I venture to say that a more disastrous or costly piece of legislation was never placed on our statute books. The object sought by this bill is to make the debt of New Mexico payable in gold only. By direct legislation and the arbitrary rulings of the Treasury Department the public debt of the United States has been placed in precisely that condition. In order to accomplish this result unjust legislation was secured through questionable, if not disreputable, methods. The original public debt growing out of the war was payable in the lawful money of the United States, which at that time consisted of gold, silver, and paper. There are some at this late day who refuse to believe that the bonded debt as originally contracted could have been paid in legal tender paper money. As proof that such was the fact, I will quote from Senators JOHN SHERMAN and B. F. Wade in support of my statement. I will add that these letters were written during the earlier stage of the refunding scheme.

In a speech delivered in the Senate February 27, 1867, JOHN SHERMAN said:

Equity and justice are amply satisfied if we redeem these bonds at the end of five years in the same kind of money, of the same intrinsic value it bore at the time they were issued. Gentlemen may reason about this matter over and over again, and they can not come to any other conclusion; at least that has been my conclusion after the most careful consideration. Senators are sometimes in the habit, in order to defeat the argument of an antagonist, of saying that this is repudiation. Why, sir, every citizen of the United States has conformed his business to the legal-tender clause. He has collected and paid his debts accordingly.

In 1868 he wrote to a friend as follows:

DEAR SIR: I was pleased to receive your letter. My personal interests are the same as yours, but, like you, I do not intend to be influenced by them. My construction of the law is the result of careful examination, and I feel quite sure an impartial court would confirm it, if the case could be tried before a court. I send you my views as fully stated in a speech. Your idea is that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the "principal" in legal tenders. I think the bondholder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he paid for the bonds. If the case is to be tested by the law, I am right; if it is to be tested by Jay Cook's advertisements, I am wrong. I hate repudiation or anything like it, but we ought not to be deterred from doing what is right by fear of undeserved epithets. If, under the law as it stands, the holders of the five-twenties can be paid in gold, then we are repudiators if we propose to pay otherwise. If the bondholder can legally demand only the kind of money he paid, then he is a repudiator and extortioner to demand money more valuable than he gave.

Truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Senator Wade in answer to a letter from a friend said:

VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
Washington, December 13, 1867.

Yours of the 8th instant is received, and I must cordially agree with every word and sentence of it. I am for the laboring portion of our people. The rich can take care of themselves. While I must scrupulously live up to all the contracts of the Government, and fight repudiation to the death, I will fight the bondholder as resolutely when he undertakes to get more than the pound of flesh. We never agreed to pay the five-twenties in gold; no man can find it in the bond; and I never will consent to have one payment for the bondholders and another for the people. It would sink any party, and it ought to. To talk of specie payments or a return to specie under present circumstances is to talk like a fool. It would destroy the country as effectually as a fire. And any contraction of the currency at this time is about as bad. But I have not time to give my ideas in full.

Yours, truly,

BENJAMIN F. WADE.

Hon. Thaddeus Stevens also declared at the same time that—

If I knew that any party in this country would go for paying in coin that which is payable in money, thus enhancing it one-half; if I knew there was such a platform and such a determination this day on the part of any party, I would vote for the other side, Frank Blair and all. I would vote for no such speculation in favor of the large bondholders, the millionaires who took advantage of our folly in granting them coin payments of interest.

I could continue this line of evidence, but enough has been given to disclose the fact that our national debt was originally payable in lawful money. Through the false pretense of strengthening our national credit, what is known as the "public credit strengthening act" was passed March 18, 1869. I will quote it in full:

That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all just obligations to the public creditors, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the laws by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver. But none of said interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity unless at such time United States notes shall be convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin. And the United States also solemnly pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin.

This act by indirection changed the conditions of the bonded debt and made it payable in coin. Also under the guise of a plea for less interest, precisely as in the case of this bill, Congress passed the refunding act of July 14, 1870, which declared the bonds payable, principal and interest, in coin. Not satisfied with this, a bill was passed surreptitiously through both Houses of Congress in 1873 which dropped the coinage of the standard silver dollar and thereby made these bonds payable in gold alone. These several acts made our bonded debt, which was bought at the average rate of about 58 cents in gold on the dollar, worth par in that same metal and cost the people many millions, as I will show by a computation of Senator JONES of Nevada, found in his great speech of January 22, 1894. He says:

From 1862 to 1868 United States interest-bearing bonds were sold to the amount of	$2,049,975,700
Amount received for said bonds, discount on coin considered	1,371,424,238
Profit to purchasers	678,551,462
There has been paid as interest	2,538,000,000
Premiums for bonds not due	58,000,000
Paid on principal of bonds	1,756,000,000
Total paid	4,352,000,000
Add profit to purchasers	678,551,462
	5,030,551,462

For the $1,371,424,238 received for the sale of bonds the people have paid $5,030,551,462.

Up to the present time there has never been anything but gold paid on the public debt, notwithstanding the fact that the contract on the face of every bond declares it payable in coin.

Such, in brief, is the history of our national debt, which shows the vast amount of treasure the changes that have been made in its terms have cost the toiling masses of the nation.

This attempt to change the terms of the contract in the debt of New Mexico would, no doubt, cost the people of that Territory as much in proportion as the same scheme has cost the people of the nation at large. As a matter of fact, however, it is not gold payments in New Mexico that the real authors of this measure seek. It is simply another effort in the line of many attempts to have Congress pass a bill directing gold payments somehow or somewhere. A precedent of this kind is eagerly and persistently sought in order to be used to force legislation of a similar character regarding our national bonded indebtedness. I predict that this bill will be defeated, but even this will not prevent further efforts from being continued in that direction with the hope and expectation that Congress will at last be foolish enough to succumb to such relentless importunity. In my opinion, gold payments in our national finances will never obtain, save, as now, by indirection and absolute violation of law. If the trend of public sentiment be a guide, it is safe to predict that the near future will bring legislation of an opposite character that will force those in authority to obey the law, and silver, as well as gold, will be used in liquidating Government obligations.

The matter of funding is going on to-day in all the ramifications of public and private business. The bondholder of the nation, State and municipal, and the mortgagee are offering to fund—in some instances as an inducement is a lower rate of interest, in some instances a composition of the debts; but invariably they hold on to all their securities and get as much more as possible, and always want the principal and interest payable in gold or its equivalent in lawful money.

The unfortunate debtor reaches for all in sight that offers any hope, but he will find the mortgagee and bondholder, instead of lessening his burden, is adding to and perpetuating his load and fixing the status of himself and children as chattels and slaves to the gold and corporate power of the world. And thus, Mr. Speaker, we drift from worse to worse, and so it will be until a deceived and oppressed people will rise like a mighty giant and, regardless of all parties, their present or future, strike through some political medium to bring back the prosperity that has been again and again promised.

It is certainly my desire that Mr. McKinley's Administration shall prove successful—not to him personally or as a partisan, but as the Chief Executive of a great country—in bringing prosperity to the people, and I shall take pleasure in facilitating him along protection lines, and shall strive to make this protection equitable from the light before me. I can not see how this is possible without free silver 16 to 1 and supplemental financial legislation. Protection can not and will not bring prosperity unless it is made equitable. All sections of the country, and all industries and conditions, including agriculture, must receive as near as practicable the same ratio of protection. If not obtainable by an import tax, then statecraft must provide means to secure this measure of protection to the field that an import tax secures to the shops. This is common justice, and the measure of this is what the agriculturists of the country are demanding.

I think the South has made a great mistake in antagonizing a protective tariff. A wiser and more patriotic course would have been to devise methods for the cotton fields and its great scepter of power, cotton, to receive such protection as would have enabled us to dictate the price of cotton above the cost of production, and thereby bless, prosper, and make happy our people, and add to the aggregate wealth of the country by increasing our balance of trade, raising, as the Southern States do, eight-tenths of all the cotton in the world. We ought not to sacrifice such a power, when another course would be of such a service to a great section, to the great mass of human beings engaged in the cultivation of cotton, and to the nation and every other industry. The South is rich, rich in minerals, iron, coal, lumber, cotton, and other raw material. Give them the same measure of protection that is extended to the shops and manufacturer, and we will show you a land and section responding quickly to a return of prosperity, and ready to contribute its share to every responsibility imposed by law, and will prove a blessing to the nation.

I desire to repeat, in conclusion, that I do not believe this equitable protection can be obtained unless we shall have free silver at 16 to 1 and supplemental financial legislation; and the Republican party would be wise in accepting conditions as they find them, and as the great champion of protection they would rise to a full measure of their patriotic duty and give this measure of relief to the people under the broad ægis of equitable protection, utterly exemplifying "America for Americans" and a living chance for all classes of Americans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SKINNER. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire what time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-one minutes remaining.

Mr. KNOX. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am rejoiced as much as any man in this House to find that Montana is in the Union, as it certainly is if what my friend says is true—and I have no disposition at all to question his statement—but I wish to say that I consulted a dozen gentleman here from nine Western States and only used seven, only one of whom I now see, before I made my statement with reference to those States. However, I may have made a mistake as to Montana. There are two gentlemen on the floor who have put gold notes from two of those States into my hands since the gentleman spoke. I presume there are hundreds in this city. One reads as follows:

[No. 1.]

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, March 10, 1896.

On the 1st day of May, 1896, after date, without grace, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of G. S. Holmes eleven and $\frac{20}{100}$ dollars ($11.20) in United States gold coin, negotiable and payable at the First National Bank of Fort Wayne, Indiana, without defalcation or discount, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum from maturity until paid, both before and after judgment, and if suit be instituted for the collection of this note I agree to pay reasonable dollars attorney's fees.

The California note is for $252.65, and is as follows:

$252.65. SAN DIEGO, December 15, 1894.

Ninety days after date, without grace, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of Frank J. Connolly the sum of two hundred and fifty-two $\frac{65}{100}$ dollars, with interest thereon, from this date until payment at the rate of ten per cent per annum, payable quarterly, and if not so paid, then to become part of the principal of this note, and to bear like rate of interest till paid. Both principal and interest to be paid in United States gold coin. And I further agree that in the event of suit brought against me then there shall be added to any judgment against me rendered in said suit, as counsel fees, an additional sum of ten per centum, in like gold coin, upon the amount of the principal and interest hereof accrued, at the time of the entry of such judgment; or if paid before judgment and after action commenced, then on the amount at the date of payment.

No. ——.

If I made a mistake in enumerating the proper States, I exceedingly regret it. I am very sure that there are seven States in this Union, leaving out Montana, to which my statement applies, and there are two others where scarcely an obligation is made that is not payable in gold. The notes that I have here are upon printed forms. Furthermore, this practice, having grown up during the war on the Pacific Coast, has extended nearly all over the country, so that a very large proportion of the obligations everywhere are now made payable in gold. I accept the gentleman's correction as to Montana, but my statement was made upon what I believed to be solid information. One gentleman went over the list with me, Mr. JOHNSON of California, and he said that he might be mistaken as to some of the States. There were nine States in the list, and I cut it down to seven.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that if I have been caught in a mistake in this case, I challenge that gentleman or any other gentleman on this floor to find that I have been in error upon any statement I have made to the House—any other.

Now, a word on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment, as he has used my name?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I said that I went over a list of nine States with you, and you said you thought my statement was true as to most of them, but as to one or two you could not tell.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I said that I could only tell certainly as to California, and that so far as California was concerned you were correct.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word as to the bill. The United States Government, the maker of all forms of money, can not specify that any one of its obligations shall be payable in anything but "lawful money" or "coin." To do so would be to discredit every other money except the money named. That can not be done by the Government without disgracing the country and depreciating every other form of money except the form that is named. Having promised in the body of the law that all our money shall be kept at a parity, while we use gold at all the statement is a promise that all obligations shall be paid in gold, and therefore we can not mention gold in a new obligation at this late day. But there is no reason why any city, corporation, or individual may not mention any kind of money whatever, without detriment to itself or to the money of the country. The distinction is as wide as it can possibly be between the users of money doing so and its maker doing so. I can not specify that one of my notes, if I make a dozen different kinds, shall be payable in a more valuable thing than another without depreciating all the other notes that I have issued, and that is the position in which the United States stands. But, so far as any State, any Territory, any city, any corporation, or any individual is concerned, we do them wrong, we violate their natural rights, if we forbid them doing so, if one man, or one corporation, or one State, or one city desires to make such an obligation. I despise and hate and contemn the doctrine that "the greatest good to the greatest number" is to control. It is one of the most damnable propositions ever put forth. The right of one individual is as valuable and as sacred to him as that of each one or all the other seventy million. "A wrong to the meanest citizen is an injury to the whole community," is the doctrine of humanity.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say, with reference to notes in California being made payable in gold, that that was not because of opposition to silver. The law was passed in 1862 or 1863—I have forgotten which—at the time when greenbacks were fluctuating. Ours was a gold community and the law was passed then with reference to greenbacks, and silver was not taken into account at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, what I desired to say when I asked for time has just been said by the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON], namely, that the gold contracts of the West were not made as against silver. The gold contracts of California, the gold contracts of the country farther east and west of the Rocky Mountains generally, were made when the greenbacks came into use in the United States. The people out there were producing gold and they were unwilling at that time, when greenbacks were fluctuating, to exchange their gold for greenbacks at par. But take the States of Colorado, Idaho, and the silver States generally, and it is a fact beyond dispute that no bank in any one of those States ever uses a gold clause in any note.

It is true, on the other hand, that sometimes on the negotiation of long loans, such as school bonds or something of that kind, the money lenders demand that the obligation be made payable in gold. Money lenders of the East demand that; but in the West, where I have resided for twenty-five years, I have never known a resident of the State of Colorado to demand any note payable in gold. On one occasion within my knowledge the largest merchants of the city of Denver, Daniels & Fisher—the Wanamaker of Denver—had sent to them from their importers of New York City a large order for French gloves for their approval. The order which they were to give was sent to them in a form which embraced the clause "payable in gold." They marked out those words and immediately returned it to their importer, saying, "If United States money is not good enough for French gloves, then we will use American gloves in this establishment." With all deference to our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], I do not believe that there has ever been any general use of gold contracts among the citizens of any of the Western States, except gold contracts which originated when the greenback was fluctuating in value. Those contracts are what have misled some of our friends—the old contracts which were drawn payable in gold so as to exclude payment in greenbacks; not for the purpose of excluding payment in silver, but to exclude the payment in fluctuating greenbacks during war times, and the form has continued to some extent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few closing words in support of this bill, which the committee desires very much to pass and the passage of which is desired by the people of all the Territories so far as their opinion has been expressed by their duly accredited representatives here. Its passage has not been objected to by creditors of the Territories who have appeared before the committee—the men from the commercial centers who are the holders of the indebtedness of the Territories and who represent generally the holders of such indebtedness.

In order that gentlemen on this side of the House may not be influenced in any way to vote against the passage of this bill by reason of the amendment which has been offered, I wish to state that it was the intention of the committee in framing this bill to make these refunding bonds payable in lawful money of the United States. That intention is distinctly expressed on the third page of the bill, in lines 20 to 22:

> The principal of said bonds shall be made payable in lawful money of the United States fifty years after the date of their issue.

How, then, has any difficulty arisen with reference to this question? How has it come to be supposed that the bill provided for the issuing of gold bonds? It is because of the clause beginning on line 4 of section 3:

> Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by said loan commissioners, not exceeding 4 per cent, except bonds issued by the Territory of Arizona in exchange for indebtedness of the kind and description in this act authorized and required to be funded or exchanged, and which indebtedness has already been presented to be exchanged under existing law, in which case said bonds shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent; which interest shall be paid semiannually, in gold—

It will be observed that the clause "which interest shall be paid semiannually in gold" is preceded by a semicolon. This should have been a comma, because the clause was intended to apply simply to bonds issued by the Territory of Arizona, those bonds having previously been issued under the refunding provision of the act of Congress of 1890, which especially provided that those bonds so issued by Arizona should be paid, principal and interest, in gold. Because of that provision of the act of 1890 we were obliged to except from the bill those bonds issued by Arizona unless we would undertake to repudiate bonds already issued and contracts already made. Because of this misunderstanding of the language of the bill, this controversy has arisen in the House as to the payment of these bonds in gold or in lawful money of the United States.

All the Territorial bonds except those of Arizona are payable in lawful money, and the whole effect of this bill is simply to give the people of the Territory free opportunity to refund their bonds at a lower rate of interest and to create the necessary machinery for so doing.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Why not change the semicolon to a comma?

Mr. KNOX. I am willing to offer such amendment as the gentleman suggests. I am authorized by the committee to say that so far as we have the power we accept the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I shall also move to amend the bill by changing the semicolon to a comma.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman will move that amendment now. There will be no objection to it, I believe.

Mr. KNOX. I move, then, to amend by striking out the semicolon in line 12 of section 3 and inserting a comma.

Mr. LACEY. Does the gentleman think that change will be sufficient?

Mr. KNOX. I think so. Still, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is simply an additional safeguard; it is in accordance with the intention of the committee, and we have no objection to its adoption.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the desire of the people of the Territories and of the creditors of the Territories in favor of this bill ought not to be interfered with by the discussion which has been precipitated here in regard to free silver and the gold standard. I agree with a good deal that the distinguished gentleman from New York said in reference to the amendment to make the bonds payable in gold; but my position is that the money of the United States to-day is gold; that all our money is upon a gold basis; that the authority of the Government is pledged to maintain sacredly all our money upon a parity with gold; and that we stand assured that such will be the policy of the Government for the next four years.

The gentleman from New York asked why this bill was not drawn in conformity with the act of 1891. My answer to that is that the condition of things in 1891 was entirely different from the condition at present. At that time we were purchasing 4,500,000 ounces of silver every month and issuing Treasury certificates upon that silver, payable in gold. It was doubted in this country and it was doubted the world over whether the United States could maintain the parity of its various forms of currency in gold with such a provision of law in operation. I think most men believed that that could not be done. It was therefore a matter of great consideration at that time to authorize the Territories or any corporations under the power of Congress to issue bonds which should be in terms gold bonds, so as to prevent those bonds bringing the low price which would otherwise be received in view of the doubt which then existed as to the ability of this Government to maintain its promises payable in gold.

But, Mr. Speaker, all that has passed away. The Sherman law has been repealed. We stand now upon the establishment of the single gold standard in this country and the power of the United States behind all our currency. I submit to the distinguished gentleman from New York that there is no occasion at the present time to say in any contracts made by authority of the American Congress that the word "gold" must be inserted or may be inserted. You want to do away with the distinction of the words "gold" or "silver." Money under our laws to-day, under the acts of Congress, means gold. The policy of 1891 had the same qualification, and the issue of Government bonds, when authorized, did not make them payable in gold, but all of them were issued payable in the coin of the country. Under the declared policy of the Government at that time they were issued for coin; but at the same time it was also the declared policy of the Government that the silver of the country should be maintained on a parity with gold.

Now, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] has talked of the scarcity of gold and the quantity of gold in circulation. If we take the example of every commercial nation in the world as a criterion, we have in the United States to-day enough gold in the vaults of the banks, in the Treasury of the United States, and in the hands of the people to maintain for ourselves a sound, abundant, and stable currency based on the standard of the whole world—the single gold standard, the standard of civilization, the standard of progress, the standard of wealth, and the standard of commercial progress the world over.

I said, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat, that I deprecate at this time the further agitation of the question of the currency of this country. I think it leads to nothing but doubt and disturbance in business affairs, and that the disturbance arising from such a cause is unavoidable. I think it will retard the progress we all hope to see in the near future. It is the question of the prosperity of this country that we are to deal with. We upon this side of the House believe that the prosperity of the country was lost when the country was robbed of its revenues and when the manufacture of goods we made here was transferred to Europe, and when the farmers and the lumbermen of Canada were given charge of the supply of the great home markets of the United States instead of the American farmers.

We believe the day has come for a change. We believe the day is at hand when we can restore the prosperity of the country by enacting wise and adequate protective tariff laws, and that that is the duty which the Republican party and the Republican members of this Congress have no choice but to discharge. I think it injures our chances of doing that, I think it puts back, retards, and possibly lessens the great prosperity we hope to see result, to complicate this question with the further disturbance and further discussion of the question of currency. I do not care whether it be in the form of discussing the silver standard alone or the gold standard, or silver and gold, or in the form of discussing another monetary conference, we are here for business, or soon will be, and the business intrusted to us is to give back to the country the conditions of former prosperity, which I hope we shall soon accomplish.

Mr. CLARDY. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, he has just stated that there is an ample supply of gold in the world as a metallic basis for our money——

Mr. KNOX. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CLARDY (continuing). And I would be glad if the gentleman would state now the amount of gold per capita in the world.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I am not to be catechised, for I see what that would lead to. The gentleman, however, is mistaken in my statement.

Mr. CLARDY. I hope the gentleman will state, then, the amount of gold per capita in the United States.

Mr. KNOX. I have stated that there was sufficient gold in the United States to serve as a basis for an abundant, sound, and elastic circulation.

Mr. CLARDY. But the gentleman must remember that gold is the money of the world, as he says himself, and not of the United States alone, and you must have enough gold for the world's supply.

Mr. KNOX. I repeat, that it is easy to see why, if I submitted to a catechism on that question, there would be no end to this discussion.

When interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I was simply concluding my statement, in answer to what has been said by the opponents of this measure, that this is not, in my judgment, the time or place to enter upon the question of the currency or what shall be our standard. We have a different business to perform, and, whatever may be our differences of opinion on that question, it has nothing to do with the pending bill, which I say is a meritorious measure, one that is in the interest of the people of the Territories, and one which ought to be passed by the House.

I ask for a vote.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to submit a motion that a semicolon in section 3 of the bill be changed to a comma. I wish to ask if that has been agreed to?

The SPEAKER. It can only be agreed to by the House. It will be voted on after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. KNOX. I ask a vote.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I hope the gentleman will not object to a vote on the suggestion or amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. KNOX. I did not undertake to object to the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. I have already stated that so far as the committee is concerned we were ready to accept it.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question, with his consent.

Mr. KNOX. I ask the previous question.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a simple question in regard to the amendment already offered?

Mr. KNOX. Very well; what is it? I will yield for a question.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Does the changing of a semicolon to a comma meet the objection to the bill which has precipitated this discussion?

Mr. KNOX. It does; but as a matter of security out of abundant caution there is no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I only desired to call the attention of the country to the slight difference which produced two hours' discussion and demonstrate upon what a slender thread momentous events may depend. The question was, Should a semicolon be a comma.

Mr. KNOX. I ask the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendment striking out the semicolon and inserting a comma in section 3 was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 25, insert:

"Provided, That the principal and interest of the bonds funded under this act shall be payable in lawful money of the United States, except the Arizona bonds above described, heretofore issued."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT of New York), there were—ayes 149, noes 7.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion to recommit this bill with instructions to strike out the sixteenth section. I did not observe it until it was too late to raise the question, before the consideration of the bill was ended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] moves to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions to strike out section 16. The Clerk will report the section proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the provisions and requirements of this act shall apply to and be in full force and effect in all the Territories of the United States; and all outstanding bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness of said Territories, and the counties, school districts, and municipalities within said Territories heretofore authorized by legislative enactments of said Territories, or by Congress, and which said bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness have been sold, donated, or exchanged in good faith, and which are now held by innocent purchasers by purchase, donation, or exchange, shall be funded as in this act provided; and all of said bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness so authorized, issued, sold, donated, or exchanged as aforesaid are hereby confirmed, approved, and validated, and shall be funded as in this act provided.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out the section which has been read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BAILEY) there were—ayes 51, noes 96.

Accordingly the motion to recommit was rejected.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HULL in the chair, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. EVANS. Does the gentleman desire the bill read through at this time?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the bill will be read through by paragraphs later, I will ask that the first reading be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to make any extended statement in relation to this appropriation bill. It carries the usual appropriations, substantially as recommended by the Department, but revised in some particulars on a few items where we thought the increase asked for was more than should be appropriated.

The Post-Office appropriation bill is growing in amount, as members of the House will ascertain—rather more rapidly than I should personally prefer. The estimates for this year are, in round numbers, $97,000,000, and the bill carries an appropriation of $95,000,000 in round numbers, or $1,903,000 less than the estimate. The sum recommended by the committee, however, is $3,040,000 more than the appropriation for the current fiscal year. The question has been asked whether this is an ordinary increase. The estimates have been kept down by the Department for the past three years, to my certain knowledge, to the lowest figure possible under existing law.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Whether there is any means by which, by a change of the law, the gentleman thinks we might economize in this branch of the service. It is an exceedingly expensive branch of the service, to which no one will begrudge a proper appropriation, and yet it strikes me that it is very heavy.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of avenues by which the expense in the Post-Office Department could be very materially reduced. I think one of the greatest abuses existing to-day would be corrected by the passage of the bill H. R. 4566, which is now in the Senate. I believe that would put us on a paying basis and would lead to a comfortable surplus every year.

Mr. BELKNAP. Would that have any effect for the coming fiscal year?

Mr. LOUD. If that bill had become a law, I think we should have been justified in keeping the appropriation down below the amount carried in the bill for the coming year. I think we should have been amply justified in cutting off, in round numbers, between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 this year. Of course, the benefits of the bill to which I have referred will not be fully felt for some time.

Mr. BELKNAP. Not for over a year.

Mr. LOUD. Probably not for four or five years. We could not reap the full benefit from transportation on railroad lines until the reweighings had taken place.

Mr. BELKNAP. That is just the point that I am trying to bring out, because I understand that these weighings last for three years.

Mr. LOUD. Four years.

Mr. BELKNAP. Therefore we should derive no benefit from the passage of the bill during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. LOUD. We should have derived the benefit of the weighing in one-fourth of the country, and we should derive the benefit each year that these weighings occurred. Until we had completed its circuit of the country, I do not suppose that we could have cut down the present force of the Post-Office. I do not suppose that we could have cut off any of the railway mail clerks. I do not suppose it would be possible to cut off any of the letter carriers. Yet, if that bill became law, the present force employed in the Post-Office Department would be amply sufficient to meet the legitimate growth of that Department for the next five or six years.

Mr. McMILLIN. What saving does the gentleman estimate would ultimately grow from that branch when it should have reached four years of weighing?

Mr. LOUD. I have said before, Mr. Chairman, $10,000,000. I suppose that is a conservative estimate. I am satisfied that it would ultimately save us $15,000,000 a year. I am satisfied that the country does not at present even—neither does this House—anticipate the enormity of what I will term an offense. This Government to-day is subsidizing printed matter—I will not say the press, but is subsidizing printed matter to the extent of nearly $50,000,000 a year. This Government loses each year on the transmission and handling of second-class matter nearly $50,000,000 a year. Quite a respectable subsidy, if gentlemen will stop to contemplate—$50,000,000 that has to come from the great mass of the American people to support the Post-Office Department.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the question of railroad transportation has grown to such an enormous proportion that the day is not far distant when this body will be compelled to take some action. Twice or three times since I have been a member of this House an effort has been made to reduce the mail pay, and yet this House from year to year has given the railroad companies an additional subsidy above the amount of the most liberal mail pay now given to railroad companies. Of course this question is misunderstood by the great mass of our people. Of course Postmasters-General have complained to Congress that they had no power to remedy the existing evil in that direction. Postmasters-General have appealed here in report after report, stating to us that the amounts paid to railroad companies were enormous and too large. Yet permit me to say that the power is vested to-day where it properly belongs, in the chief executive officers of the Post-Office Department. That seems to be generally unknown to the great mass of the membership of this House; unknown to Postmasters-General until within a very short period.

Congress very properly fixes the maximum rate which may be paid. Congress is not a competent body to legislate in detail for the payment of those railroad companies in mail pay. Let me illustrate to you why it is not a competent body. There are a great many incidental questions connected with railroad mail pay. Some of the smaller railroad companies of this country extend over a distance of 30 and 40 miles. Under the present maximum they are not paid an exorbitant price, and yet on the great trunk lines, where the concentration of the mails pass over the lines, the amount of money received for the transmission for mail is to a great extent out of proportion to the amount paid for the transmission of anything else in the country. The railroad companies are compelled to pay for mail-messenger service; and the unjust criticism—I say unjust on the part of the great press of the country—in condemning Congress and in condemning the Post-Office Committee for not regulating and reducing, as they say, to 1 cent a pound the payment for the carriage of mails—they are discussing a question of which they know nothing whatever.

I can give you one illustration to show and to convince you why this body should never deal with railroad transportation. While I am willing to condemn, and do say that in some cases the maximum amount paid to-day is exorbitant, yet in others it is insufficient. The matter was strongly called to my attention a year ago on a little road running out 35 miles. They made a proposition to the Post-Office to carry the mails up to the 1st of July, 1898, at the rate of $1,000 a year. It was a new service to be established. The Post-Office Department came back to the railroad company and said, "We will give you $650 a year to take up this mail service." I carefully investigated the matter. That railroad company was compelled to pay for mail-messenger service, and the mail-messenger service, as you understand, is for messengers to carry the mails within a distance of a quarter of a mile from where it is received to where it has to be delivered.

This service of mail messengers in the case of that company, a road over 35 miles, amounted to $450 a year; so that it would leave but $200 for the carriage of the mails. So you may see the power is vested where it properly belongs, in the executive officers of our Government, just the same as the executive officer of any corporation is the party to deal with questions of like character in detail. No board of directors of a corporation could arrange the details of all matters that are connected with its business. They can not do it. It must emanate from the mind of one person. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that the time would come when we would have a Postmaster-General who would take up this question and deal with it, and I believe we have one now who would do it if the time before him were sufficiently long—so I will put the proposition this way: I hope the time may come when we shall have a chief executive officer of the Post-Office Department competent and strong enough to deal with this question in an intelligent manner. I am not what is termed a radical antirailroad or anticorporation man. I believe in doing justice to every interest, whether individual or corporate. I do not desire to inflict injustice upon any company or corporation in this country, but this question of pay for railroad transportation can only be justly settled by an executive officer, and he now has the power to regulate it.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman say whether he thinks that the present scheme of payment is the proper one?

Mr. LOUD. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in good faith, that I do not believe that Congress can wisely go beyond the point of simply fixing a maximum limit, as it has done.

Mr. QUIGG. Neither do I.

Mr. LOUD. And the power to apportion the pay of the railroad companies, that is, to pay so much to this road and so much to another and so much to a third, can only be justly or intelligently lodged where it is now, and I want the responsibility placed upon the Postmaster-General, where it properly belongs.

Mr. QUIGG. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to say that I agree with him that the existing law enables the Postmaster-General to make the reform which the gentleman pleads for, if he will just go ahead and do it. Is not that so? In other words, if I understand the gentleman—and that is what I want to agree with—no new legislation is necessary on this subject of railroad pay to enable the Postmaster-General to make a much cheaper arrangement than that which now exists?

Mr. LOUD. There is nothing in the law to prevent it; and I believe the intent of Congress was to lodge this power in an executive officer, where it should be lodged; but, Mr. Chairman, it is a question whether there is a man strong enough in this country to successfully carry out a reform of this character.

Mr. QUIGG. That is the only question.

Mr. LOUD. If the strongest man in the country was Postmaster-General, and he should attempt to inaugurate these reforms and to pay for the service only what is just and equitable, we would probably see the great press of the country up in arms, pointing out to the people that we had a Postmaster-General who was seeking to disorganize the great and beneficent postal service that we now enjoy. But in that connection let me call attention to one thought. We have upon the statute book a provision of law that the land-grant railroads carrying the mails shall be paid only 80 per cent of the amount paid to other railroads. That may have been in its inception a just provision, although I believe this Government gave those railroad companies flat out the land grants conveyed to them, and we all know that the Government charged for the remaining sections $2.50 an acre, so that it received just as much money as though it had retained and sold the whole of the land at the lower price. But here is the thought that I want to present to this House. I am powerless to remedy any evil that may exist in this matter, but I think Congress should be in possession of the facts.

The total amount paid for the transportation of the mails by railroads in eighteen years is $308,232,193.89. The total amount paid for mail transportation on land-grant railroads and by land-grant portions of roads during the same period is $30,648,572.99. The total amount paid for the transportation of the mails by the nonaided companies for the same period is, in round numbers, $277,000,000. The land-grant railroad companies would have received, had they been paid the usual rates paid to other railroads, $38,355,000. Now, the point I make is this: These railroads have paid back to the Government, under this law, in eighteen years, nearly $9,000,000. They have suffered this deduction year after year to the extent of nearly $9,000,000.

These roads are for the most part not the best paying routes in this country. They are not the lines upon which and over which go the great concentrations of mail matter. Yet, let me say to this House, in perfect candor, that even with that 20 per cent reduction which these land-grant railroad companies now suffer, the transportation of the mails is found to be so profitable that they seek it, and in order to get concentrations of mail they put on exclusive fast mail trains, which run through almost the entire West. Now, if this class of railroad companies in the West are satisfied with 80 per cent of the price that is at present paid to railroad companies in the East, would it not seem reasonable at least that the time has arrived when all railroads should be brought down to that basis? And let me say, in connection with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee, that if the roads other than land-grant roads were paid the same rate now paid to land-grant roads, we would make a net saving of from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 a year in the transportation of our mails.

Mr. KYLE. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Is it not a fact that these land-grant railroads, which receive 20 per cent less compensation than the other roads, get a much less tonnage of mail matter for transportation than those roads receiving the full rate?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; I think I so stated. The best roads, of course—the roads on which there is the greatest concentration of mail matter—are in the East. It is these roads which carry the foreign mails from New York City and distribute it westward. The land-grant roads, as gentlemen are aware, are of course west of Chicago, and when the mail gets to that section of the country, it of course begins to decrease.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless some gentleman desires to ask me some further questions, I will yield the floor, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I did not have the pleasure of hearing his entire remarks.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman does not know how much he lost.

Mr. TERRY. Doubtless I have lost a great deal.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman can, however, read my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to ask whether there has been provided in this bill any machinery by which the Government may get lower rates from the railroad companies for transportation of the mails than it is now getting. Are not the railroad companies now charging the Government generally twice as much for carrying mail matter as is charged by them for carrying freight or express matter?

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman that there is in justice no comparison between the transportation of freight or even express matter, if you please, and the transportation of mail matter. Let us be conservative on this question, but let us be just.

Mr. TERRY. I simply want to find out about the matter.

Mr. LOUD. The press of the country is discussing this question from a radical standpoint, and I have seen an article in one of the leading journals of the country saying that as milk is brought into Jersey City at so much per ton, the writer can not understand why the railroad companies can not bring in mail matter just as cheaply. Why, sir, in the transmission of the mails you can not carry over 5 tons with safety in a car. It is bulky matter. Let me say further that the Government is entitled to space in a car up to 30 feet without paying anything outside of the weight of the mail matter; and in many instances a car is occupied to the extent of 20 or 30 feet without transporting day after day as much as 500 pounds of mail.

Mr. TERRY. Leaving out of consideration the matter of the milk cans, and confining ourselves to other freight transported in packages similar to mail matter, are not the railroads charging nearly twice as much for carrying the mails as they are charging for matter in some respects similar to mail matter?

Mr. LOUD. Possibly that is true. I am sorry the gentleman was not here when I went over that question. Yet he will ascertain by looking at the rates paid that the rates vary—so much for 200 pounds, so much for 500 pounds, so much for 1,000 pounds, so much for 2,000 pounds, so much for 5,000 pounds, and so forth. And permit me to say that we are now paying on these land-grant railroads only $17.25 per ton for 365 miles of mail transportation where the amount is more than 5,000 pounds per day. So that the matter to which the gentleman refers is not so enormous as some people suppose.

Mr. TERRY. Even at the 80 per cent rate which is now paid to the land-grant roads, it would appear from the remarks of the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Mississippi that this business is so profitable that the roads are now getting for this service about twice as much from the Government as they ought to receive.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I think that all the railroads of this country should to-day be put upon the same basis. I believe that the land-grant roads have now paid for their land. But I think that every railroad in this country to-day can well afford to carry the mails at the same rate of compensation made to the land-grant roads.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why not, then, put in this bill an amendment to that effect?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Mississippi asks me why not insert in the bill an amendment to that effect. Sir, it has been stated on this floor that the chairman of the Post-Office Committee never consults the committee about any of its actions; yet there are times, Mr. Chairman, when even the chairman of the Post-Office Committee can not do as he desires. Let me say further to the gentleman from Mississippi that such an amendment as he suggests could only go upon this appropriation bill by the unanimous consent of this body, because it would be a change of existing law. And two or three times, perhaps, since the gentleman from Mississippi has been a member here has he seen this question brought to a vote in the House upon a reduction of 5 per cent, and has seen the proposition defeated. And it is a question—and an eminently practical question, too—whether we can get unanimous consent to put an amendment of that character on the bill. I would like to see some gentleman try it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will try it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman from California allow an interruption?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is the distinguished gentleman from California of the opinion that the railroads of this country are unduly prosperous in the present condition of things? Does he think that they are making too much money?

Mr. LOUD. I do not think so. I will say emphatically, no, in answer to the gentleman from New York, for I desire to do no injustice to any railway company in any part of the country.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the gentleman think we have the power to force the companies to take any terms that we may choose to prescribe?

Mr. LOUD. Well, I will not answer that question. It is unnecessary at this time. I think, if the gentleman will permit me, if the Eastern roads were offered the same amount that is paid to the land-grant railroads, that rather than lose the Government service on the roads they would accept the offer. I do not think we would have to force them. I think if you call it force at all it would be a kind of force with their consent.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. You think, then, that, being a quasi public corporation, we can force any terms upon them that we may see proper to offer?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We might offer them terms that they will be glad to take.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What answer has the gentleman from California to make to that suggestion?

Mr. LOUD. That is entirely foreign to the question pending.

I do not see, as I have said before, that it is necessary to answer now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from California state the amount the bill carries for the mail service on railroads?

Mr. LOUD. Twenty-nine million dollars in round numbers. The amount asked for was $30,200,000, which we reduced, as it has been the custom of Congress heretofore. When we first took up the bill we found a deficiency of $2,000,000. We have it now within $1,200,000 of the estimates.

Mr. DOCKERY. I only wish to suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] that perhaps the lack of prosperity to be found in railway circles does not arise altogether from the insufficient compensation offered by the United States Government for carrying its mails.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is entirely possible.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is probably true; and therefore it is hardly necessary for the gentleman from New York to exercise himself unduly on this phase of the railroad question.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, if there is no further question with reference to the bill, I will reserve the balance of the time. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] desires to be heard on some points in connection with this bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I regret to state that there are certain provisions in the bill that I can not indorse. I refer more particularly to that provision of the bill which provides for a continuation of the subsidy which has been granted year after year to the lines of railroad from New York City, originally to Tampa, Fla., and afterwards changed to New Orleans.

I am satisfied that a large proportion of the membership of the House does not understand the conditions under which that subsidy is granted. I am satisfied that many members of this body are of the opinion that this subsidy is the total amount that is given to these railroads for the transportation of the mails on these particular roads, and that gentlemen do not understand fully that it is actually an addition to the regular transportation rate paid to these companies, the same as to the other railroads, for the carriage of this mail by weight and for the rental of the postal cars in which the service is transacted.

On page 35 of the report of the Postmaster-General for this year, referring to this subject of special facilities on railroads—and I want to state that there is only one special-facility line in the United States, only one that receives any subsidy at the present time—he says:

> There has been a difference of opinion as to the necessity for making this appropriation; but inasmuch as Congress has seen proper to follow the action of former Congresses, the Department, while not recommending the appropriation, has thought it advisable to apply the funds for the purpose indicated.

Mr. PEARSON. I do not wish to seem impertinent, but does not the gentleman from Ohio recognize the fact that the appropriation, or its expenditure, depends solely upon the discretion of the Postmaster-General? It is in the bill in that form.

Mr. BROMWELL. I understand that. But, as the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, said a while ago, the strongest man in the United States as Postmaster-General would probably not resist the pressure brought to bear upon him to continue the expenditure of the money as long as Congress sees fit to provide it. It is left nominally as discretionary with the Postmaster-General; but when year after year Congress puts into the appropriation bill this sum of $196,000, to be given as a free gift over and above the amount that is paid to the other railroads for the work performed, and the Postmaster-General may spend the money if he desires or thinks proper, the strongest man in the position of Postmaster-General would probably yield to the pressure brought to bear upon him and expend the money, as they have been doing for the past fifteen or twenty years, for this service.

Now, the place to stop the abuse is in this House by cutting off this appropriation, so that the option shall not be left to the Postmaster-General and this pressure be brought to bear upon him, stronger than he can stand.

Now, let us see what the facts are. This particular subsidy was originally granted for the purpose of expediting the delivery of the mails between New York and the Island of Cuba or other foreign countries. The line that was selected started at Boston, Mass., and went by way of Springfield, through New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and other points along the seaboard, and terminated at Tampa, Fla. The object was to deliver the mail at Tampa, Fla., by rail more quickly than it could be delivered by vessel. Thus, having the mail made up at Tampa and shipped by vessel to Cuba, many hours of time would be saved between New York and other Northern points and that island.

But several years ago sufficient influence was brought to bear upon this House to divert this subsidy from its original purpose, to take it away from a fast-mail service to the Island of Cuba, South America, and other points, and divert it to the benefit of the Gulf States by changing its course from Tampa, Fla., as a terminus to New Orleans, La. The amount appropriated was something over $196,000.

On page 36 of the report of the Postmaster-General for this year is an itemized statement showing how this money has been expended. I propose to read that statement in order that it may appear in the RECORD for the guidance of those who will vote on the amendment striking out this item, which I shall offer to-morrow to this bill. It is as follows:

* Total compensation to Southern Railway, $532,047.63.

Average per mile to above lines, nearly $1,035 per year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I find that some points——

Mr. CRISP. I just want to ask the gentleman if he did not advocate last year a subsidy to facilitate fast mails to Cincinnati?

Mr. BROMWELL. I am coming to that, and will show you that I am entirely consistent.

Mr. SIMPKINS. May I ask the gentleman if this includes any payment to any of the lines from Boston, Mass., to New York?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes; it commences at line 21 on page 6 of the bill.

Mr. SIMPKINS. What amount is paid by the Government under this appropriation for mails from Boston to New York, and by what line of railroad is it now carried?

Mr. BROMWELL. I will say to the gentleman that the lines running from Boston to New York have declined to come in under the subsidy arrangement, and while over $196,000 is appropriated, as a matter of fact $171,000 is used, and no part of it is used between the city of Boston and the city of New York.

Mr. SETTLE. I will inform the gentleman from Massachusetts that the reason, I understand, why the roads from Boston to New York have declined to come into this arrangement and accept any part of this subsidy is that before doing so they must concede to the Post-Office Department the right to fix their schedules so as to connect with other railroads in the system, in order to facilitate the transmission of these mails; and these roads thought that would injure their passenger traffic, and declined to accept this arrangement, because it did give the Government the right to fix their schedules.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now I desire to have my own time.

Mr. SIMPKINS. May I ask the gentleman one further question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if the mail facilities are not as good from Boston to New York at present, by the companies that will not come into this agreement, as they were in past years when they were parties to the agreement?

Mr. BROMWELL. I understand they are fully as good, if not better, and also that they are fully as good. if not better, than any mail facilities offered by these subsidized lines.

Mr. SWANSON. I would like to say to the gentleman——

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman is a member of the committee and will have his own time. I do not care to yield for an argument, but I will answer a question.

Mr. Chairman, I want to impress upon this House the fact that these companies are paid the regular rates for transporting this mail that every railroad in the United States is paid. The weights are fixed by law, and, as the chairman has said, usually the utmost maximum rate is allowed. These railroad companies get that maximum rate for transporting the weight they carry. In addition to that they are allowed compensation for the car space of the postal cars that they furnish, and they are paid full rates for them. In addition to all that they get this one hundred and seventy-one thousand and odd dollars as a free gift from this Government.

Now, just why these particular lines of road should be subsidized to the exclusion of every other road in the country is one of those things that I for one can not understand. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asked me whether I did not last year, in an argument on the appropriation bill, support an amendment looking to subsidize other lines. I will say to the gentleman that I stand to-day just where I did then. I am in favor of facilitating the carrying of mails by all proper methods, and if necessary I am in favor of subsidizing railroads for the purpose of giving special trains for that purpose; but I am not in favor of subsidizing three or four lines of railroad on the pretense of carrying fast mails through one section of the country, and then, when an attempt is made to equalize things by giving the same facilities over another line of country, to be met by gentlemen on the floor, when an amendment is offered, with the statement that this is new legislation which can not come into an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARDNER. I would like to ask the gentleman if, during his service as a member of Congress he has ever introduced a bill or made any other effort to get a provision for the facilities he desires except his attempt to ingraft it on an appropriation bill contrary to present rules?

Mr. BROMWELL. That might be a very good question to put if this were the beginning of a new Congress, made up entirely of new members; but in this House, in the closing days of its closing session, when it is composed of many members who have been here many years longer than I have, I want to say from my short experience of this House that it would be utterly and absolutely futile to undertake to introduce a single bill to accomplish any such purpose, and the gentleman knows it who asks the question. The only way in which these subsidies could be put upon their passage in this House would be by ingrafting them upon appropriation bills.

That is the way this subsidy got on, not as a separate act, but as a rider on an appropriation bill, and once on, it is like the Old Man of the Sea—it hangs on forever and forever. Not only that, but those who are interested in having it hold on are the most alert to see that it has no rivals in its line and that nothing else gets on that would interfere with its staying. Last year it was proposed by an amendment on an appropriation bill to give these special fast-mail facilities to other sections of the country. Gentlemen from Illinois introduced bills looking to provide fast mail trains out of Chicago. Other gentlemen had an amendment providing for fast mail facilities from Kansas City. I offered an amendment providing for fast-mail facilities from the city of Cincinnati eastward and westward. Every one of those propositions went out on a point of order; properly, I think, so far as the law was concerned; unjustly, so far as the merits were concerned.

Now, when it comes to the question of subsidizing an American line of steamships to carry American mail, and American passengers and American freight to and from foreign countries, I believe in being as liberal as this Government can afford to be. When it comes to subsidizing lines of railroad in this country to obtain the facilities that are necessary to our business interests, I believe in being as liberal to them as we can be in justice to other interests. But this is not a question of the general policy of Government subsidies. This is a question whether we shall grant a special favor, a particular subsidy, to this one series or set of connecting railroads for a service that is no better rendered than the service on other roads running through sections just as important as that through which these roads run. I will insert in my printed remarks the table which I have read; and I give notice that when the reading of the bill has progressed to line 21 on page 6 I shall move to strike out all of that paragraph relating to special facilities. I also give notice that I shall move to strike out the paragraph on page 8 beginning with line 12 and ending with line 16, unless the Chair shall rule that it goes out on a point of order, which I shall raise when the proper time comes.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state clearly, so that the House may understand it exactly, the position which the gentleman [Mr. BROMWELL] occupies and the reasons that animate him in opposing this provision. I take the gentleman's own remarks, from which it seems to be clear and conclusive that this appropriation is just, fair, and reasonable. The gentleman has shown that he is not opposed to this extra compensation in general. He has told you that last year he had offered an amendment to facilitate the fast mail from Cincinnati (to the South, I think he said), but that it went out on a point of order. I think at that time the gentleman favored this provision, provided he could get his amendment upon the bill. Now, I am going to show by the very statistics which the gentleman himself has read that this provision of the bill is just and fair. He has endeavored to leave an impression upon the House that this is paying for services that are not rendered. What is the provision? It is this:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Boston, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,014.22.

Then comes this proviso, to which I call attention:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Now, let us see whether this is necessary. Let us see whether the Government is getting proper returns for the expenditure of this money. Remember that this line extends from Boston to New York, from New York to Washington, from Washington to Atlanta, and from Atlanta to New Orleans. The gentleman's objection to this provision is simply that these railroads are already paid so much per pound for carrying the mails. That is true, and the returns of the Department and the statistics show that more mail matter goes over these lines than over any other lines in the United States. In other words, there is more mail matter passing from Boston to New York, from New York to Washington, from Washington to Atlanta, and from Atlanta to New Orleans than passes over any other line of railroad in the country, and therefore it follows that that is the most important trunk line of railroad in the United States. The statistics which the gentleman himself presents prove that fact. It is a vast pipe from which the mail lines of all the other States are fed like the main pipe of a water system.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROMWELL. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman whether, if this is such a great trunk line, the New York Central and the lines running in connection with it from New York to Chicago should not, on the same argument, be subsidized?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know the conditions there, but I show you the conditions which make it necessary and which have for seventeen years past made it necessary on this main line, and every Postmaster-General has used this discretion—for it is only discretion that we give the Postmaster-General by this provision. I prove it by the very objections which the gentleman urges. He says we do not appropriate money for the service from Boston to New York. Why? Because, as the Postmaster-General says, the railroad from Boston to New York would not make proper arrangement with the Department so as to facilitate the transportation of the mails at the expense of the passenger traffic; and as the Postmaster-General could not secure any additional facilities, any additional services from Boston to New York, he did not use the $24,000 which the law allowed him to use if such facilities could be obtained.

But when we reach New York, what are the conditions with which we are confronted? In order to make proper connections here in Washington, it is necessary that the train shall leave New York at 4 o'clock in the morning. The Department has always had difficulty in securing a train which would leave New York at that hour and make the Southern connection here at Washington. When no arrangements were made for that train leaving New York at 4 o'clock in the morning, all the mail from Boston and other Northern points and from the different parts of New York State accumulated in New York City and waited there quite a while before it could be started Southward.

The Atlantic Coast Line undertook to perform this extra service for years. Their train left New York at 4 o'clock in the morning, connected here at Washington, and the mail went on to the South. But that line found that it was losing more on its passenger traffic than it was making by the extra compensation it received from the Government. A gentleman on the other side has alluded to the fact that this mail service was formerly done over the Atlantic Coast Line. Why? Because that line agreed with the Government to start a fast train from New York City at 4 o'clock in the morning, loaded with nothing but mail matter. That train, arriving here at Washington, made connection with the Southern line, carrying the mail to Texas, Tampa, Mexico, and Cuba. But that line found its bargain with the Government unprofitable. It lost more on its passenger traffic by having its train leave at 4 o'clock in the morning than it could make by doing this extra service for the Government. So that line refused to renew its agreement with the Post-Office Department. No member of this House, if he were in New York City, would be willing to get up early in the morning and go across the ferry to take a 4 o'clock train at Jersey City. A train which leaves at 11 o'clock in the morning can secure the patronage of passengers, but not one leaving so early as 4 o'clock in the morning. So the Atlantic Coast Line changed its train from 4 o'clock in the morning to 11 o'clock in the morning and refused to take this compensation. So the appropriation was not used.

Then there followed a complete derangement of all the mail connections of the Southern people with New York, with Boston, and the entire North. Chambers of commerce in the different cities met and requested that the mail connections which had been enjoyed be restored. So the Southern Railroad agreed to put on a train which would restore the mail facilities from the North as they had existed. Having a train starting from New York at 11 o'clock in the morning with Southern connections, they agreed with the Post-Office Department that if this compensation were given them they would start a train from New York at 4 o'clock in the morning and make with it all Southern connections. The Southern Railroad agreed to make the arrangement, which the Atlantic Coast Line had refused to make because it was unprofitable. The Southern people had been disturbed in all their mail connections with the North. The Richmond and Danville road, or the Southern system, agreed to do this service only when it became evident that the withdrawal of the service would operate as a complete derangement of mail matters in the South. Under this arrangement the train which formerly left New York at 11 o'clock in the morning leaves at 4 o'clock in the morning; it leaves frequently without passengers and carries nothing but mail matter. This railroad company says to the Department, "If we surrender our train practically to the use of the Post-Office Department, if we give you the privilege of fixing our schedule, of determining at what points we shall stop and when we shall leave—between New York and New Orleans—we can not surrender in this way our passenger train without fair compensation."

Let me say here, in addition, that if this company should at any time fail to make connection at Washington or Atlanta or New Orleans, then it does not receive a cent for that trip. In order to entitle it to compensation, it is compelled to make a complete connection between New York and New Orleans.

This railroad renders this service for the small sum of about $170,000. It runs a fast mail from New York to New Orleans. It permits the Government to control its schedule. It agrees to start its train from New York at 4 o'clock in the morning without passengers, instead of starting a train at 11 o'clock. If it should start at 11 a. m., at that hour it would miss the connection at Washington; for, mark you, unless the train leaves New York at 4 o'clock in the morning it makes no connection at Washington. Why? The Southern Railroad formerly had its train leave Washington at 8 o'clock, carrying passengers from this city to Lynchburg and various points in the South. To render the service required by this bill, it was obliged to put on an additional train. It still continues the 8 o'clock train. In order to make the connection with the New York train, it is obliged to put on another train, leaving at 11 o'clock, in order to carry this vast reservoir of mail to which the gentleman from Ohio has just alluded.

Mr. BROMWELL. The mails are made up in New York before midnight, are they not?

Mr. SWANSON. I presume they are—some of them. The mail collected in New York City might be. But there are trains coming from Boston, as appears by the schedule—trains coming from northern New York and other points. These mails come in at different hours.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I finish my question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. The regular New York mail is made up, we will say, at midnight. Now, the gentleman says that the Southern train, taking that mail from Washington south, leaves here at 11 o'clock in the morning. In other words, the New York mail, made up at midnight, does not leave the city of Washington until noon the next day. Is that the gentleman's idea of "special mail facilities" or of fast-mail service?

Mr. SWANSON. No. But in New York the papers and mail that come into that city from 1 to 2 or 3 o'clock would have to stay in New York until 11 o'clock the next day before being started on the Southern route if it were not for the special facilities afforded by this particular mail train, and in order to accommodate the Department the railroads have allowed this train to be run by the Department as a mail train rather than a passenger train. They receive little revenue on account of the passenger service on that part of the line.

I submit to any man here who has any information or acquaintance with railroad business; I submit this proposition to any member here, and ask if he would consent to give an entire line—an entire train from New York to New Orleans—to be controlled and run by the Post-Office Department itself, fixing its stopping places and the time of leaving, without receiving an appropriate compensation for yielding such a service? I take it for granted that there is not a man here who would agree to that.

This railroad could get about as much money without the appropriation as they get with it. Why? I will take the suggestions made by the gentleman from Ohio himself. He says that they pay $1,000,000 a year from New York to New Orleans for the purpose of carrying the mails. That amount is paid to the railroad companies by weight. Now, this company could get just as much for carrying its portion of the mail by weight as it gets now, and it would make more on its passenger service than the amount here granted. If you had letters written in New York on Monday, and this road had to carry it out on Wednesday, they would get just as much for carrying it on Wednesday as they would if they carried it on Monday morning immediately after it was written. This provision simply pays a small extra compensation, if the Postmaster-General thinks advisable, to hurry up and deliver earlier these letters.

Upon the other lines of road alluded to by the gentleman, they fix their schedule for the purpose of suiting the convenience of passengers and for the accommodation of that train and not to facilitate mail. But they can not apply that rule in the running of this particular mail train. In this matter the Department issues its orders as to the time of departure. It says, "In view of the importance of conducting this mail service from New York to New Orleans without delay, we do not propose to allow you to fix your own schedule to suit your passenger traffic, but you must give it up for the purpose of facilitating the mail service." For this small extra compensation this privilege is granted.

Take, for instance, the fast mail train now running from Washington to Danville. They have but two places, I think it is, from Danville to Washington—that is, at Charlottesville and at Lynchburg—where they can stop. They can not take up passengers at any other point anywhere between these stations. They are anxious to do it if permitted, but the Department says, "No; if you do not run this train for the purpose of facilitating the mail and not to accommodate passengers, we will not give this extra compensation to you; we will withhold it from you;" and so they require of the road a schedule in which they can take no passengers at all between Washington and Danville except at these two places. And, Mr. Chairman, it is the same for the entire train on its route from New York to New Orleans. They are compelled to put this entire system at the disposal of the Government and make all of the schedules, their times of departure, and where they shall stop, to suit the Government requirements, and all for the small sum of $171,000 a year.

Now, is that too much? I will take the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio himself to prove that it is not. Why, he has just stated that the Atlantic Coast Line had the contract at one time, and it decided that it lost more than it made from the contract and gave it up. The entire mail matter was then transferred to this other line. I could not get a newspaper the day it was published in New York until after this facility was accorded. When the Southern Railroad took up the contract and complied with the regulations of the Department as to these special facilities, then the New York mail to all my section of the country came the same day that it was mailed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question to be determined is this: Is the amount of mail carried on this road and facilitated sufficient to pay for the small sum of money that is given to the company for running this train? I say that it is. I say that the service more than pays for itself. Here is a road that supplies mail to a vast section of this country. There are some routes in the West to which we give a thousand dollars to furnish mail to a hundred or one hundred and fifty people. Yet here are fifteen or twenty States, all of them vitally interested in special mail facilities, and depending on this small appropriation for continuing this service which has proved so useful to them. The Southern and the Pennsylvania railroads will go back, if the appropriation is not given, to their fixed schedules, leaving New York at 11 o'clock in the morning, and not at 4 o'clock, as they do now, and will take up passengers, and will make more by starting at that hour than by leaving at 4 o'clock in the morning, at such an untimely hour, when the passengers will not take the train. I have been told by people who travel on that train occasionally that frequently between New York and Philadelphia and Washington there is not a single passenger carried. It is simply and absolutely a mail train.

But what other advantages do we get from this appropriation? Connections are made at Tampa, Fla., with the steamer that carries the mail to Cuba. Connections are made at New Orleans with the Texas mails. The first time that has been done is within the last two years, since this contract was given. This train connects with the train for Houston, and going on down to Mexico, thus making connection from New York to Mexico and Cuba.

Mark another thing in this bill to which no objection is raised. This bill carries from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 to facilitate the carrying of mails to foreign countries. You pay steamers so much per pound, just as you pay railroads; but then, in addition to that, these steamers that go out—one of them, I believe, from San Francisco, where the chairman of this committee [Mr. LOUD] lives—I think some of them get nearly a million dollars.

Mr. LOUD. What is that?

Mr. SWANSON. Steamers carrying foreign mails, by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LOUD. No; I do not think they get anywhere near as much as that. The whole foreign service only costs about $1,500,000.

Mr. SWANSON. A million and a half.

Mr. PEARSON. I see on page 7 of the bill an item of additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamers sailing from San Francisco to New Zealand and New South Wales by way of Honolulu, and all mails made up in the United States destined for the Hawaiian Islands, the Australian colonies, New Caledonia, and the islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. SWANSON. Why, these steamship people get paid by the pound, just as the railroads do, and then for additional facilities they get extra compensation, and $1,800,000 is given for such purposes.

Now, everybody concedes that 95 per cent yearly of our business is interstate business. That is, our traffic among ourselves is far in excess of all our foreign trade, commerce, and business. The trade from New York to New Orleans is the most important, the most immense, the most far-reaching of any trade which exists in this entire country. Yet when we seek to facilitate that which is more, I am sure, than all that is carried by these foreign steamers, and for which they receive $1,800,000, the gentleman says that a little appropriation of $170,000 to facilitate the carrying of the mails through fifteen States is a useless and extravagant expenditure.

This item has been in this bill for seventeen years. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] is mistaken in supposing that he is the first person to discover these facts about the amount of compensation, and perhaps to enlighten the House on this question. Why, for seventeen years before he was a member of the House this question has been considered, has been presented to the House, has been argued, and the House has acted upon it, and has left it discretionary to five Postmasters-General, I believe, and every one of them has used it, as a necessary and useful expenditure of public money from which a public benefit was received.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Virginia why he urges leaving in the bill the wording—

On trunk lines from Boston, Mass., to New York—

when none of the money is expended between Boston and New York?

Mr. SWANSON. I will tell the gentleman why.

Mr. SIMPKINS. And I should like to ask him another question.

Mr. SWANSON. All right; one at a time.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Very well.

Mr. SWANSON. I will answer the gentleman's first question. We do that because sometimes the Department has been able to make arrangements with railroads that would give extra facilitation for the carrying of the mails——

Mr. SIMPKINS. Between Boston and New York?

Mr. SWANSON. Between Boston and New York.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman when was the last time that was done?

Mr. SWANSON. Five or six years ago, I think.

Mr. SIMPKINS. It is five or six years since it has been done?

Mr. SWANSON. I think so; and to show that this is not simply a gift of money to the railroads, I will state to the gentleman that the Department would give this money to the railroads between Boston and New York if they could secure extra service for so doing, but they do not now use it because they get no extra service.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, it is a sensible thing to appropriate money which is not used, year after year? The gentleman acknowledges that it has not been used for four years, and now I find in this bill, on page 8, that it is necessary to add extra words, saying that—

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

I want to ask the gentleman if, under cover of that provision, something is not being appropriated, apparently for Massachusetts, which is not so used, but which can be used for some other purpose?

Mr. SWANSON. I will answer the gentleman fairly. It is evidently shown that nothing has been lost by the appropriation, because no money has been drawn. No money has gone into the pockets of anybody who did not have a right to it, so no evil has resulted from the language which the gentleman complains of. I should like to have the gentleman point out where any evil has resulted. Now, this language is kept there for the reason that if matters should so shape themselves as to make it necessary to use that extra pay for the running of trains between Boston and New York, it could be so used.

Mr. BROMWELL. I know the gentleman desires to be perfectly sincere and candid with this House.

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is it not a fact that that particular language is used and continued year after year because the gentleman is afraid that if it is left out, and this section provides for a line starting from New York, it will be subject to a point of order and the whole thing will go out?

Mr. SWANSON. That is one reason. Will the gentleman be equally frank?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. Is not the reason why the gentleman objects to this appropriation to be found in the fact that he can not get another one for another part of the country?

Mr. BROMWELL. That is one reason. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I object to this because I do not believe in favoring one section of the country to the exclusion of the rest of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. Well, then, let us come to that point. Now, the gentleman, as I understand, my good friend from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], objects to this because a rule of this House would not let him get in an appropriation for facilitating the mails from his city to the South, because it would be obnoxious to the rule in that it would be a change of the existing law. Then, I understand you are not fighting it because it is wrong, but because you can not get something of the same kind and character.

Mr. SIMPKINS. That does not apply to me nor to any remarks I have made.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, to my good friend from Massachusetts I will state that at one time it did facilitate the mail from Boston to New York.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Are you accurate in that? Was it not for only one-half of the distance, and that several years ago?

Mr. SWANSON. It was for half, if not the whole; and I know that this appropriation has been kept there to some extent, from what the gentleman may say, "because it might be obnoxious to the rule," and we are not willing to jeopardize the mails of fifteen great States in their commerce and business by making an alteration.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. I do not wish to jeopardize the postal service of this country, but I would like to know who asks in behalf of the people for this service. Has the Postmaster-General at any time ever asked for this appropriation?

Mr. SWANSON. The last two or three Postmasters-General have not asked for it. But it has been left discretionary with the Postmaster-General to say whether it facilitates mail or not. He can refuse to give it if he wishes. He can stop it to-morrow. He can refuse to use it. We leave it to his discretion entirely and to his judgment to say whether this Government gets a quid pro quo or not before he is justified in using it. The best proof that the Postmasters-General favor it and get benefits from it is the fact that they have used it for seventeen years.

I reserve the remainder of my time; and, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have incorporated in my remarks the schedule of these different trains, which will explain to any man who will read it that this railroad does not get a cent of extra compensation for the service it renders beyond what is reasonable and just.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to print certain tables with his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The schedules are as follows:

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
OFFICE OF GENERAL PASSENGER AGENT,
1300 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1897.

SIR: Referring to your request, I beg leave to respectfully invite your attention to the benefits resulting to the public through the establishment of the fast-mail service between New York, Atlanta, and New Orleans, with special reference to that portion from Washington south, and the situation under which the service is rendered.

On January 1, 1893, the Richmond and Danville system, now the Southern Railway Company, maintained a train service that met the requirements of its general business, and afforded a good mail service as an item of such general business. The train service was as follows:

Train No. 9 left Washington at 8.30 a. m., arrived in Atlanta in twenty-three and a half hours, at 8 a. m. the next day, and had no connection whatever south of Montgomery. Train No. 11 left Washington at 11 p. m., and was run at a slow rate of speed, without postal car, to Lynchburg, and with postal car from Lynchburg to Atlanta, arriving at Atlanta at 10 p. m. the following day. Train No. 37, the Southwestern Vestibuled Limited, left New York at 4.30 p. m., Washington at 10.43 p. m., and arrived at Atlanta at 3.55 p. m., Montgomery at 9.20 p. m., and New Orleans 7.25 a. m. This, in brief, was the situation in the early months of 1893.

Congress, desiring to meet the postal needs of the greatest States of the South and dependent regions, made appropriation, effective from July 1, 1893, for a special mail service from New York and Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans and the great country and large population of the States of Texas and Arizona, and beyond. The advantages to be reaped from the closer mail connections between the greatest commercial metropolis of the East and the principal centers of business and population of the South are so obvious to all that comment thereon would be out of place.

The Richmond and Danville system, now the Southern Railway Company, and its connections, appreciating the purpose of Congress, and desiring to contribute as much as possible to the great contemplated postal improvements, heartily cooperated by establishing a special fast mail between New York and New Orleans, beginning May 14, 1893. The fast-mail train, No. 35, left New York 4.30 a. m., Washington 11.01 a. m., arriving in Atlanta at 5.30 a. m. the following day. This train received at New York a Boston connection that left that city at 7.30 p. m., after the arrival of all post-office rail lines from all parts of New England, and left New York with a very large mail for the Southern States. It gathered in the mail from Philadelphia, Baltimore, rail post-office lines arriving at that point, and Washington, and delivered it throughout the South far in advance of all former schedules.

The Richmond and Danville system, now the Southern Railway Company, arranged the schedules of its auxiliary lines, and put an extra train between Charlotte and Columbia, by which mail was delivered at Columbia at 1.35 a. m., Savannah at 4.30 a. m., Jacksonville at 9.30 a. m., being twenty-nine hours from New York, which was the shortest time ever made between these two points. The arrival in Jacksonville was in time for distribution to the whole State of Florida. This was the situation until November, 1894, at which time the Southern Railway Company established an additional train, known as the "New York and Florida Short Line Limited," No. 31, which left New York at 3.29 p. m., Washington 10.05 p. m., Danville, Va., 5 a. m., and Charlotte, N. C., 8.34 a. m., thence branching off, arriving at Columbia, S. C., at 12.14 p. m., Savannah, Ga., 3.20 p. m., Jacksonville, Fla., 7.20 p. m., where connection was made with lines for southern Florida, thus making three daily fast trains between New York and Charlotte, N. C., two going through to New Orleans, one of which making connection at Charlotte with a through train for Florida points, and one solid through train New York to Florida. This was the situation up to the middle of the year 1895.

The schedules were further improved upon on the 1st of February, 1896, at which time the schedule of the New York and Florida Short Line Limited was quickened to a considerable extent, although the same leaving times at New York, 3.20 p. m., and Washington, 10.05 p. m., were observed, the train reaching Charlotte, N. C., at 8.30 a. m., instead of 8.34, as in 1894; Columbia at 11.35 a. m., instead of 12.14 p. m.; Savannah, Ga., 2.36 p. m., instead of 3.20 p. m.; Jacksonville, Fla., 6.30 p. m., instead of 7.30 p. m.; St. Augustine, Fla., 7.45 p. m., instead of 9.20 p. m.

Commencing January 18, 1897, the New York and Florida Short Line Limited was changed to leave New York at 12.10 noon; Philadelphia, 2.36 p. m.; Baltimore, 5 p. m.; Washington, 6.20 p. m., arriving at Charlotte at 5.05 a. m. the following day; Columbia, S. C., 8.17 a. m.; Savannah, Ga., 11.22 a. m.; Jacksonville, Fla., 3.30 p. m., and St. Augustine, Fla., 4.40 p. m., thus reaching Savannah, Ga., and Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Fla., during business hours the following day after leaving New York, a considerable item in the saving of time as compared to all previous schedules.

In this connection it will be noted that the service of the United States fast mail No. 35, and Washington and Southwestern Limited No. 37, between Charlotte, N. C., Jacksonville, Tampa, and other Florida points, has been and is now maintained, which, with the New York and Florida Limited, give three fast trains, from New York and Washington to the entire State of Florida, as against only two trains in 1896.

United States fast mail, No. 35, leaves New York at the same hour that it did in 1895-96, 4.30 a. m.; Washington, 11.15 a. m., and arrives at Atlanta 5.20 a. m.; Montgomery, Ala., 10.31 a. m., instead of 10.45, as in 1896; Birmingham at 11.45 a. m., instead of 12.20 p. m., as in 1896, and makes through connection for Memphis and Kansas City, arriving at Memphis, Tenn., at 9.40 p. m., instead of 10.20 p. m., as in 1896, and at Kansas City, Mo., at 5.20 p. m. the following afternoon. Here I would call your attention to connection from Memphis to Kansas City having been maintained from the date of its commencement, the early part of 1895, to date, thus giving a permanent service where heretofore the mails had to lay in Birmingham from 1 p. m. until 12.20 at night before departure for points beyond Memphis in the direction of Kansas City. I would also call attention to the fact that since 1895 the service of the United States fast mail between New York and New Orleans has been augmented by the substitution of solid through trains instead of requiring changes of equipment at Montgomery, Ala., and the arrival time at New Orleans has been quickened to 8.10 p. m. the following day after leaving New York and Washington, instead of 8.30 p. m., as heretofore, thus continuing to give the people of New Orleans the opportunity of getting their mail that night, when previously it was not distributed until the following morning. The connection with the Southern Pacific for Houston, Tex., San Antonio, Tex., and Mexico, leaving New Orleans 8.20 p. m., immediately upon the arrival of the United States fast mail, and arriving Houston the following morning at 8.45 and San Antonio 4.25 p. m., has been maintained.

Also, the local stops heretofore made by the United States fast mail, No. 35, between Danville, Va., and Charlotte, N. C., have been eliminated, and this train is now operated as a fast through train between these respective points and a local train substituted to accommodate the passenger traffic, thus reducing time of arrival of mail at Charlotte, N. C., from 10.50 p. m. to 10 p. m., and an additional train has been put in operation between Salisbury, N. C., and Chattanooga, Tenn., through Statesville, N. C., Asheville, N. C., and Knoxville, Tenn., connecting with said United States fast mail train, No. 35, leaving Salisbury at 8.55 p. m., arriving Asheville, N. C., 12.20 the same night, Knoxville, Tenn., at 4.35, and Chattanooga, Tenn., at 8 o'clock the following morning. By the addition of this train, mail leaving New York at 4.30 a. m. and Washington 11.15 a. m. arrives Asheville and other points in western North Carolina—a considerable territory within itself—the same night, and at Knoxville and Chattanooga the following morning in time for early delivery.

At Charlotte, N. C., a connecting train of the United States fast mail leaves at 10.20 p. m., upon the arrival of said train, reaching Columbia, S. C., at 1.37 a. m.; Savannah, Ga., 4.50 a. m.; Jacksonville, Fla., 9 a. m., the day after departure from New York and Washington. Connection is there made with the Florida East Coast Railway system, having a train leaving Jacksonville, Fla., at 9.20 a. m., arriving St. Augustine, 10.20 a. m.; Palatka, Fla., 11.48 a. m.; Ormond, Fla., 12.48 p. m.; Rockledge, Fla., 3.30 p. m.; Palm Beach, Fla., 8.25 p. m.; Miami, Fla., 11.05 p. m., from which latter point a line of steamers is now operated to Nassau and Key West, Fla., thus giving exceptional facilities to the entire east coast of Florida and islands of Nassau and Key West. This train also connects at Yulee, Fla., with train of the Florida Central and Peninsular Railroad, leaving at 8.25 a. m. the morning after departure from New York and Washington, arriving Waldo, Fla., 11.40 a. m.; Ocala, Fla., 1.32 p. m., and Tampa, Fla., 5.30 p. m., where connection is made with the Cuban steamships to Habana. It will thus be seen that this train gives exceptional mail facilities to the entire State of Florida, Key West, Nassau, and Habana, Cuba.

It will not be amiss to draw a comparison between the time made to Florida points in 1893 and now. The mail which left New York at 4.30 a. m. arrived at Jacksonville, Fla., at 11 a. m., and Tampa, Fla., at 8 p. m. It now reaches Jacksonville at 9 a. m., Tampa 5.30 p. m., connecting there with Cuban steamships, and also has direct connection at Jacksonville for the entire east coast of Florida, Nassau, and Key West.

The schedule of the Washington and Southwestern Limited, leaving New York at 4.30 p. m., Washington 10.43 p. m., arriving Charlotte, N. C., 9.25 the following morning, Atlanta, Ga., 3.55 same afternoon, New Orleans, La., and Memphis, Tenn., 7.40 the second morning, has scarcely varied or been changed in any respect. Connection with that train is still maintained with diverging lines at New Orleans and Memphis for Texas, Mexico, Arizona, and with the Sunset Limited at New Orleans for San Francisco and points in California. Connection of this train has also been continued at Charlotte, N. C., for Columbia, S. C., Jacksonville, and all Florida points, leaving Charlotte at 9.35 a. m., arriving Columbia, S. C., 12.50 p. m., Savannah 4.25 p. m., Jacksonville, Fla., 9.12 p. m., Tampa, Fla., 7.30 a. m.

It will be seen that while the leaving time at New York is the same as heretofore, the arrival time in the cities of the South and Southwest has been brought nearer to the departure from New York, the decrease in the time meaning an increase in the speed of these trains.

To be more explicit, and point out specially the advantages of the service in comparison with that given in 1893, I will give you briefly the number of hours the mails have been facilitated:

The New York letter and paper mail, the Boston and New England mail, the central and western New York and Pennsylvania mail which left New York at 4.30 a. m. in 1893 reached Washington after the departure of the train for Atlanta, Montgomery, and New Orleans, and was delayed until 10.43 p. m. before leaving Washington. Under the present fast-mail service the New York mail, together with the mail from all parts of New England, Pennsylvania, and New York of the previous day, is put into Danville, Va., at 6 p. m.; Greensboro, N. C., 7.37 p. m.; Salisbury, N. C., 8.50 p. m.; Charlotte, N. C., 10 p. m.; Atlanta, Ga., 5.20 a. m. the following morning; Montgomery, Ala., 10.35 a. m.; Mobile, Ala., 3.50 p. m.; New Orleans, La., 8.10 p. m.; Memphis, Tenn., 9.40 p. m.; Birmingham, Ala., 11.45 a. m.; Houston, Tex., 8.45 a. m.; Macon, Ga., Albany, Ga., Tifton, Ga., and points between Atlanta, Ga., and Chattanooga, Tenn., before 1 p. m.

Thus, by this increased facility between New York and the South, the mails are expedited about twelve hours to Danville, Va., Greensboro, N. C., Salisbury, N. C., Charlotte, N. C., Atlanta, Ga.; fourteen hours to Montgomery, Ala.; about fifteen hours to New Orleans and Birmingham; twelve hours to Memphis; fourteen hours to Houston, and from twelve to fifteen hours to all points in the Southwest.

It will be seen that in expediting the mails between New York and the inland and far South and Southwest the Southern Railway has materially decreased the time over previous years to points in Florida, to say nothing of making double daily service to points in Texas, and expediting the Mexican mails, and reducing considerably the time of arrival of the double daily service at practically all points in the South east of the Mississippi River.

You are doubtless aware that the schedules of our train No. 37 (the Washington and Southwestern limited) and train No. 35 (the United States fast mail) are controlled almost absolutely by the Post-Office Department, and under our contract with them for handling the special mail the schedules can not be changed without the approval of that Department; and by reference to the schedules of those trains it will be seen that they make very few stops between Washington and Atlanta, or between Charlotte, N. C., and Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla.

In order to facilitate to a greater extent the movement of the United States fast-mail train on its schedule time, the local stops of that train which have heretofore been made between Danville, Va., and Charlotte, N. C., have been obviated by the operation of a local passenger train between those points, as indicated above in this letter. It is, therefore, easily understood that these trains are run to a great extent for the mails, as scarcely any local passenger traffic is handled on the same, and the hours of the trains are to the disadvantage of such business, and the hours of leaving New York to the disadvantage of through passenger traffic desiring to leave on the United States fast mail.

I beg to call your particular attention to the ruling of the Post-Office Department in that our failing to accomplish a connection or trains being delayed they can cut off the special allowance and deduct our pay, and we are not paid for this delayed service. Besides, we are required to hold the Southwestern Limited, as well as the United States fast mail, indefinitely for trains from the north.

The service performed, owing to the limited stops and the very fast time made, is exceedingly costly; and, in addition thereto, other expense has been incurred by the operation of local trains to handle the local passenger traffic, which can not be accommodated on the fast trains; and also by the addition of new connecting trains from Salisbury, N. C., through western North Carolina, to Asheville, N. C., Knoxville, and Chattanooga, Tenn.; and unless some compensative allowance for this is made it will hardly be possible for this company to maintain this exceptional service, which expedites in so large a degree the mails between the North and the South.

The train service northbound is very fast and has proven entirely satisfactory to the Post-Office Department. The United States fast mail northbound, No. 36 (a similar train to No. 35 southbound) is also operated as a solid through train, New Orleans to Washington, taking up the connection of the "Sunset Limited" from California, and completing, with the Southwestern Limited northbound, double daily fast service from the South as well as from the North.

In order to facilitate the movement of the United States fast-mail train, northbound, No. 36, between Charlotte, N. C., and Danville, Va., local service is also operated between these points, northbound, as has heretofore been explained in connection with No. 35, southbound.

Additional train service between Chattanooga, Tenn., and Salisbury, N. C., is also operated, northbound, leaving Chattanooga at 5.55 p. m., connecting with United States fast-mail train, No. 36, northbound, at Salisbury, N. C., the following morning.

It will doubtless be clear to you, and all others who may consider the subject, that it would be impossible to maintain such extraordinary service without substantial recognition on the part of the Government, and I feel satisfied that it is not the desire of this Congress to diminish in any manner the facilities now afforded for the transaction of the business between the North and the South and Southwest.

With sentiments of high respect, I am, very respectfully,

A. B. ANDREWS,
First Vice-President.

FEBRUARY 10, 1897.

SCHEDULE OF TRAIN NO. 35, THE UNITED STATES FAST MAIL, FROM NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE, AND WASHINGTON TO POINTS NAMED BELOW.

Leave New York (P. R. R.) daily	4.30 a. m.
Leave Philadelphia (P. R. R.) daily	7.20 a. m.
Leave Baltimore (P. R. R.) daily	9.37 a. m.
Leave Washington (So. Rwy.) daily	11.15 a. m.
Arrive Manassas, Va. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction point with Manassas branch to Front Royal, Riverton, Strasburg, Woodstock, and Harrisonburg, Va.)	12.19 p. m.
Arrive Calverton, Va. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction for Warrenton, Va.)	12.40 p. m.
Arrive Orange, Va. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction for Potomac, Fredericksburg & Piedmont R. R., and C. & O. Rwy. for Gordonsville and east)	1.44 p. m.
Arrive Charlottesville, Va. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with C. & O. Rwy. east and west)	2.24 p. m.
Arrive Lynchburg, Va. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with C. & O. Rwy. and connection with N. & W. R. R. for Roanoke, Salem, Christiansburg, Wytheville, Bristol, Knoxville, Chattanooga, etc.)	4.05 p. m.
Arrive Danville, Va. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with Atlantic & Danville and Danville & Western railroads)	6.00 p. m.

Arrive Greensboro, N. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Connection for all points in eastern Carolina, including Durham, Raleigh, Goldsboro, and also points on C. F. & Y. V. R. R., east and west, and Northwestern North Carolina R. R. to Winston-Salem, Elkin, and Wilkesboro, N. C.)	7.57 p. m.
Arrive High Point, N. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with High Point, Randleman, Ashboro & Southern R. R. for Ashboro, N. C., which is junction point with Aberdeen & West End R. R.)	8.00 p. m.
Arrive Salisbury, N. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with Western North Carolina Division, making close connection for Asheville and Hot Springs, N. C., Knoxville and Chattanooga, Tenn., and connecting at Chattanooga with diverging lines)	8.50 p. m.
Arrive Charlotte, N. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction lines diverging to Statesville, Mooresville, Columbia, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, and all points in Florida; Aiken and Augusta)	10.00 p. m.
Arrive Gastonia, N. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with C. & L. N. G. R. R.)	10.50 p. m.
Arrive Blacksburg, S. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with Charleston, Cincinnati & Chicago R. R.)	11.32 p. m.
Arrive Spartanburg, S. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Charleston and Western Carolina R. R.)	12.26 a. m.
Arrive Greenville, S. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction for C. & G. division, east and west, and Carolina and western Carolina)	1.20 a. m.
Arrive Seneca, S. C. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction with Blue Ridge R. R.)	2.26 a. m.
Arrive Toccoa, Ga. (So. Rwy.), daily. (Junction for Elberton)	3.15 a. m.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dover, N. H., praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, to whom was referred the petition of the Engineers' Club of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for an amendment to the bill providing for exhaustive surveys of the several passes and their delta, from the upper limits of Cubitts Gap to the Gulf of Mexico, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 6th instant intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 114) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

THE DAILY CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 237) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc., to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask that it be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATERWAYS FROM THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. VILAS on the 6th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed in addition to the usual number 5,000 copies of the message of the President of January 18, 1897, and of the report of the Commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1895, to inquire into deep waterways between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean accompanying the same, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House, and 500 for the use of the Commissioners.

EXPENSES OF INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Select Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies to report a joint resolution and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 201) to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the expenses of the inaugural ceremonies, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice-President of the United States, March 4, 1897, in accordance with the programme adopted by the committee of arrangements appointed under resolution of the Senate of the 10th day of December, 1896, including the pay for extra police for three days, at $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF NORTH CAPITOL STREET.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6713) to extend North Capitol street northward through the property of the Prospect Hill Cemetery, to pay for land to be taken for such purpose, and for other purposes. The bill was passed over the other day upon the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. It is a short bill, and will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PEFFER. I will object just long enough to suggest to the Committee on the District of Columbia that I think it is time, when they are proposing to open North Capitol street, that they apply a part of the proceeds to the street immediately between the Capitol Grounds and the Baltimore and Ohio Railway tracks and the crossing there.

Mr. McMILLAN. We have that matter under consideration.

Mr. PEFFER. I am very glad to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is for the present consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HALE. After that I shall ask for the regular order.

Mr. McMILLAN. This bill was passed over the other day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. HOAR. A bill was read yesterday at this point in the routine business, it was reported, and consent was given for its consideration then. It is the bill (S. 3513) to authorize the appointment of an additional judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] moved an amendment providing for two judges, and that led to some discussion. I am authorized to withdraw that amendment by the Senator from Connecticut, and to withdraw any objection to the bill on his part. I trust the bill may be passed. It does not require to be read again. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up and put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRICE introduced a bill (S. 3684) to pension Catharine C. Goodrich according to the military rank of her husband; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a bill (S. 3685) granting a pension to Jane M. Anderson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3686) granting an increase of pension to Hiram T. Coffman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 202) providing for the participation of the cadets of the Naval and Military academies in the inaugural parade; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 203) declaring the Clayton-Bulwer treaty abrogated; which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the treaty known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty between Great Britain and the United States, which was concluded on the 19th day of April, 1850, is hereby declared to be abrogated.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the resolution may be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SEWELL submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROACH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPRISONMENT OF SYLVESTER SCOVEL.

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas Sylvester Scovel, a native of the State of Ohio, and a citizen of the United States, has been arrested and is now held prisoner by the Spanish military authorities in Cuba upon no specific accusation of crime; and

Whereas the said Scovel is imprisoned in a disturbed part of the Island of Cuba, namely, in Santa Clara Province; and

Whereas it is creditably reported that the said Scovel is in imminent danger of death through disease or by possible violence at the hands of lawless persons, notwithstanding the best efforts that local Spanish authorities may make to prevent such event; and

Whereas it is represented that the Spanish authorities in Cuba, after consenting, now decline to bring said Scovel to Habana, where his rights may be protected by the consul-general of the United States: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to use his good offices with the Spanish Government in said Scovel's behalf, and strongly to represent to the Spanish authorities in Cuba the imperative necessity of removing him from his present perilous place of confinement to Habana, and to insist that he shall have all the rights and privileges secured to American citizens by treaty between Spain and the United States.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 11th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2746) to remove the political disabilities of Col. John Taylor Wood; and

An act (S. 3551) to authorize the entry and patenting of lands containing petroleum and other mineral oils under the placer-mining laws of the United States.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10271) authorizing the funding of indebtedness in the Territories of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. 10288) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PERRINE LAND-GRANT INVESTIGATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which comes over from yesterday. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution (by Mr. PETTIGREW) authorizing the Committee on Public Lands to investigate the issue of patents for the lands embraced in what is known as the Perrine land grant, in the State of Florida.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be inclined to think that the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. While it does not directly involve an expenditure, it certainly does indirectly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by the full committee or by a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, be authorized to investigate the issue of patents for the lands embraced in what is known as the Perrine grant, in the State of Florida, with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that the resolution manifestly carries an appropriation, and that it must go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table, as I wish to submit some remarks with regard to it in the morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

ESTATES OF INSANE PERSONS.

Mr. FAULKNER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8672) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia or any court in said District having general equity jurisdiction to decree a sale of real estate in said District belonging to insane persons for purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes. I am instructed by the committee to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill. It is a bill in accordance with all the laws of the different States on the same subject, and is admirably drawn. It has passed the House, and it is a matter of pressing necessity that this jurisdiction should now be vested in the court of equity in this District.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but if there is any further morning business to be transacted I will yield to it, of course.

RECALL OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to call up a matter which is on the table. It is the bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," which has been returned by the President to the Senate, where it originated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota calls up the bill indicated by him. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith Senate bill No. 3328, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes.'"

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 10, 1897.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider its action agreeing to the House amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 1, 1897.

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," do pass, with the following amendments:

On page 2, line 19, after the word "apply," insert the word "only."

On page 2, line 21, after the word "in," insert the words "North Dakota."

On page 2, line 21, after the words "South Dakota," insert the words "and Nebraska."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the votes by which these amendments were agreed to shall be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. I do not now raise any objection to this matter, but before it is disposed of I suppose the Senator from South Dakota is going frankly to tell the Senate precisely what question is involved in this proceeding. I will give way to allow him to do that first, and then I desire to make a reply.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, that is proper. I will say that I desire the Senate to disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference upon the amendments made by the House. The House inserted the word "only," which seems to repeal the law now on the statute books allowing people who have made homestead entries outside of the reservations especially designated in the bill to commute after fourteen months' residence. I had the bill recalled for the purpose of securing a conference with the House so as to disagree to the insertion of the word "only," which seems to defeat the object of the proposed law.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I regard the question involved in this proceeding as a very important one. In brief, it involves the question of the right of Congress to recall a bill from the President after it once has been passed by Congress and sent to him for his approval or disapproval in order to amend the same in a matter of substance in which no engrossment or enrollment error is involved. That is the question now presented.

I have no objection to this bill. It is to the principle which is herein invoked that I object. I think the question should be examined. In regard to this matter, I will offer the following resolution, which I will read myself, because I wrote it myself:

Resolved, That the pending bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to examine and report whether, under the Constitution, Congress has the power to recall a bill from the President for amendment, after the same shall have duly passed Congress, and been received by the President for his action thereon, and in regard to which bill no engrossment or enrollment error is alleged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York offers the resolution which has been read by himself.

Mr. HILL. The Constitution requires——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the resolution read. I could not hear the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am perfectly willing that the resolution should pass and the bill should go to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of investigating this question.

Mr. ALLISON. Why delay the bill, if that is an important question? We have frequently recalled bills from the President without stating the reason why. It may be that it is a bad precedent, but this particular bill——

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no objection to the bill at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is proper for the Judiciary Committee to make a report upon this subject, or the Committee on Rules, or some other committee of this body; but I do not see why the bill should necessarily be delayed if it is a proper bill to pass.

Mr. HILL. It is executing a prisoner and then looking up the law afterwards. It might prove to be right, of course; but to act upon the bill and then look up the question whether you have a right to recall it is not the way.

As I said, I have no objection to this particular bill. Probably it is a good bill and ought to pass. But I have examined the question a little, and I find that bills have been recalled from the President, and then, in order to evade the Constitution, resolutions have been passed requiring the Committee on Enrolled Bills or the Committee on Engrossed Bills to report it with an error corrected, thereby implying that the error was in the engrossment or enrollment. That farce has been gone through with on several occasions. I concede the right of Congress to recall a bill from the President to correct such an error, for the reason that the bill which Congress passed has not absolutely and accurately been sent to the President. The wrong bill is there.

Mr. HOAR. It is to correct the record.

Mr. HILL. To correct the record, of course. That was done in the First Congress of the United States, or at least during the first four years of President Washington's Administration. A committee of three was appointed to wait upon the President and inform him of the error and ask him to return the bill, which the committee brought back to Congress. That is a different question. It is an inherent right which Congress must possess to correct a bill, so as to make the bill in the hands of the President the precise counterpart of and perfectly accurate with the bill that has been passed. But I do not think we have the power to recall a bill from the President which has once been sent to him, for the purpose of making an amendment. It has not been done in Congress, except when the bill has been recalled to go through the farce of referring it to the Committee on Engrossed Bills, and then that committee pretending—that is the effect of it in plain words—that there was an error in the engrossing or enrolling of it.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to ask the Senator from New York whether the amendment in question involves a matter of substance or is the mere correction of a clerical error?

Mr. HILL. It involves matter of substance. It is not pretended that it does not.

Mr. CAFFERY. I think the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HILL. Every bill——

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it my duty to object to the further consideration of the resolution. If the Senator wants to have it passed, it must pass nem. con. If he does not, I would rather hear him to-morrow.

Mr. HILL. The matter is properly before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is subject to objection. A single objection carries it over.

Mr. HILL. I was simply answering the objection of the Senator from Iowa, that he thought the pending bill ought not to be delayed; that it should be passed and the question looked at afterwards.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the suggestion if the Senator from Louisiana prefers that it should go to the committee.

Mr. HILL. The matter should be acted upon promptly by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am afraid that the proposed action will result in the defeat of the bill. It seems to me the committee will do its duty by investigating this matter and let me have the bill passed. The precedents are clear.

In the matter of the bill for a public building at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, which was exactly similar to this case, the bill was recalled by the Senate; the Senate reconsidered its action in agreeing to the House amendments, disagreed to them, appointed a conference committee; and it will take but a moment to read the conference report. They did there exactly what I want to have done, and it covers every question in this case.

Mr. HILL. Of course I do not object to the Senator from South Dakota discussing the question, but he is discussing it on his side, and I desire to reply to him. That is all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment, to wit: Strike out of the part proposed to be inserted the words "and fifty;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "sum," in line 24, page 1 of the bill, insert the words "when appropriated;" and the House agree to the same.

That bill had gone through exactly the stages followed by the bill now under consideration. It had been sent to the conference committee; the conference committee reduced the amount appropriated from $150,000 to $100,000, and added the words "when appropriated." Then the conference report was agreed to. The bill again went to the President and was signed by him. So that this case is absolutely, in every particular, the same as the one then under consideration. It seems to me that under the circumstances the Senator from New York ought to be willing to have the resolution go to the Committee on the Judiciary and to let the bill be passed.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from New York that it seems to me, under the rules, the objection made by the Senator from Ohio to his resolution is not well taken. The resolution is only in another form a motion to commit the pending bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions, a motion which could be made orally; it need not necessarily be in writing, and it is directly applicable to the pending measure. I suggest that, since everybody has agreed to it pretty nearly, it would be well to send the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, as the Senator from New York moves.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say just one word further. The difficulty with the situation is that if this sort of proceeding is to be sanctioned, when a bill is recalled from the President by a majority vote of the two Houses and comes back, a single objection kills the bill here. If a single Senator objects to the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed, as he has a right to do under the rules, the time having passed, it can not be done, and the bill is dead.

If this proceeding is to be sanctioned under the Constitution, your rules must be amended, because there must be an opportunity when the bill comes back to proceed with it, to act upon it, and no one Senator should be able to defeat a bill. The difficulty is that your rules are not framed for any such proceeding. The rules are framed upon a different idea—that a bill can not be recalled from the President for amendment in matter of substance, but may be recalled simply for the purpose of correcting an error in engrossment. There are plenty of cases to be found where they have gone through that farce of calling it an error. The Senator from South Dakota says he has a case in which they did not call it such a clerical error. The question should be examined. There is no special hurry about this bill. I do not raise the technical objection to the consideration, although I offer my resolution that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and so far as I am concerned, I assure the Senator from South Dakota we will have a prompt report upon this important question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In view of the fact that the motion to reconsider is made at a time when it requires unanimous consent, and in view of the further fact that the Senator from New York insists upon its going to the Committee on the Judiciary, I shall offer no further objection to his resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York.

The resolution was agreed to.

STEWART & CO.

Mr. GEAR. By the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio, who has agreed to give way to me, I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3500) for the relief of Stewart & Co., A. P. H. Stewart, agent.

Mr. SHERMAN. When this bill is disposed of, I shall decline to yield further.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to audit and adjust the claims of Stewart & Co. and A. P. H. Stewart, agent, for internal-revenue taxes collected on Government cotton between January 1, 1865, and January 1, 1866, and which have not been heretofore refunded. The amount, when ascertained, and not heretofore refunded, shall be paid out of the permanent annual appropriation provided for similar claims allowed within the present fiscal year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and fifty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, February 13, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate February 12, 1897.

COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Carroll D. Wright, of Massachusetts, to be Commissioner of Labor, his commission having expired February 10, 1897.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 12, 1897.

COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Carroll D. Wright, of Massachusetts, to be Commissioner of Labor.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSIONER.

Martin A. Knapp, of New York, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Infantry arm.

Lieut. Col. Edward Moale, Third Infantry, to be colonel.

Maj. Francis Edmund Lacey, Seventeenth Infantry, to be lieutenant-colonel.

Capt. Augustus Whittemore Corliss, Eighth Infantry, to be major.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Maj. Robert W. Huntington, to be a lieutenant-colonel in the Marine Corps.

Capt. Charles F. Williams, to be a major in the Marine Corps.

First Lieut. Harry K. White, to be a captain in the Marine Corps.

Second Lieut. Elisha Theall, to be a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps.

POSTMASTERS.

Samuel J. Nicoles, to be postmaster at Walkerton, in the county of St. Joseph and State of Indiana.

William C. Lee, to be postmaster at Wynne Wood, in the Chickasaw Nation and Indian Territory.

William Grier, to be postmaster at New Bloomfield, in the county of Perry and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 12, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRELIMINARY REPORT ON ARTESIAN WATERS OF A PORTION OF THE DAKOTAS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present a report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of an extract from the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey entitled "Preliminary report on artesian waters of a portion of the Dakotas," for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) was read, as follows:

Your Committee on Printing, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 55, to provide for the printing of 2,000 additional copies of an extract from the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey entitled, "Preliminary report on artesian waters of a portion of the Dakotas," for distribution by the Geological Survey, recommend that the same be agreed to.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the work called for under this resolution at $465.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. I understand it is a privileged report. Is it? I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is not a privileged report.

Mr. PERKINS. It is not privileged.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Chair submits the following resolutions to correct error.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill of the House (H. R. 2321) to increase the pension of John J. Cross.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill of the House (H. R. 6803) granting a pension to Ellen Day, stepmother of Albert L. Day.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HULL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the postal service. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see if we can not make some arrangement whereby we can close general debate. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who represent the contending sides here, about how much time they think will be necessary to close this matter?

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to inquire how much time I have left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. LOUD. Has the gentleman from Ohio any suggestion to make?

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to have the entire thirty-five minutes of my hour for use.

Mr. LOUD. What does the gentleman from Virginia say?

Mr. SWANSON. I have thirty-five minutes. The gentleman from Ohio has thirty-five minutes, and we have thirty-five minutes on our side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. SWANSON. It would be perfectly agreeable to me to have thirty-five minutes on each side.

Mr. LOUD. What suggestion has the gentleman to make? Would one hour—thirty minutes on a side—be agreeable to him?

Mr. BROMWELL. I am perfectly willing to assent to that arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be closed in one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. SETTLE. How is it proposed that the time be divided?

Mr. LOUD. Thirty minutes on each side, to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SETTLE. That is agreeable to me.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the order proposed by the gentleman from California to limit debate will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] whether he cares to go on now?

Mr. SWANSON. The last speech made was on this side. I believe the two sides have occupied about equal time. I believe that the right to conclude is with this side.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret that an attack of the prevalent disease, the grippe, has put my voice and throat in such a condition that it will be difficult for me to make myself heard. But I shall do the best I can to present to the House the reasons why I think the amendment which will be offered, striking out the provision for fast-mail facilities, ought to be adopted.

In addition to the remarks which I made yesterday, I have a few salient facts which I wish to present. In the first place, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] attempted to impress upon this House the fact that this Southern Railway and its connections between New York and New Orleans carry a very large proportion of the mails of the United States, and he has given that as a reason why this special subsidy should be granted. He claims that this is a great trunk line; and, if I remember aright, he made the statement that it carries more mail and distributes more matter through the territory it traverses than any other trunk line in the United States. Why, sir, such a statement is utterly absurd. It is not borne out by the facts and the figures. As a matter of fact, the mail which passes over this section will not compare in quantity with that carried on any of the great trunk lines. Upon inquiry at the Post-Office Department this morning, I was informed that there are twenty or twenty-five lines which carry more mail per day than this entire system. To substantiate this, I secured from the Department a statement of the daily weight now being carried by this Southern system and that carried by two or three of the leading trunk lines. On this Southern system between Washington and Lynchburg there is now being carried and paid for an average weight of only 54,376 pounds per day; between Lynchburg and Danville Junction, 45,396 pounds; between Danville Junction and Atlanta, 55,636 pounds. The mail matter dwindles down when you get to West Point to only 27,975 pounds. When it reaches Montgomery, Ala., it is cut down to 26,661 pounds, and when it gets to New Orleans it has been reduced to only a little more than 25,000 pounds. Now, compare those figures with the mail carried daily out of New York by the New York Central road between New York and Buffalo—231,201 pounds per day; in other words, over four times the heaviest amount of mail matter carried on any part of this Southern system.

Take the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York and Philadelphia. The weight of the mail carried over that line is nearly 284,000 pounds, or over five times what is carried on any branch of this Southern system. Between Philadelphia and Pittsburg the amount carried is 183,795 pounds, or over three times as much as is carried on any part of this Southern system. Yet none of these great trunk lines, neither the New York Central, nor the Pennsylvania road running west, nor the Baltimore and Ohio, nor the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern, nor any of the great roads that lead out of Chicago in all directions, get one dollar of sudsidy for carrying these mails. But the gentleman will say that these roads do not furnish fast-mail facilities. I say they furnish not only equally good fast-mail facilities, but better by far than those furnished by this Southern system.

The gentleman from Virginia published in the RECORD this morning, with a great flourish, the schedule of the Southern road, together with a letter from the vice-president or manager or some other officer of that road, showing how these trains are run in order to expedite the mails. I invite the attention of the House to that portion of the RECORD. I call attention to the fact that the so-called "fast mail" train out of New York to the South and West leaves New York at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes in the morning; it gets to Washington at 8 o'clock in the morning, and it does not leave this city until 11.15. The real business mail of New York is made up in the post-office in that city before 10 o'clock at night; yet that mail, made up prior to 10 o'clock at night and sent on here by the regular train—not by this so-called "fast mail" train—has to lie in the city of Washington until 11 o'clock the next day before it starts south. In other words, twelve hours are consumed before starting that mail southward from Washington. We all know that the passenger travel between New York and Washington does not take over five and a half hours; yet this mail is held for twelve hours in order to make connection with the Southern line of railway leaving at 11.15 in the morning.

I also call attention to the fact that this so-called "fast mail" train, if its schedule be followed up, is actually a slower train than the ordinary train over this mail line. In order to catch the New England votes for this measure, in order to get Massachusetts and the Representatives from that vicinity to support it, there is carried every year in the appropriation providing for fast-mail facilities this language:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Boston, Mass., by way of New York, etc.

As a matter of fact, I have looked over the records of the Post-Office Department for the last six or seven years, and there has been at no time any portion of this fund consumed in the delivery of the Boston mails between Boston and New York. There was, for one year, a small allowance made for mail between Springfield, Mass., and New York. That was kept up, however, for only one year.

How, then, does this fast-mail service on this line benefit even the business men of New York? Their mails are made up at the close of the daily business, by 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening, and the mail is sent to the post-office by 7 or 8 o'clock, where it is distributed and ready to go to its destination. It leaves New York City before midnight, and it comes down to Washington on other trains, not on the 4.45 so-called "fast mail" in the morning, and lies here for three hours, to give this fast-mail-facility train the opportunity to take it up and carry it South.

Who are the real beneficiaries of this appropriation? It is not difficult to understand, Mr. Chairman, who the beneficiaries are. This train starts from New York at 4.45 in the morning for the benefit of the New York morning papers. They are the real beneficiaries of this fast-mail service. Have we not done enough for them already, without giving $196,000 annually to distribute their papers throughout the Southern States? Are we not carrying their papers in the mails at thousands and millions of dollars less than the actual outlay—carrying them at rates far below what they ought to pay for their transportation?

But how does this fast-mail service benefit Philadelphia or Baltimore, which are thus furnished with rivals in the newspaper business coming in competition with their own local papers for distribution? Why, then, should the papers of the great city of New York or any other city receive this special favor from the hands of the Government? In the city of Cincinnati we have a morning train that carries the early morning mail and papers. That train leaves Cincinnati for St. Louis at 3.45 a. m. There is another train from Cincinnati out to Toledo about the same hour, and another train from Cincinnati to Columbus about the same time. Do they get a special subsidy for this purpose? Do these roads that take our morning papers and scatter them all over that portion of the country supplied by Cincinnati get any special appropriation? None whatever; not a cent. The railroads carry precisely the same character of mail as this special train going south, and get no extra compensation for it whatever. The roads put on this train for the accommodation of the newspapers and their subscribers, and they supply the early morning mail without getting a dollar for it, except the pay that is given to the railroads regularly for the mere transportation of the mails.

The city of Chicago in the same way sends out trains to the great Northwest, and the West, and the Southeast, and in all directions. Do they get any extra compensation for it? Not a cent.

Then why should this special privilege be granted to this particular system of roads? As I stated on yesterday, the original object of the subsidy was to expedite the delivery of the New York and Northeastern mails to the Island of Cuba. It was intended to send overland the mails to Tampa, Fla., where they should be shipped to Cuba and South America, thus effecting the saving of a few hours' time in their delivery; and for a few years that subsidy was applied for that special purpose. But some three or four years ago, upon the strength of statements made by the Postmaster-General that instead of expediting the mails to Cuba, instead of its being a service in behalf of fast mails, that the subsidy was really retarding this mail between New York and Cuba, the gentleman dropped Tampa as the terminus, and switched the road around to the Southern States and finally landed at New Orleans.

The gentleman from Virginia was asked on yesterday, during the course of the debate, whether the Postmaster-General had recommended the appropriation. With great emphasis the gentleman answered that the strongest recommendation that could be made was that although the subsidy was left optional, that though it was placed entirely within the discretion of the Postmaster-General himself whether or not it should be applied, they had invariably used it. I want to call the attention of the committee, in this connection, to the language which has been used for the last four or five years by the various Postmasters-General and also their Second Assistants in reference to this subject and touching this very subsidy question, and that will show clearly whether or not they are in favor of the recommendation it contains.

In 1891, in the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, on page 345, this language is found:

No recommendation has been made for the customary special-facility allowance for the next fiscal year, because I do not believe there exists occasion for perpetuating the preferential method whereby a limited number of railroads would be paid both ordinary and special transportation and full car compensation, while other railroads, performing precisely the same character of service, can be allowed nothing more than the compensation which we are by statute permitted to pay for ordinary transportation.

The continuance of the special-facility allowance has for some years past been the source of much annoyance to the Department and has hampered the best interests of the mail service, because railroads operating in contiguous territory, and, to some extent, paralleling the roads which receive the extra pay, object to rendering equally good or quicker schedule mail service except they be paid corresponding rates. They ask that all be treated alike. When the special-facility payments were first started it was well understood that they were but temporary, so as to bridge over a period until the natural growth of the mails would yield sufficient compensation to do away with occasion for additional allowances. This was as far back as 1879, since which time the aggregate yearly compensation to the railroads drawing the special-facility allowance for ordinary mail and car transportation, independent of the special service, has more than doubled, so that ordinary compensation, even after the reduction of this year, will be greatly in excess of ordinary and special compensation added together ten years ago; and as most of the special-facility routes will have their compensation readjusted commencing with July 1, 1892, when their pay, it is estimated, will be increased still further at least 20 per cent, this office has not felt satisfied in recommending the continuance, after June 30, 1892, of any portion of the special-facility allowance.

The same thing is found in the report of the Postmaster-General for 1891, on page 59, where he says:

In 1879, when railroad facilities and train service were slow, Congress appropriated $295,000 in extra allowances for such railroad companies as could not afford to make schedules sufficiently numerous or fast. These sums were to be in addition to the payments of ordinary rates for railroad transportation. The quantity of mail matter was then perhaps one-half of what it is now, so that each of the companies, by the natural growth of mail transportation, has, since 1879, doubled its revenue from mail pay. At each weighing, moreover, there is a further increase of pay according to the increase of service. In view of this fact, and because abundant facilities were to be had without granting extra pay, and because of the frequent charge by railroad companies giving similar service without extra pay that the Department was discriminating against them, I have concluded henceforth to remove the embarrassment, so far as lies in my power, by not including in the budget in the next year any estimate for special facilities. This course, if approved, places all the transportation companies on exactly the same basis of pay.

In 1892 the Postmaster-General put it in the same way. He says:

I have not included in the estimates for next year any sum for special railroad facilities. I am stronger than ever in the belief that the continuance of the preferential method of compensating railroads is injurious to the general service and an injustice as well to the roads who do not receive equal pay. There will be less justification than ever before for continuing the special payments next year, because many of the railroads sharing in this year's allowance on July 1, 1892, had their ordinary compensation advanced more than 20 per cent under the quadrennial weighing, and a corresponding advance in ordinary compensation will be given to all the remaining special-facility routes, commencing with July 1, 1893. In point of fact, there is no such thing now as the West India mail, nor is there any such thing as fast mail along the Southern coast, as anyone who travels on these roads well knows—at least what is known in the North and West as fast mail.

I also quote from the reports of the Postmaster-General for other years, as follows:

[Report of Second Assistant Postmaster-General, 1892, page 280.]

In the report of a year ago I stated my reasons for declining to recommend further appropriations for so-called "special facilities," and I feel it a duty both to the Government and to the service to again decline making such a recommendation. I believe the granting to a few and refusing to extend like compensation to the many who are performing as good or better mail schedules is a source of injury to the mail service.

The preferential method should cease, or all who expedite the mails should be granted the same benefit.

The impression that the special-facility compensation allowed the lines extending to Port Tampa, Fla., advances the Cuba mails is incorrect. It practically retards those mails, because it prevents the enforcement by the Department of the twenty-five-hour schedule provided for in the contract for the ocean service between Port Tampa and Habana.

The Richmond and Danville Railroad, operating south and southwest via Atlanta; the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway system, operating south and southwest from Cincinnati; the Norfolk and Western Railroad, in conjunction with the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia lines operating west, south, and southwest from Washington, D. C., and Norfolk, Va., via Bristol and Chattanooga, Tenn., and the Illinois Central Railroad, operating south from Chicago, via Cairo, Ill., have each created an extent of expedited mail schedules within the past year that is much superior to those termed "special-facility" trains via Jacksonville, Fla., to Port Tampa; and some of these railroad systems have asked the Department to tell why it is that they ought not to be given the same consideration that has been accorded the lines via Jacksonville. There is, besides, far less reason for granting the special compensation hereafter than a year ago, as the ordinary compensation to the railway mail carriers which drew the special-facility allowance was on July 1, 1892, because of a reweighing, advanced more than 20 per cent, so that an extension of the special-facility allowance after June 30, 1893, means that it shall supplement an advance to the same lines of more than 20 per cent in the ordinary compensation allowed for the year closing June 30, 1892, and which continues thereafter.

Your letter of February 25, 1892, in reply to the inquiry from the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, House of Representatives, furnishes in detail the views of the Department concerning special facilities, and I have therefore thought it proper to make it a part of my annual report, as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1892.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 18th instant concerning the appropriation for special facilities, I have thought it worth while to invite your attention first of all to that portion of my last annual report appearing on page 69, headed "No railroad bonus needed."

In 1879, when railroad facilities were few and train service slow, Congress appropriated $295,000 in extra allowances for such railroad companies as could not afford to make schedules sufficiently numerous or fast. These sums were to be in addition to the payments of ordinary rates for railroad transportation. The quantity of mail matter was then perhaps one-half of what it is now, so that each of the companies by the natural growth of mail transportation has, since 1879, doubled its revenue from mail pay. At each weighing, moreover, there is a further increase of pay according to the increase of service. In view of this fact, and because abundant facilities were to be had without granting extra pay, and because of the frequent charge by railroad companies giving similar service without extra pay that the Department was discriminating against them, I have concluded henceforth to remove the embarrassments, so far as lies in my power, by not including in the budget for the next year any estimate for special facilities. This course, if approved, places all the transportation companies on exactly the same basis of pay. In the same connection it is proper to submit the following table and accompanying explanation taken from the last report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, as I believe it will, in comprehensive form, convey to you the information desired in relation to the manner in which the appropriation was extended in 1891. The expenditures of the amount estimated as necessary for the current fiscal year will, it is expected, be made pro rata to the same railroads to which the allowances were made in 1891.

[Here follows the table of the roads and the subsidy allowed to each, aggregating $295,421.79.]

No recommendation has been made for the customary special-facility allowance for the next fiscal year, because I do not believe there exists occasion for perpetuating the preferential method whereby a limited number of railroads would be paid both special and ordinary transportation and full car compensation, while other railroads, performing precisely the same character of service, can be allowed nothing more than the compensation which we are by statute permitted to pay for ordinary transportation. The continuance of the special-facility allowance has for some years past been the source of much annoyance to the Department, and has hampered the best interests of the mail service, because railroads operating in contiguous territory, and to some extent paralleling the roads which receive the extra pay, object to rendering equally good or quicker schedule mail service except they be paid corresponding rates. They ask that all be treated alike. When the special-facility payments were first started it was well understood that they were but temporary, so as to bridge over a period until the natural growth of the mails would yield sufficient compensation to do away with occasion for additional allowances. This was as far back as 1879, since which time the aggregate yearly compensation to the railroads drawing the special-facility allowances for ordinary mail and car transportation, independent of the special service, has more than doubled, so that ordinary compensation, even after the reduction of this year, will be greatly in excess of ordinary and special compensation, added together, ten years ago; and, as most of the special-facility routes will have their compensation readjusted commencing with July 1, 1892, when their pay, it is estimated, will be increased still further at least 20 per cent, this office has not felt satisfied in recommending the continuance, after June 30, 1892, of any portion of the present special-facility allowance.

The appropriations for special-facility service appear to have been started in 1879, and each year the expenditures have been as follows:

1879	$23,887.43	1887	$285,372.81
1880	49,313.64	1888	294,568.86
1881	125,984.50	1889	293,042.87
1882	202,478.30	1890	293,744.26
1883	185,123.24	1891	291,565.73
1884	184,821.24	1892 (estimated)	196,614.22
1885	250,647.72
1886	251,540.84	Total	2,928,695.66

The practice of compensating a few railroads upon a higher basis than others rendering the same or more satisfactory service has been the source of much annoyance, which year after year becomes more perplexing to the Department and hurtful to the general service, because it acts as a check to the extension of the fast-mail system in sections where it would work great benefits.

From the report of Postmaster-General Dickinson for the year 1888 I quote as follows, bearing upon the subject of special compensation to railroads:

"I do not venture an opinion as to whether or not the rate of compensation allowed by law is sufficiently liberal to secure for the Government adequate and the best service. It is certain, however, that the dissatisfaction caused by extra compensation to some and not to others has prevented, in some instances, cordial cooperation with the Department to secure much-needed improvement."

Postmaster-General Dickinson outlined in the above his strong belief that the appropriation for special facilities ought to be made sufficiently large to be applied all over the country, or that it should be cut off altogether; and had he continued in office it is reasonable to believe he would have ceased to make recommendation for any allowance of the kind after the quadrennial readjustment in 1889.

To your inquiry for the history of the special-facility appropriation I would reply:

The Department records do not explain its origin; but it is well understood that in connection with the establishment of a continuous service between New York and Cuba the railroads were asked to fix a continuous-service schedule. The permanency they were reluctant to guarantee until they had ascertained the extent to which the schedule could be used for general traffic. There is no doubt but that it was well understood by all interested, both in and outside of the Department, that the occasion for the special allowances was not likely to exist for more than a year or two, and that its termination would be satisfactory to the railroads as soon as the increase of the ordinary compensation made it apparent to the Department that the exceptional payments were no longer justified. The only reason I can give for its continuance so long is that each year the railroads have urged its retention for a little while longer, and it may be that intimation had been given that perhaps its discontinuance would be followed by the adoption of arbitrary train schedules that would disarrange the mail service.

In order that you may appreciate the extent to which the ordinary compensation of the railroads interested in the transportation of the West India mails has grown, I call your attention to the following table showing their payments by adjustment periods:

1879. $226,234.99 per annum.
1880. $270,233.54 per annum (increase $43,998.55, 20 per cent).
1884. $349,881.50 per annum (increase $79,647.96, 29 per cent).
1888. $476,385.36 per annum (increase $126,503.86, 36 per cent).
1892. (Estimated) $595,096 per annum (increase $118,710.64, 25 per cent).

FOR ORDINARY COMPENSATION ALONE.

The increase in 1892 over 1880 will exceed 117 per cent.

The increase of $118,710.64 in 1892 over 1888 is likely to be exceeded; but should it be no more, it carries with it an increase for the adjusted period of $475,842.56.

In addition, the allowance for special facilities to the same railroads in 1891 was $237,061.47.

It is in place for me to add at this point that the schedule to which the special-facility allowance now applies really possesses no marked advantages at this time for the advancement in either direction of the West India commercial mail, while it is believed it operates to the disadvantage of the commercial mails between the North and South, as will be explained further along.

More than 90 per cent of the business mail with Cuba is associated with New York; and, as between New York and Boston, including New England, 99 per cent is with New York. Practice has demonstrated that going out of New York the bulk of the mail is in readiness for dispatch by 8 p. m. Into New York nothing is accomplished in the way of the delivery of the letter mails arriving between 7 p. m. and 5 a. m. The largest and by far the most important mail for the South via the Coast Line route starts from New York at 9 p. m., and at 4 a. m. it has reached Washington, D. C. At 4.30 a. m. it leaves Washington, D. C., for Richmond and beyond, or as far as the regular schedules will advance it.

The so-called fast mail for which a subsidy is paid and that which is supposed to advance the West India mail leaves Jersey City at 4.45 a. m., and it need carry only such letter mail as comes into the New York post-office after 8 p. m. the night before, which is less than one-third of that ready to be dispatched at 9 p. m. The starting time from Jersey City, you will observe, is fifteen minutes later than the most important mail of the day before from New England, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore for the Coast Line route as far as South Carolina has passed Washington, and the natural conclusion is that the p. m. schedule out of New York has not been carried all the way through Georgia and Florida at a modern rate of speed, because doing so, primarily for mail purposes, would have rendered valueless the subsidized schedule.

In like manner the so-called fast-mail train north bound does not accomplish anything in the way of promoting the delivery of the West India mails at New York, because it reaches New York at 7.50 p. m., and the mail matter can not be made available for business purposes until after 8 a. m. of the day following.

Explaining more fully the statement that it is believed the continuance of the special payments operates to the disadvantage of the commercial mails between the North and the South, I would say: So long as the Department continues payments for schedules that in point of time have practically remained stationary for years, the roads getting the allowances are guarded in so adjusting their through schedules generally as shall prevent the Department from fully utilizing the regular schedules and then abandoning, except for purely local service, the subsidized train. Ten years ago the commercial interests in some sections of the country did not fully appreciate the importance of starting the letter mails out of large cities in the evening and moving in the other direction into trade centers early in the day; and while ten years ago the so-styled fast-mail train may have had its advantages throughout Florida, it has not progressed as have train schedules generally, including a few other schedules upon this particular route, and the advancement of the mails by other routes between the North and South which are receiving ordinary pay alone has been much greater than upon the coast-line route. What I desire to emphasize is that the mail service between the chain of Northern cities, starting in New England and extending via Washington into those portions of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida as are tributary to the coast line, is not such as the natural development of trade and population associated with railroad progress warrants. Because natural conditions have been permitted to prevail in other sections of the South allied to railroads not subsidized, the mail service with Atlanta, Macon, Mobile, New Orleans, and other cities of like importance has advanced.

The principal railroads have learned to value the liberality of the ordinary compensation for mail transportation, and praiseworthy consideration is being given to the adjustment of schedules that shall expedite primarily the most important of commercial mails. The distance between Washington and New Orleans via Atlanta is 1,143 miles. The time for the most important mail train averages 35 miles per hour. Between Cincinnati and Jacksonville via Chattanooga the most important mail service requires less than twenty-nine hours, the distance being close to 850 miles. Between Chicago and New Orleans the fast mail occupies less than twenty-nine hours; the distance is 915 miles. These and many other expedited schedules have been the result of conference with the Department, and the railroads will be content to continue them for the ordinary compensation if they have the assurance of the Department that they are being paid upon as favorable a basis as is allowed other lines. The fast-mail service over the Iron Mountain system between St. Louis via Little Rock and Texarkana, and thence throughout Texas, from the Texarkana standpoint is not what it ought to be; nor is the continuous fast-mail service deflecting at Sedalia, Mo., through Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, the Indian Nation, and Texas via the Missouri, Kansas and Texas system what it should be. Again, the fast-mail service from a Louisville, Ky., standpoint into Kentucky, Georgia, and Alabama is not as complete as the Department aims to have it; but we can not look for hearty cooperation from all the railroads operating North and South so long as they can point to the special payments made to a few roads; and to many of our applications for expedited schedules the reply comes back that upon the promise of the Government that they shall be paid in like manner as the most favored they will cheerfully respond to requests for improved schedules.

Turning again to the mail service throughout the South via the subsidized Coast Line route, it will, I believe, be of interest to know that the subsidized fast mail beyond Washington does not average 32 miles per hour. Of course, over some portions of the route the speed is much faster than the average; but the Department, in dealing with the schedules upon a continuous route, must consider it as one interest, the respective managements comprising the line deciding which portions of the through route shall occupy more than its proportion of the time assigned between termini. That you may know the necessity of this train for other than mail purposes at this time, you should be told that it carries from Washington six coaches and sleepers, besides a baggage and a mail car. En route there occur some changes in the make-up of the train, but ordinarily it goes into Jacksonville with four coaches and sleepers, besides the mail and baggage cars. The section through which this route operates needs a fast-mail service corresponding with that of the Air Line Railroad system and others I have mentioned, and corresponding with those it is our earnest desire to have established. I mean a continuous schedule that shall leave New York, say, at 9 p. m., and at an average speed of 35 miles per hour beyond Washington could certainly reach—

	Subsidized train now arrives at—
Richmond, Va., at 7.50 a m., instead of 8.48 a. m	2.38 p. m.
Wilmington, N. C., at 3.10 p. m., instead of 6 p. m	9.55 p. m.
Charleston, S. C., at 9.20 p. m., instead of 1.20 a. m	5 a. m.
Savannah, Ga., at 12.55 a. m., instead of 5.20 a. m	6.44 a. m.
Jacksonville, Fla., at 6 a. m., instead of 11.35 a. m	12 noon.
Port Tampa, Fla., at 1.16 p. m., instead of 9.40 p. m	9.40 p. m.

This schedule would practically make a large quantity of the Florida mail available one day earlier than it is now by the West India fast-mail train.

Coming north, a continuous schedule as slow as 30 miles per hour, leaving Port Tampa right after the arrival of the West India mails, would enable the through mails to leave Jacksonville at 3.30 a. m., now 8.30 a. m.; Savannah at 9.30 a. m., now 2.10 p. m.; Charleston at 1.30 p. m., now 7.01 p. m.; Wilmington, N. C., at 8 p. m., now 2.10 a. m.; Richmond, Va., at 4 a. m., now 9.34 a. m. Arrive at Washington at 7.40 a. m., now 1.31 p. m.; arrive at New York at 3.20 p. m., now 7.50 p. m.

This schedule would, at New York, advance the through mails one day over present West India fast-mail schedule.

Coming north, 35 miles per hour would of course be better still, as it would advance the mails all along the route and bring them into New York ready for delivery about 10 a. m.

As I have already stated, the indications all tend to the belief, for the fear of jeopardizing the subsidy has acted as a check to continuous regular schedules at hours corresponding with through schedules prevailing elsewhere in the South. It is true, the subsidized service leaving New York at 4.30 a. m. carries out the morning newspapers, the advancement of which the Department would regret to see checked; but, as compared with the importance of the letter mail for the territory south of Richmond, Va., newspaper mail should not be permitted to delay the letters; in fact, there ought to be no occasion for retarding the newspaper, because the regular passenger business by itself calls for this train, and the extent of the mails, the growth of the ordinary mail compensation, and the requirements of the communities and commercial interests upon and contiguous to the Coast Line route have become such that without subsidy the railroad interests should not hesitate to respond to any reasonable schedules the Post-Office Department may request. If this is done, and schedules approximating those mentioned are enforced, and advantage is taken of the saving in distance caused by the construction of the Wilson cut-off, it will be possible within a year to revolutionize much important mail service associated with the route between New York via Washington, and Wilmington, N. C., Charleston, S. C., Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville, Fla., and into Florida, and as well promote the West India mails. This route will truly become then a fast-mail route in the sense that similar unsubsidized service exists elsewhere. It will fulfill all the requirements of the West India mails, and besides practically make available one day earlier than at present the mails of a wide section of Southern country. Until the people experience the changed conditions which will then exist they can not fully realize the great importance that will result from having their letters leave the North at the close of each day's business, and coming north, be delivered to correspondents sufficiently early in the day to be made available for the same day's business.

In this communication I have not deemed it necessary to dwell particularly upon the merits of a continuance of the subsidy to the two routes operating out of New York and that between Baltimore and Hagerstown, Md., principally because they have received but a small part of the special-facility payments. The general grounds, however, upon which the Department deprecates allowances of this kind, as explained in connection with the West India fast-mail route, can be applied with equal force to the remaining items of the last fiscal year's payments.

JOHN WANAMAKER,
Postmaster-General.

[Report of Postmaster-General, page xix, 1893.]

The fast-mail service between the North and South has recently been much enlarged. Following the coast line, its extent and rapidity will (commencing with December) be more complete than heretofore; and by means of the interior lines, it has recently been made possible to inaugurate a double daily fast-mail service connecting the great business centers of the North with New Orleans, by way of Atlanta and Montgomery. The hours of these trains are those most preferred by the Department, and it has thereby been rendered possible to accomplish connections which provide equally well for both letter and daily newspaper mails.

The appropriation for the current fiscal year is $196,614.16.

As illustrating some of the roads which have, without any subsidy whatever, placed fast-mail trains at the service of the Government, I quote the following from the report of the Postmaster-General:

[Report of Postmaster-General, 1894, page 26.]

A number of very notable improvements in the way of expediting the delivery of mail matter have taken place within the past year.

In March last the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad put on a train due to leave Chicago at 3 a. m. for Milwaukee, Wis., Escanaba, Mich., Marquette, Mich., Houghton, Mich., and Ashland, Wis. This train, running as it does in connection with the fast mail from New York and all Eastern points, arriving in Chicago at 12.45 a. m., advances mail practically one day for a large section of Wisconsin and all of northern Michigan. It also places the Chicago morning papers in the hands of subscribers throughout all that section early on the day of issue.

The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad also, on April 11, 1894, put on a fast train from Chicago to Omaha, leaving Chicago at 3 a. m. and advancing mails for all points on the line of that road through Illinois and Iowa. This was supplemented, under date of October 28, by a change of schedule, which practically affords direct through fast-mail service, leaving Chicago at 3 a. m. and running to Deadwood, S. Dak. You can imagine that the benefits to the people along this line of road, in consequence of this expedited service, are very thoroughly appreciated.

On April 29 the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad also put on a fast-mail train, leaving Chicago at 3 a. m., expediting mails for all points along that road and connecting lines through Illinois and Iowa.

While these three are probably the most important improvements in the way of expedited service that have occurred during the past year, it may be well to remark that the usual number of extensions and improvements have been made on smaller lines. These improvements, either in the way of new service, extension of old service, or frequency of service on old lines, aggregate about 8,000 miles of service—a very material advance.

SPECIAL FACILITIES.

In submitting the estimates for the fiscal years of 1893, 1894, and 1895, this office declined to include the item of "special facilities," for reasons heretofore stated.

Appropriations were made, however, for each of those years.
The annual rate of expenditure for this service on June 30, 1894, was $171,238.75, and the sum was expended as shown in the following statement:
[Here follows statement.]
The appropriation for the current year is $193,614.22.
No estimate is submitted for the next fiscal year.

This was the first year in which the subsidy was allowed to the lines now receiving it.

[Report of Postmaster-General, 1895, page 174.]

SPECIAL FACILITIES.

In submitting the estimates for the fiscal years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896, this office declined to include the item of "special facilities," for reasons heretofore stated.
Appropriations were made, however, for each of those years.
The annual rate of expenditure for this service on June 30, 1895, was $171,238.75, and the sum was expended as shown in the following statement:
[Here follows statement.]
The appropriation for the current year is $196,614.22.
No estimate is submitted for the next fiscal year.

So it will be seen by going through the reports of the Postmasters-General and of the Second Assistants, year after year to the present time, with but a single exception, that of the report of the Postmaster-General in 1895, every one of these reports discountenances the further allowance of this subsidy.

There is another point which is alluded to in this report which I have just read to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and that is that every four years there is a new weighing of these mails. With each new weighing there is an increase in the allowance for the ordinary transportation. This increase averages between 20 and 30 per cent. So that if these railroads, with the compensation which they had ten years ago and the subsidy which was then given to them gratuitously, could afford to carry these mails, they can surely now far better afford to carry them on the ordinary compensation. Let me read to you the figures of some of these increases since the last weighing.

On the Southern Railroad between Washington and Lynchburg the present weighing shows 54,376 pounds per day. The last weighing before showed 39,071 pounds per day, or an increase of over 15,000 pounds per day.

Between Lynchburg and Danville Junction the increase was from 30,736 pounds to 45,396 pounds, or an increase of 50 per cent. Between Danville Junction and Atlanta there was an increase from 32,453 pounds to 55,636 pounds, or an increase of 23,000 pounds between the two weighings. From Atlanta to West Point the increase was from 20,000 pounds to 27,975 pounds. Between West Point and Montgomery the increase was from 19,000 pounds to 26,661 pounds. Between Montgomery and New Orleans the increase was from 17,577 pounds to 25,469 pounds.

Now, here was an average of about 30 per cent increase in the weighing, and therefore an increase to that extent in the compensation. I showed to you yesterday that the ordinary compensation paid to these roads was over $1,000,000 a year under their last weighing. An increase of 20 per cent means $200,000 that they will get more than their last weighing, which will more than make up the entire subsidy that they have heretofore been allowed.

Gentlemen on the other side have attempted to make some point because of the fact that, in the consideration of the appropriation bill last year, I recommended and tried to secure an amendment to the bill appropriating for fast-mail facilities out of my city. I stand, as I said yesterday, just where I did then. I believe that if a fund can be placed at the disposal of the Postmaster-General, to be used by him judiciously and with discretion for favoring particular fast mail trains which could not otherwise be run, and if the benefit to be derived from that fast-mail service would be sufficient to warrant the expenditure of that money, I believe that to be a perfectly proper expenditure. I believe, too, that this fast-mail fund could be distributed through the country to do a good deal more good than this special subsidy which has stood upon the statute books for the last twenty years.

I have shown you that the amount of mail which is carried by this Southern road is insignificant compared with that carried by the great trunk lines of the country, which receive no subsidy. I appeal to you whether it is fair that this road, or this system of roads, after being paid the full maximum compensation for the carriage of the mails, after being paid the regular rate for the transportation of the mail cars, should, in addition to that, be given a bonus or gratuity which is given to no other road in the country, when other roads perform equally good, if not better service than this road. It is not that I am opposed to subsidies; it is that I am opposed to special favoritism and the granting of this particular subsidy to the exclusion of other roads performing equally valuable and meritorious service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the remainder of my time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the standing of this question, in more than one aspect, before the committee at the present moment, is more extraordinary than anything of the kind I have noticed during the time I have been a member of this House. The gentleman from Ohio in his closing sentences announces, as he has before, that he is in favor of what he erroneously calls subsidies to expedite the mails. Consistent with that belief, the gentleman himself, and others who are opposing this item in this bill, have from time to time offered amendments and made efforts to get items which they wanted in appropriation bills. The result is that we are here listening to gentlemen making bitter onslaughts upon an item in an appropriation bill who do not object to it, but whose quarrel is with the rules of the House. Favoring general subsidies, as they call them, as they admit, they have attempted to get them by only the single method of ingrafting them on appropriation bills, contrary to the rules, and now have a quarrel with the rules, attacking a bill and an item that has been habitually placed in it.

That is the position of the gentlemen, if I understand them. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] yesterday piled up a mass of figures and printed them in the RECORD this morning. It is a formidable array, but permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, with due respect, that his figures are as meaningless as formidable. Isolated figures taken from one corner, if I may so express it, of a great system of mail transportation and printed in the RECORD mean just as much as if they had been extracted from the report of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, or from any other source, and not connected with the whole system under discussion, so as to give a view of it that would enable members of the House to understand their significance. These figures as to a portion of the system, the whole magnitude of which is not brought into view, the different parts of which are not exposed in the argument to our observation, I repeat, have no significance as placed in the RECORD.

Now, permit me again to say (and it may not be the gentleman's fault) that I am unable to understand him in his presentation of this case. These figures seem to be directed at the Pennsylvania Railroad, without showing what proportion of the mail service of the country it performs. This morning, however, the gentleman continues his travel south, and tells us how insignificant is the southern end of this service as compared with other lines, in which he includes the Pennsylvania Railroad, between New York and Philadelphia. In other words, he attacks one end of the system on one day and on the following day another end, and attempts to belittle it by showing the magnitude of the end which he attacked the day before. It may be my fault that I can not understand that method of comparison.

Now, these gentlemen—or the gentleman from Ohio, and I might say the chairman of the committee, in his remarks yesterday—tell us how much the mails ought to be transported for; wherein we are paying too much; how they are unnecessarily delayed at certain points, and what railroads might do in the way of schedules. In other words, for the purposes of this discussion, they turn railroad experts and tell us all about possible schedules. Why, sir, if any one of them were appointed to-day to take charge of 38 miles of railroad between Washington and Baltimore he would no sooner undertake to schedule the trains over it than he would deliberately commit murder, because he would feel that if he, in his inexperience, in his absolute want of knowledge in scheduling railroad trains, should undertake to make one and run trains by it, would be equivalent to wholesale slaughter. But when it comes to making a schedule for the mails, lo and behold, they know all about it! Moreover, Mr. Chairman, it may not have escaped observation that there are two other ends of their argument which do not seem to agree. When these gentlemen are talking about what the railroads between New York and Philadelphia get, and what the railroads between Philadelphia and Washington get, and what the roads from Washington south get, they say they get entirely too much. Then they throw out as a taunt that the item intended to cover transportation from Boston to New York is never used. That is done to catch the New England votes. Why, sir, it is not used because the amount is not enough to induce the railroads between Boston and New York to come into the arrangement. So, Mr. Chairman, the system is condemned by them because on one end it pays too little, and the other end pays too much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield five or ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON].

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has undertaken to show that this particular provision is not only exceptional and extraordinary, but that it is singular, as tested by the general tenor of this bill. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to certain other items in the bill, which I dare say will command his support. This bill appropriates $80,000 to expedite mail matter—where? To the islands in the Pacific Ocean. Extra compensation for carrying the news to the South Sea savages! I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he thinks that the Republicans and the Democrats of the South, or even the Populists, are entitled to less consideration here than the savages in the South Pacific? In the next place the bill appropriates $40,000 for transferring foreign mail from incoming steamships in New York Bay. Does the gentleman not believe that domestic mail is as important to us as foreign mail may be to him? The bill appropriates for horse-hire allowance $370,000; for car-fare and bicycle allowance, $175,000. It appropriates $50,000 for transportation of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices. Now, every one of those items is intended for the same purpose as this; that is, to expedite or hasten the delivery of mail matter.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say here, not only on behalf of my own people, but in behalf of all other people in that vast stretch of country from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, that every man and woman and child in that stretch of country receives mail earlier by reason of this provision.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How much earlier?

Mr. PEARSON. I will give the gentleman the exact figures.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is what I want to know.

Mr. PEARSON. The statement to which I am about to refer comes from the first vice-president of the Southern Railway, a man thoroughly familiar with the facts, not only as they now are, but as they have been; a man who is of absolutely unquestioned truth and integrity. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the mails are so much earlier at different points as is shown by the paper I hold in my hand. By this increased facility between New York and the South the mails are expedited about twelve hours—I am afraid the gentleman does not want this information as much as he supposed—about twelve hours to Danville, Va., Greensboro, N. C., Salisbury, N. C., Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta, Ga.; fourteen hours to Montgomery, Ala.; about fifteen hours to New Orleans and Birmingham; twelve hours to Memphis; fourteen hours to Houston, and from twelve to fifteen hours to all points in the Southwest.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PEARSON. Wait a moment. Now, I will say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], who is an up-to-date man, that the question is simply whether we ought to get in our mail the news of to-day or the news of yesterday—news that comes in the form of papers from his own section of the country—shall we have that fresh and hot, or shall we get it when it is "stale, flat, and unprofitable?"

I know as a matter of personal experience that at Asheville, where I reside, we get our mail now fourteen hours earlier than we did under the original arrangement. The Government is paying something additional for this service because the railroad is inconvenienced by its performance. But our people of all parties are very much benefited. Now, the gentleman knows that we want intelligence—those of us who support this bill—we want it hot and fresh, and I know he is not inclined to come in here and take from this broad stretch of country such facilities as these.

The gentleman knows something about the internal-revenue laws and about the pension laws. He knows that these people for whom I especially speak pay more money into the Federal service every year than they receive from the Government in any form. We vote here about $140,000,000 for pensions in twenty minutes. We are asking now for what? For the one five-hundredth part of the total amount which this bill carries.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me ask this question: If this provision were stricken out, would you all get your mails from ten to fourteen hours later than you now get them?

Mr. PEARSON. I know of no way of judging the future except by the past. I know that before this fast schedule went into operation we would get the New York papers in our town at 2 o'clock on the day following their publication, whereas now we get them on the night of the day of publication.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How long has the provision for these fast-mail facilities been carried in this bill?

Mr. PEARSON. So far as the present system of railroads is concerned, I think about three years or four.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Since 1893.

Mr. PEARSON. The system in operation before the present was by the Atlantic Coast Line.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And the system has been entirely satisfactory to that portion of the country known as "the South," has it?

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman's question is now becoming too vague.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What I ask is whether the operation of this system has been entirely satisfactory?

Mr. PEARSON. Perfectly so.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And the States that the gentleman has named in reply to my question, or the central portions of them, are now receiving their mail much more promptly by reason of this provision?

Mr. PEARSON. Not only that, but, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] said yesterday, this system is like a pipe line—like the main line that carries water—its benefits reach portions of the country which are not immediately on that line. For instance, I reside on a branch system 145 miles away from Salisbury, but I get my mail from New York on the day of its date.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am entirely satisfied with the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. PEARSON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to certain points stated in the letter of Vice-President Andrews. He says: "We are required to hold the Southwestern limited as well as the United States fast mail indefinitely, for trains from the North." In other words, Mr. Chairman, that railroad company has put this train service at the command of the Postmaster-General, and if I can for a moment reach the left ear of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] successfully in response to what he has heretofore said about the question under discussion, that the trouble was that the Postmaster-General could not exercise his discretion, does he not know that the Postmaster-General does exercise his discretion in the distribution of this fund, and that he has exercised it in the past? The appropriation for last year, for instance, was $196,000. And yet the gentleman does not seem to have observed that the amount expended was but $153,000.

Mr. BROMWELL. One hundred and seventy-one thousand dollars.

Mr. PEARSON. If you will refer to the report of the Postmaster-General, you will find that the amount is $153,000.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have the report before me showing the amount.

Mr. PEARSON. But, however that may be, it shows that there is an exercise of discretion in the Postmaster-General with reference to the expenditure of the funds; and it may be in a short time the Postmaster-General will himself be an Ohio man, and in that case, of course, he will be heroic enough to withstand all importunities on the part of people who would tempt him to act against the public interest.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee longer, and only appeal to my friends from the North on this floor to recognize the fact of this great convenience and advantage to the people of the South, who get but little from the Federal Treasury in proportion to the amounts they pay in.

Mr. PERKINS. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to make an inquiry.

Mr. PEARSON. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to inquire if it is the judgment of the gentleman from North Carolina that Southern people generally, as interested in this appropriation, are in favor of subsidies?

Mr. PEARSON. The question of the gentleman is vague and indefinite, and would be followed by the subjunctive if propounded in Latin. I leave it to the gentleman to form his own conclusion on the subject.

Mr. AITKEN. Is the object in giving this subsidy to get more rapid mail service through this region?

Mr. PEARSON. That is the purpose and the effect of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. AITKEN. I ask if that is the fact? Is the fast mail train to which the gentleman has referred accomplishing this result?

Mr. PEARSON. Nobody can dispute the statement of Vice-President Andrews, to whom I have already referred. There is not a more truthful man in this body, and his statement is worthy of every consideration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will use some portion of his time, as I have but fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have only seven minutes left, and I think the gentleman should use a part of his.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] for five minutes.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to speak on this matter at all. I am opposed to all subsidies; but I will answer the gentleman from New Hampshire by suggesting that if this were a subsidy, I should certainly be opposed to it. But in the first place this is not a subsidy, being only an additional compensation for service performed by a railroad company, a company doing extra work; therefore there is no element of subsidy whatever that enters into it. While that element may enter into the discussion here, it has no bearing upon the question, although the gentleman from Ohio has succeeded in doing admirably here everything to befog the question in the minds of the Committee of the Whole, which, however, he was not successful in accomplishing in the Post-Office Committee.

That committee, after a full consideration of the matter—and I do not know that it would be proper to state by what overwhelming majority it was carried—but the idea in the minds of the committee was fully embodied in the proviso, to which reference has already been made, in the following words:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

In order to promote the rapid distribution of the United States mail—the interest of the postal service—that was the idea that the committee had in framing this proposition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, can we trust our Postmasters-General? I say we can, and we have trusted them, especially the two who have had control of this matter in the past, General Bissell and Mr. Wilson, and intrusted them implicitly, and I have no fear that we will ever have occasion to entertain doubt on that subject. We will possibly, in a short time, have a Postmaster-General put in by a fellow-citizen of the gentleman from Ohio himself, who opposes this proposition, who will be eminently trustworthy to use the appropriation as provided by law in the best interest of the Government, and will not expend the appropriation at all unless it be expended for the more efficient performance of the postal service of the United States.

For that reason I can not see the element of subsidy claimed to be embodied in this proposition, for it is only additional pay for extra services performed by the railroad company, and it is placed in the hands of the head of that Department, in whom we may implicitly trust, without regard to party, that it will be properly administered.

That is all I desire to say upon the subject.

Mr. BROMWELL. I yield now two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SIMPKINS].

Mr. SIMPKINS. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before the committee is a simple business one. It is to give a certain fixed and definite amount of money to railroad companies for the better transmission of mails between the cities of Boston, Mass., and the city of New Orleans. Now, I think that as business men we should see if this money is really needed, and, if expended properly, what the results will be. What, then, are the facts?

It was brought out yesterday in the course of the debate that no part of this money was used in the New England States between Massachusetts and New York, and because of that fact there is a provision on page 8 of the pending bill which provides that money thus appropriated and not expended may be spent by the Postmaster-General at his discretion anywhere indefinitely throughout the country for other purposes in connection with the mails, showing on the face of it that the committee know that the money is not needed and is not to be spent in New England.

Now, what are the facts with regard to the transmission of mails from New York to Washington, that part of the appropriation which is received by the Pennsylvania Railroad? As I understood him, it was the contention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] here yesterday that a fast mail train left New York at 4 o'clock in the morning, which would not leave at that time if it were not for this appropriation. Now, what are the facts? If I am correctly informed, that train is essentially a newspaper train. It connects with the Federal and Colonial Express, which is a passenger train from Boston, leaving there at 7 o'clock at night and reaching Washington at 11 in the morning. It stops at Jersey City. It does not take passengers, but takes the New York morning papers, so that they may be delivered early in this city. Those papers would be sent whether this appropriation were made or not. Moreover, there is a train that leaves New York at 12.15 p. m., fully late enough for the New York mails. That train arrives in Washington and connects with this newspaper train which leaves New York at 4 o'clock. No time is saved. They both leave Washington at 11 o'clock in the morning.

I for one do not think that the Pennsylvania Railroad needs this appropriation. I do not know what is the condition of the railroads in the South, but I do know that this appropriation is not asked for by the Postmaster-General. I do know that he does expend a part of the money. I do know that it is necessary for the executive to be in accord with the legislative branch, and that the Postmaster-General may well assume if this House, after debate, deliberately appropriates a certain sum of money, that they do so for a needed purpose, and that he is expected to pay it out. And I do know that the gentleman whom I see standing there wishing to interrupt me [Mr. LIVINGSTON], and to whom I have not time to yield, has criticised Mr. Morton, the Secretary of Agriculture, for not expending for seeds money appropriated by this Congress. So I for one do not blame the Postmaster-General if he has spent the money that this Congress has appropriated; but I contend that he has not asked for the money, and that it, or at least a great part of it, is not needed and should not be appropriated.

Mr. AITKEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SIMPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. AITKEN. Is not this fast mail train four hours slower between Washington and New Orleans than the regular passenger train?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes; it is.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I have been so informed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two more. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SETTLE] quoting from this letter of the first vice-president of the Southern Railroad, makes the statement that by this increased facility, the mails are expedited twelve hours to Danville, Va., and so on, and about fifteen hours to New Orleans. Now, I see by the schedule which is published on the same page of the RECORD that the train which leaves New York at 4.30 a. m. reaches Danville at 6 p. m. If the mails are expedited twelve hours between New York and Danville, that can only mean that the running time is now twelve hours less than it would be for these mails if it were not for these special facilities. Or, in other words, that the New York mail, leaving at 4.45 in the morning, could not get to Danville, Va., until twelve hours after the present time, which would make it 6 o'clock the next morning. Or, to make it more clear, it would take twenty-six hours for the mail to go from New York City to Danville if it were not for these special facilities. Why, the thing is absolutely absurd on the face of it. He says that the mails between New York and New Orleans are expedited fifteen hours. The running time now between New York and New Orleans by the table published on page 1849 of the RECORD is thirty-four hours. Add fifteen hours to that and it would make forty-nine hours. I want to say to gentlemen of this House that you can send your mail by way of Washington and Cincinnati and over the Southern Railroad to New Orleans in forty-one hours, and we do not think that is very fast traveling; and yet the gentleman says that it would take forty-nine hours to go from New York to New Orleans if it were not for these special facilities.

Now, I am told by the Post-Office Department that if this subsidy is withdrawn it will not make a minute's difference in the schedule of these trains. They are running these trains not to suit the convenience of the Department, but to suit their own convenience and their power to make money by running the trains as they do.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest——

Mr. BROMWELL. If they did not run the trains to suit the Department they would not get the weighings, they would not get the ordinary compensation. The mails would be thrown to other lines that would send them promptly, just as now they are sent out of Chicago on those lines which will handle them most advantageously for the Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SWANSON. I want to say, in conclusion, that this is a recommendation made by the Post-Office Committee. This matter has been fought out in committee, and has been fought out in the House, and, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SIMPKINS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] said, the simple question is, Is this expenditure a business proposition?

Now, let us determine whether the Government gets sufficient pay in facilitating and expediting the mails from New York to New Orleans by giving this amount. Let us see what mails are concerned in that. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has confessed, the entire foreign mail to Cuba and the West Indies goes from New York to Atlanta, from Atlanta to Tampa, and at Tampa they make connection with a steamer, and the steamer takes the mail to Cuba. This bill gives $1,800,000 to expedite foreign mails, and yet the very schedules which the gentleman has read, which can not be controverted, show that the foreign mails to Cuba alone, which are more important than the foreign mails to the Sandwich Islands, are greatly expedited to Tampa, and there make connections with the steamers, which was never done before. So the gentlemen can not antagonize that and support other provisions in this bill without being open to the charge of inconsistency.

I will go further. They make connections at New Orleans since this provision has been given which were never made before.

Until the last two years the mail used to get to New Orleans at night, after the Houston train had left—the train that carries the mail to Mexico and all down that way. The mail arrives in New Orleans and is distributed and makes connection with the Houston train the same evening, and this expedites it from fifteen to sixteen hours.

Now, let us go further. Let us see what they get. What does this provision say? It says to be used at the discretion of the Postmaster-General. If he is satisfied that the $170,000 is necessary to expedite mail, should he get it he should use it. If it is not necessary and does not expedite the mails, he has got no right under the provisions of this bill to use it. It is discretionary absolutely with him. Why, we give $150,000 here to get bicycles, for what? To expedite mails to people in cities, and yet here in this provision only about the same amount, $150,000, is given to expedite the mails for fifteen States. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] says it is a useless and worthless expenditure of money.

Now, what does the railroad do, and why do not other railroads do it? Why, if they receive this money for this purpose, they have to allow the Department at Washington to fix the time of their trains leaving, the places where they shall stop, and the connections they shall make. Take the train from Danville to Washington. There is a train leaving at 8 o'clock in the morning. It does the entire local passenger work between Danville and Washington, but they put on an extra train which leaves at 11 o'clock. Why did they do so? Because the 8 o'clock train does not make the connection with the trains from the North. That 11 o'clock train only makes about two stops between Washington and Danville. It is the same way with the New York train, and the train to Atlanta through to New Orleans, and as to all these through trains the Department takes the privilege of controlling these trains, controlling their connections, in order to facilitate the mails, not to facilitate the travel of passengers. The reason why the railroads from Boston to Washington do not use the $24,000 is because the railroads refused to give the Government power to fix their schedules. Why, if a man were running a simple wagon line and he allowed a grocery man for whom he was carrying a lot of groceries to fix the time of his leaving and the stops he should make he would charge something for giving that privilege to the grocery merchant. That is all that this railroad does.

Now, let us see whether they are getting too much or not. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] in arguing proves they are not. The Atlantic Coast Line once received this appropriation. At that time the schedules of the trains and their connections were controlled by the Post-Office Department. They were compelled to start a train from New York City at 4 o'clock in the morning. In doing so they got no passengers. They were only doing mail work, and they refused to take the appropriation and so got back the control of their own trains. Why, they said that they lost more profit by the loss of passengers than they made by carrying the mail with the extra compensation paid. Now, this so seriously deranged business that business organizations and chambers of commerce met and requested the various roads to try to get these mail facilities like they used to be. Then the Southern road took the contract and facilitated the mails more than they ever had been before. Why did the Atlantic Coast Line give it up? Why did it refuse to let the Department run its trains and fix its schedules and facilitate the mails instead of facilitating the passengers? Because it thought the compensation was too small for the rights and privileges surrendered by the road. It resulted in a loss to the road.

Now, gentlemen, in conclusion, this is a very small sum of money. It facilitates the mails of ten or fifteen States. This bill carries an appropriation of $50,000 for pneumatic tubes, as the gentleman from North Carolina stated; and what for? To give mails quickly to a man—to give it to him a minute or two earlier. Yet when the people of fifteen States seek to have their mails expedited twelve or fifteen hours, gentlemen say it is an expenditure not justified by the benefits that accrue from it.

Now, I ask you gentlemen at the North, you gentlemen at the West, to help us to retain this provision. It is a great deal to us. It means a great deal to us in getting our letters and conducting our business, our commerce and trade. It is a small sum of money, but it would derange our entire railroad mail connections if the railroads should be allowed to fix their schedule of time of giving us our mail, and not the Post-Office Department. Consequently I insist, on behalf of the people from our entire section, that this provision shall be continued, and give us the mail facilities we now have, and not to take them away from us.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the first section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers in new offices entitled to free-delivery service under existing law, $140,000.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to state whether in his opinion this appropriation of $140,000 will be devoted exclusively for the establishment of the free-delivery system in the cities that are now entitled to it. I have consulted with the head of the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and his request was that this appropriation should all be made in a lump sum. It is here segregated, and I am of the opinion that the segregation of the appropriation makes it absolutely binding on the Postmaster-General to use this $140,000 for the establishment of free delivery in the cities now entitled to it.

Mr. LOUD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, page 3, strike out "one hundred and forty" and insert "ninety."

Mr. LOUD. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY], I will say that prior to last year the appropriation for the support of the free-delivery service was all made in a lump sum. Last year we segregated the different items. This year the estimates were again submitted in lump; and we have again segregated the items. We have put in a new segregation the amount of money to be used for the pay of letter carriers in offices entitled to free delivery under the existing law. We thought it advisable to insert this provision in order that the service might be extended to towns and cities now entitled to it under the law rather than have a further extension such as has been made in the last few years in the cities. The bill as reported carried $140,000 for this purpose. On consultation with the First Assistant Postmaster-General yesterday morning, I found that he had made a mistake in his new segregation; and he now says that he can put the free-delivery service in every office now entitled to the same under the law for $90,000 during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the chief of the free-delivery system that there are now over one hundred cities that are entitled to this system. I know that the town in which I reside has been entitled to free delivery for years. But we are unable to get it because of the insufficiency of the appropriations. Now, if there are one hundred and more offices entitled to free delivery, I do not think that $140,000 is too much to appropriate for this purpose. Whatever portion of the appropriation may not be used can be turned back into the Treasury.

I hope the Committee of the Whole will vote down the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and retain in the bill the appropriation of $140,000, in order that the smaller cities of the country may enjoy the benefits of the free-delivery system as well as the large cities. The tendency of the Post-Office appropriation bills and the policy of the Post-Office Department have been to extend the free-delivery system in the cities of the country to the detriment of the smaller towns. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the gentleman from California will not be adopted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD] whether in his opinion $90,000 will be sufficient to give the free-delivery system to all of the cities of the United States that have the right to it by reason of population or by reason of the amount of postal receipts?

Mr. LOUD. I have already stated that the First Assistant Postmaster-General told me yesterday morning that $90,000 would be sufficient for free delivery in every city and town now entitled to it under the law. Admitting that there are, as the gentleman from Indiana says, 100 towns now entitled to the free-delivery system, I will state that it does not require on an average in these towns over three letter carriers, at $600 a year, to perform this service. It would be impossible to establish all these offices on the 1st of July next. It would require, they tell me, six or seven months before the Department could possibly complete the establishment.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] has evidently worked himself into a great state of excitement, when in fact the committee has put this bill in such a shape as to make it compulsory to extend the service in the very direction that he is praying for. This is the second case happening within my knowledge in this House when the Post-Office Committee have made possible the accomplishment of a certain object by a segregation of items, and the proposition attacked on the floor of this House and defeated. One year ago the segregation made by the Post-Office Committee with reference to the free-delivery service was for the very purpose of suppressing what we believed to be the illegitimate use of money devoted to what was called "the spy system." Only by the segregation of items, permit me to say in perfect candor, although there were but two Republicans in this House who stood with the committee—only by that very segregation that we made could "the spy system" have been suppressed. Had the Post-Office Committee reported the bill to this House in the form in which it had previously been reported for many years—carrying a lump sum—the House would have accepted it, just as the bill in that form had been accepted year after year; and you could not have made a segregation intelligently on this floor, because it required the work of two men for one month to get the information and prepare the items.

Now, if we had brought into this House in a lump sum the appropriation for the support of this service, you would have accepted it as you had accepted it year after year. But the committee in its wisdom saw fit to segregate the items and to specify the particular amount of money which should be used for this very purpose. Only by this segregation could gentlemen accomplish the purpose they desire. If the amount of increase proposed be given in the general item for the free-delivery service, then the First Assistant Postmaster-General can use this extra amount for such purposes and in such manner as he sees fit.

The committee, as I have stated, thought it advisable to suspend the further extension of the free-delivery service in the cities, because we believed that the cities of this country have already sufficient carrier service to perform free-delivery duty; and we believed that all extra amounts appropriated should be devoted to the extension of the service to cities and towns which are entitled to it under the existing law. And if the First Assistant Postmaster-General says that $90,000 will be sufficient, why should we appropriate $50,000 more than he asks?

Mr. BELKNAP. I observe that the estimate for this branch of the service is $180,000. Now, as I understand, the committee do not propose an extension of this service in the cities at all, and they are convinced that $90,000 will be sufficient to meet the demand in the new offices.

Mr. LOUD. If you leave this item as it is reported in the bill, you will not get one dollar of the amount for the extension of the free-delivery service at the points in the larger cities where you think it ought to be extended, and I assume the gentleman to be specially interested in such localities.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Why?

Mr. LOUD. Because the item specifies that the appropriation shall be used for the pay of letter carriers in new offices entitled under the law to this system.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. You mean, there will be no extension of the service where it now exists.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. LOUD was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental expenses, including letter boxes, package boxes, posts, satchels, repairs, marine free-delivery service at Detroit, etc., $60,000; in all, $13,274,000: Provided, That said marine free-delivery service at Detroit shall be performed by the use of rowboats and not by the employment of a steam launch or boat: And provided further, That 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for free-delivery service may be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects named, but no one item of appropriation shall thereby be increased more than 10 per cent.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the question of order——

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will allow me, the committee has two amendments to offer to this paragraph, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 7, page 3, after the word "including," the words "twelve mechanics in the six largest cities, exclusively employed in repairing boxes and locks, and erecting boxes, planting posts and pedestals, at $900 per annum."

Mr. LOUD. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that in the segregation of the items made by us for the Department, they neglected to incorporate this as one of the items of incidental expense. It has been provided for for years past, and the Auditor assumes that if it is not mentioned here specifically they can not be continued, as they are salaried officials at $900 per annum.

I ask a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. LOUD. Now, the other amendment which I ask to have read is to correct the total amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, on page 3, strike out the words "seventy thousand dollars" and insert "twenty thousand dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order on that part of this paragraph beginning in line 10 with the word "Provided" and extending to and including the word "boat," in line 13, being the following language:

Provided, That said marine free-delivery service at Detroit shall be performed by the use of rowboats and not by the employment of a steam launch or boat.

That provision, Mr. Chairman, changes existing law. It is apparent from the last line of the proviso itself that the present method for performing the service is by a steam launch. We may, I take it, go outside of the record and make the statement that this is the manner in which the service has been performed.

Specific appropriation was made for this marine service in the Post-Office appropriation bill that passed the House last session, in these words:

For marine free-delivery service, $3,500.

From this it appears that the authority given to the Post-Office Department was general in its nature. This proviso makes an essential difference, and imposes a limitation on the methods in which the service can be performed hereafter.

I must say that I am somewhat influenced by the policy of such a change, it being so decidedly a backward rather than a forward step. But I maintain also that this is in violation of parliamentary law, which, I take it, it is scarcely necessary for me to read. The twenty-first rule, second paragraph provides:

That no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress—

And the last clause is that portion of the rule to which I particularly invite the attention of the Chair in the following words:

nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Briefly summarizing, then, this provision is so vital a limitation upon the law, as heretofore enforced, that it changes, or rather destroys, the existing law.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, without going into the merits of the question, clause 2 of Rule XXI provides that no change of existing law shall be made on an appropriation bill, nor shall any appropriation be made for any expenditure not previously authorized except in pursuance of a public work or object already in progress. That is the rule, it is true; but the question would arise whether or not the change of method of accomplishing that object—the object itself being continuous—would be subject to a point of order. The change of a method of accomplishing such an object would not seem to be a change of law.

Now, in one case this object was accomplished by the use of a rowboat, in the other by the use of a steam launch; I do not know which is the better method. But I suggest to the Chair, with all due deference, that it is a very doubtful point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It seems clearly to be new legislation. It goes beyond being a mere change in the method. It is a vital difference, and limits the work to be done by the Department.

I submit the question to the Chair.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that the use of the word "instead" does not of necessity indicate that there is any existing law requiring the use of the steam launch for this service. It may be that there is legislation on the subject, but if this is not the case the point of order is not well taken; for this does not change existing law. It simply provides a different method of doing the same thing. It seems to me that in the absence of further information than that conveyed by the use of the word "instead," the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. MILNES. Where do you find the word "instead?"

Mr. BLUE. "Instead of a steam launch."

Mr. MILNES. That is not the language of the provision. The provision reads as follows:

Provided, That said marine free-delivery service at Detroit shall be performed by the use of rowboats, and not by the employment of a steam launch or boat.

Mr. BLUE. I misunderstood the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio; I did not catch the exact words; but I think the remarks I have made are equally applicable to the language of the bill.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of the point of order on this paragraph I should not care to detain the committee with a statement of the facts which induced the committee to make this change in the bill as it now stands, except for the fact that my colleague [Mr. CORLISS] who appeared before the committee is not on the floor. The reason which induced the committee to make this change, after investigation and after according a hearing to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], in whose district Detroit is situated, is that the maintenance of this steam yacht for the delivery of the mail costs the Government about $14.50 a day; that all this yacht does is to tow the rowboat out 1,500 feet and drop it, and that the rowboat then goes to the vessel and delivers the mail, returning to this steam yacht, and is again towed 1,500 feet to shore. The yacht in the meanwhile plays around, awaiting the delivery of the mail by the rowboat. In rough weather the yacht stays at the dock and does no service at all, and the delivery of the mail is accomplished by the rowboat. The sole service to the Government by this yacht, which costs the Government $14.50 a day, is to save the muscle of the oarsman for 1,500 feet out, on his way to the vessel, and as a matter of fact, it was stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], and I understand the declaration is concurred in by the entire delegation of that State——

Mr. AITKEN. I guess you will find that there is nobody else who concurs in it.

Mr. STEPHENSON. He is the only one who concurs in it.

Mr. SETTLE. If there is any exception, I do not know of it.

Mr. LOUD. Let me make the suggestion to the gentleman, in all courtesy, that if the gentleman, who is a member of the committee, had been in the possession of the information which was furnished to the subcommittee which framed this provision, perhaps he would not take the position he does to-day.

Mr. SETTLE. The subcommittee did not favor me with that information, and I only had the information which was given when the entire committee were considering the bill.

Mr. AITKEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SETTLE. Certainly.

Mr. AITKEN. How much do you expect to save to the Government by this provision?

Mr. SETTLE. I understand that it will save to the Government certainly the amount which is now paid for the use of the yacht.

Mr. LINTON. Three thousand dollars a year.

Mr. AITKEN. Does not the same contract——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to suggest to the gentleman that the point of order is the matter under consideration.

Mr. SETTLE. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] made the statement before the committee that this yacht is used by the post-office officials as a pleasure yacht simply, and that it is not essential for the service of the Government. It seems to me, in reference to the point of order, that this limitation placed upon the discretion of the post-office officials is not a change of existing law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a mere designation of the method.

Mr. SETTLE. A mere designation as to how they shall perform this duty.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to anticipate any discussion upon the merits of this provision until this point of order is decided. I only wish to say that there is a very decided difference of opinion among the members from the lake region, including the State of Michigan; and while I regret the absence of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], and feel the greater reluctance to oppose him or his views during his absence, I think it would be impossible to find more than one or two at most who take the same view of this question that he takes.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, while personally I sympathize with the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], I think the Chair will readily ascertain that this provision is not subject to the point of order. If it is determined to be subject to the point of order, of course that would restrict committees in placing any limitation whatever upon any appropriation that might be made. While I do not agree with the amendment which has been injected into the bill, yet if that point of order is to stand it will restrict us in providing how any work may be done and will prohibit us from putting any limitation upon the expenditures of any public money in an appropriation bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. You could not put the steam launch in.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides that no provision shall be placed on an appropriation bill which changes existing law or enacts any new legislation; but there has never been any difference of opinion in the rulings of the Chair on appropriation bills heretofore as to the right of a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to place limitation on an appropriation. Under the present law there is no question but this mail service can be performed by rowboats or a steam launch. If the limitation was simply affecting the number of steam launches that could be employed, the Chair thinks there could be no question of its being in order. The only question connected with it is that it shall be performed by rowboats. This provision may be held to be more than a mere limitation. But as it is a very close question of fact whether that is new legislation or not, the Chair feels like allowing the Committee of the Whole to decide it on its merits, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 3 by striking out, commencing in line 10, after the word "dollars," the following:

"Provided, That said marine free-delivery service at Detroit shall be performed by the use of rowboats, and not by the employment of a steam launch or boats."

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, this service was established by the Department at Detroit about two years ago. That is a point passed by almost all the ships that traverse the Great Lakes, and is the convenient point at which they can be reached for the delivery of mail. Since the establishment of this service the number of deliveries has increased enormously. The first year there were only about 49,000 deliveries. The second year the Department states it increased to $180,000, and it is expected that this year, if the service keeps up, the free delivery will exceed 300,000 pieces. There should be no more restriction upon the method by which this mail is to be delivered at Detroit than there would be on the method of delivery at any other place.

Mr. Chairman, it would be just as well to say that the free-delivery system in Detroit should be restricted to the use of one-horse carts, but not two-horse carts; that they might be allowed to deliver the mail in carts having two wheels, but not in carts having four wheels. It should be simply a question of what will give the very best service. Now, a short time ago the Grand Lodge of Shipmasters met in the city of Washington. Their membership numbers more than a thousand, as I understand. I visited a meeting which was held at the Ebbitt House in this city, and they were unanimous in the protest against any change in the service of marine free delivery as it now exists at the city of Detroit. I have a telegram here from the vessel owners in my own city of Toledo, protesting against any limit to the service there, for the reason that it will deplete the service, as they say. I understand members from all along the Lakes have protests similar in character to this.

Now, Mr. Chairman, they say $14.50 a day is the expense of this launch. I understand that to be true. But I find out by inquiry at the Department, from the superintendent of the free-delivery service, that the increase in the number of carriers to effect the service should this steam launch be done away with would more than make up the expense now incurred by the employment of this steam launch. I have consulted with captains and masters of vessels employed in the traffic on the Great Lakes, and the unanimous verdict is that the service since the employment of this steam launch is the best they have ever had, and so far as I am able to find out, every one of them is strenuously opposed to any change in the service.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. If your amendment prevails, and this provision of the committee is stricken out, its effect will be to leave the whole question of how this service shall be performed to the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. SOUTHARD. That is all. He may perform it by a rowboat or he may employ a steam launch, or employ any method which in his judgment will give the best service at the least cost.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems to me to be a very proper provision.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Now, this $14.50 a day paid for this steam launch provides for twenty-four hours' service on the part of this boat. That is not an exorbitant charge. I have no special interest in this matter, but a good many people whom I represent have a good deal of interest in it. It seems to me that no such change should be made as is involved in this provision.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Detroit [Mr. CORLISS], who had this provision inserted in the bill, is not present. I simply wish to say that the marine interests of the city of Chicago, which I have the honor in part to represent, have as much concern in this subject as those who represent the marine interests of Cleveland and the other lake cities, and I believe that it will be very much to the detriment of this service if this provision is kept in the bill. The marine interests of Chicago are opposed to it. I hope the provision will be stricken out.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Chairman, I received a telegram to-day from the president of the Lake Carriers' Association, protesting against the provision incorporated in this section, and also a letter in the same vein from the postmaster at Buffalo, who, previous to his appointment to that office, had spent his whole life in the activities of the Lake interests. The communications read as follows:

BUFFALO, N. Y., February 12, 1897.

Hon. R. B. MAHANY, Washington D. C.:

All Lake interests desire continuance of marine postal service at Detroit, same as last year.

J. J. H. BROWN,
President Lake Carriers' Association.

BUFFALO POST-OFFICE, OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
Buffalo, N. Y., February 11, 1897.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of a telegram from the postmaster at Detroit, stating that Congressman CORLISS, of the First district of Michigan, is attempting to impair efficiency of the marine postal service at Detroit by opposing appropriation for steam launch used for this purpose.

I consider this service of the utmost importance to the marine interests of the Lakes, and would respectfully ask your hearty cooperation in maintaining this important service. It would be a public calamity to have this service discontinued.

Very respectfully, HOWARD H. BAKER,
Postmaster.

Hon. ROWLAND B. MAHANY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The city of Buffalo, in company with the cities of Chicago, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, and, as I understand, Milwaukee—also, as suggested by gentlemen near me, Port Huron and Duluth—in fact, the whole chain of Lake cities unite in a chorus of protest against the enactment of this clause. The only dissenting voice seems to be that of the Representative from Detroit [Mr. CORLISS], who secured the incorporation of this provision in the bill by a purely ex parte statement to the subcommittee having this portion of the measure in charge.

Speaking for the city of Buffalo, I can say that the sentiment of that great Lake emporium, whose marine interests are probably larger than those of almost any other city on the Lakes, with the possible exception of Chicago, is absolutely unanimous, indeed I may say insistent, for the retention of this service.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that does not affect any interest in my section of country, but it seems to me that sound judgment would dictate that the amendment should prevail. The subcommittee that had in charge the preparation of this bill decided, after hearing these interests at Detroit, to leave this matter to the discretion of the Postmaster-General. This association of sailors that has been referred to had a delegation before the subcommittee. They stated that heretofore there had been some charges made upon the delivery of their mail to them, and that under the present system they receive their mail without any charge.

To state this matter in plain terms, it would appear that all that is involved in the proposition is simply that, as the business is now conducted at the point under consideration, there is a steam yacht that carries the mail from Detroit out to passing boats and delivers it to them. Some of these gentlemen from Detroit, or from Michigan—I do not know why—opposed the appropriation for this purpose. They came before the committee and said they did not want an appropriation made to pay for the services of this yacht. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I could not see any good reason for their position. As the matter does not affect my section of country, and is one about which I know but little, I stated to them, as a member of the subcommittee, that personally I cared nothing about it, but that as a business proposition it looked to me that this appropriation ought to be made, and that the particular method of using the money ought to be left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General. So, instead of reducing the item for free delivery at Detroit, $3,500, heretofore used under the discretion of the Postmaster-General for delivering this mail from Detroit to these passing boats, we permitted it to remain.

Mr. OTJEN. Is it not proposed that the delivery of these mails be made by rowboats?

Mr. KYLE. The proposed amendment will strike out the provision for rowboats.

Mr. OTJEN. It should be struck out.

Mr. KYLE. This amendment strikes out all that; and it ought to be done.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a sailor; I am not much versed in seafaring matters; but it seems to me that if we are going to deliver this mail there is no sense in restricting the Postmaster-General by saying that he shall deliver this mail by a rowboat rather than by a steam yacht. If there is any sense in that proposition, I should like to know where it comes in.

With reference to this matter, the information has come to me—I do not know whether I am correctly informed or not—that the Assistant Postmaster-General, when there was a protest made against this matter by some people, made a trip to the scene of operation and conducted a personal investigation of the matter to inform himself what was proper and right to be done; and I understand he came back with the conviction that the delivery of this mail by means of a steam yacht was sensible and business-like and expeditious, and the service was continued in that way after he came back.

Why some of these people want to strike out the provision for the steam yacht and insert a provision for a rowboat is a matter which they must explain. I do not see any good reason for it. I think the weight of the argument is the other way. I feel no interest in it personally; I care nothing about it, except that I should like to see the people of Detroit get as good service as the people in other sections of the country are getting. And the principle involved here is not confined to the city of Detroit; the same idea might prevail in all the cities on the borders of the Lakes.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, in my district is the city of Milwaukee, where there enter and depart every year over 10,000 vessels. I have had telegrams from some of the leading marine men of that city protesting against requiring the Post-Office Department to deliver these mails by rowboats. Gentlemen are aware that the entire marine commerce of the Lakes passes by the city of Detroit. This is the proper place where the mails should be delivered to these vessels. The advantage of making the delivery by steam launch is that it can thus be done quickly. It seems to me it would be ridiculous for this Congress to require the Post-Office Department to deliver these mails by a rowboat. The matter should be left to the discretion of the Post-Office Department, to be managed as the interests of the public service may demand. The marine interests of the city of Milwaukee, and in fact the entire marine interests of the whole Lakes, are against compelling the Government to deliver these mails by rowboat.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the advocates of this amendment ought to occupy further the time of the committee, as it is evident there is a friendly feeling for the change suggested. I desire, however, to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some telegrams which several of us have received not only from shipmasters, but from shipowners and marine engineers. If there is anyone here who wishes to study further the grounds upon which this amendment should be adopted, he can consult these telegrams in the RECORD when published.

I include with them a letter from a marine engineer at Cleveland, which I think gives as clear a survey of the situation as anything that I have received. Without occupying further time, I ask unanimous consent to print this letter and these telegrams.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the documents indicated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The documents are as follows:

DEAR SIR: I might here explain, if you are not already familiar with the method used to distribute mail, that it is at present necessary for the ship receiving the mail to check down and take the small boat in tow alongside until the exchanges are made. You can therefore readily see that in the case of a long tow or three or four big boats all going in the same direction, the small boat runs the chance of being carried a considerable distance down the river, and if no boats chance to be going up, it is necessary to tow the boat back to a position near the established cruising point, and hence the tug is a necessity to the system, both to expedite the movements of the small boat and to carry the mail to and from the boat and the post-office at Detroit. The operation of this boat has been in the past highly satisfactory to everyone connected with the inland marine, with the possible exception of two or three reporting agencies along the river at Detroit and Port Huron, who used, previous to the delivery of mail by the United States mail, to hold mail sent in their care as a sort of club to compel men employed upon boats to buy papers (at 10 cents per copy) from them. If the crew of a boat did not take enough papers from this boatman to satisfy his greed, the next trip you got no mail, nor did they hesitate to tell you the reason.

Very truly, yours,
H. T. MCAULEY,
For Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, No. 2.

Hon. J. H. SOUTHARD,
House of Representatives:

If consistent with your ideas, oppose delivery of mail in Detroit River by rowboat.

CURTIS & BRAINARD.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the proposed amendment of the gentleman—to strike out this provision of the bill?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That part is proposed to be stricken out beginning with the word "provided," in line 10, and extending to and including the word "boat," in line 13, the proviso embraced within those lines.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand the gentleman to signify his wish to strike out the entire marine free-delivery portion of the bill?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No, sir; merely the restriction that this delivery shall be performed entirely by rowboats. It is our wish to leave it discretionary with the Department whether it shall perform the service by a rowboat or by any other methods which it may deem advisable.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the necessity of putting this provision into the bill at all?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He proposes to strike it out.

Mr. BINGHAM (continuing). Under your paragraph of incidental expenses in which you give the Postmaster-General qualifiedly discretionary power, and allow him to disburse twelve and a half million dollars in one part of the bill, why introduce here an entirely new character of free-delivery system, and then put it under the head of incidental expenses? Why, the next thing will be the bicycle free-delivery service; the next a compressed-air free-delivery service.

The free-delivery service, the gentleman will understand, is of course under the law. In my city, for instance, it is using to the extent of about 100 wagons, which are employed in part for this purpose. The Postmaster-General employs them in carrying into effect the law under his discretionary power. If it be necessary in Detroit or in Milwaukee or at any other maritime point upon the Lakes to perform this service by a steamboat, or a launch, or a rowboat, the Postmaster-General can do it, unless he comes under the steamboat law or mail-messenger service. Why, then, I ask the gentleman, put this provision in the bill at all, and at the same time put the free delivery or any new character of free delivery under incidental expenses?

A MEMBER. What objection is there to it?

Mr. BINGHAM. Why, it is a confusion. I want the whole paragraph wiped out, because I think in carrying out the law, having given the Postmaster-General this sum of twelve and a half millions of dollars in his discretion and under the law for the free-delivery service, why would you undertake to tie him up if in any section he should find it desirable to use a rowboat or a steam launch in the prosecution of the work? I simply want the general law carried out. That is all. But the gentleman brings in a very different proposition, a marine free-delivery service—or that which is called a free-delivery service—and wants to restrict the Postmaster-General to a certain specific manner of performing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Briefly, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I simply desire to say that this amendment was made to do away with a vicious provision in the paragraph. There is no great objection, perhaps, to striking out the entire paragraph; but I think the House would desire, and possibly the Postmaster-General himself would like to have, affirmative authority for this species of expenditure.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Why?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The advantage is that the House thereby exercises a closer supervision over the discretionary powers which are conferred upon the Department. Hence it can do no harm.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

It is not my habit, sir, to attempt to talk to the House, especially when it does not want to hear anybody.

But there are some points that ought to be stated in behalf of the committee which voted to put the provision in controversy in the bill. The telegrams which are flooding us are perfectly natural results of the sound of the provision. When it is said to the people of Milwaukee and Buffalo and other Lake ports that there is a proposition before the House to do away with the steam launch and use a rowboat for the free delivery of mail matter at Detroit, naturally people who know little or nothing of the facts would infer that this proposition, if carried into effect, would result in curtailing the service or giving a slower service than they have heretofore enjoyed. That is a natural conclusion of the human mind from the statement, and I would be surprised if there were not telegrams from every port that touches on the Lakes opposing this simple proposition to take a steam launch from the free-delivery service and hereafter conduct the service in a rowboat.

Now, I do not know whether it is proper to say that I was one member of the committee who voted against putting in that proposition; I am speaking, therefore, for those who voted differently from me on that question. The provision is embodied in the bill because the testimony before the committee was conclusive that this boat did not expedite the delivery of the mails in any way whatever. The facts are that they maintain an expert oarsman with rowboats, and on the approach of a vessel the mail is thrown into the boat, and the steam launch takes that boat and tows it out into the stream, the oarsman delivers the mail, and the boat tows him back again.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. I will make the further statement that the steam launch does this service, when it does it, but the uncontradicted statement is that no steam launch has ever been employed there by the postmaster that was not less seaworthy than the rowboat, and that in all times of rough weather, and all times when there would be any natural difficulty about the delivery of the mail, the steam launch lies safely moored to the dock, and the rowboat does the service alone. If any man will stand up here now and contradict that statement, he will do what no man did during the consideration of this question before the committee. The uncontradicted information goes much further than this, Mr. Chairman, whether I ought to say it here or not. It is to the effect that there is a good deal of the time in fine weather when this boat is seaworthy enough to go out, when she is employed in a service connected with officers of the post-office rather than the mail service, and that then the rowboat does the service alone.

Mr. BRUMM. In other words, she is used in the female service instead of in the mail service. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. "Vote!" "Vote!"

Mr. GARDNER. It is all right to say "Vote, vote," but will some gentleman say that these telegrams which have been received here have not been received on the supposition that to take the steam launch out of the service is to cripple the service? Or will any gentleman stand up and deny the facts as stated—that the steam launch is less seaworthy, less capable of going out in rough weather, than the rowboat? The only time in the natural operation of the elements when a steam launch would be the most serviceable is when this one is unfit to go out and lies behind the dock and does not attempt to go. Those are the facts that led the committee to this action.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Have you ever been in Detroit?

Mr. GARDNER. I have.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Do you know the condition of things there on the river?

Mr. GARDNER. I know they have heavy winds and sea.

Mr. STEPHENSON. There is no time when the launch can not go out.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman if there is any evidence before the committee as to the ownership of this steam launch?

Mr. GARDNER. I have no information to offer on the floor as to that.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARDNER. I will yield to my colleague on the committee; yes.

Mr. HALL. My colleague has stated, and correctly stated, that the undisputed testimony before the committee was that this steam yacht was unseaworthy as compared with the rowboat. But was not that the statement of one member of the Michigan delegation alone?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HALL. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARDNER. I only wanted the House to understand the facts.

Mr. AITKEN. You did not tell us who it was that appeared before your committee—from whom you got your information.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to ask for more time, but there are a number of gentlemen standing around me here and asking where the information came from. I only want any gentleman to stand up before this committee and risk his personal reputation on the assertion that the facts which I have stated are not true. Let him so state to-day, and come back here to meet that statement. Let one gentleman stand up here and now and assert that that steam launch is as seaworthy as the rowboat which she tows in good weather. Let one of them assert that it is not a fact that the steam launch lies at the dock in bad weather, and that the rowboat goes out without her.

Mr. HALL. I can not say anything on that subject, because I do not know, but I know just as much about it as my colleague does, who has taken his seat.

Mr. AITKEN. Just as much.

Mr. HALL. The statement before the committee was that the use of this steam yacht was condemned by every member of the Michigan delegation, and out of deference to that statement, as I thought the Michigan delegation knew better about a local matter than others did, I was induced to side with the representations made by this gentleman. Now, I am free to say that if this statement is not indorsed by the Michigan delegation, as I am told by a number of them that they do not indorse it, I certainly am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. GARDNER] says that this steam yacht is unseaworthy to go out farther than 1,500 feet from shore, and yet he says that the postmaster and his friends in calm weather go out on pleasure excursions and spend some time in perfect safety on that steam launch. It seems to me there is a contradiction right there.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt any gentleman, but I want to say a word about this before the debate closes.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I ever heard the argument advanced that a rowboat is more seaworthy than a steamboat or a steam launch. There is one additional statement which I wish to make. I was informed this morning by the superintendent of free delivery that had it not been for this steam launch for many days during last fall the mails could not have been delivered on the many steamers passing this point; that the mails could not have been delivered at all to the steamers passing along that river.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I want to make one statement in regard to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] who is thoroughly familiar with all postal affairs. He says why not strike out this whole provision. Now, let me explain to the gentleman why we have thought it necessary to put this provision in the shape it now appears. We have segregated, as the gentleman well knows, the items for the support of the free-delivery service, so much for carriers, so much for car fare, so much for horse-hire allowance, etc. Last year we made a much closer segregation as to letter bags, pouches, etc., to the free-delivery service, and for the twelve mechanics, and we thought it advisable to put it all into an incidental account, as it only embraced $60,000. We thought it advisable to enumerate, in brief at least, the purposes for which this incidental fund might be used.

Now, then, in regard to the marine free-delivery service there is a question yet whether the Post-Office Department would be permitted to use it. It is a question yet for the Auditor to determine whether the Postmaster-General could use any of this incidental money unless specified here for this free-delivery service at Detroit. This is not an adjunct of the Detroit post-office, and the money for the support of the Detroit office can not be used for this purpose. It is a separate service entirely.

Mr. BINGHAM. Where does the gentleman, in the law, find any such thing as marine free-delivery?

Mr. LOUD. I do not find anything in the law for a marine free delivery; but we provide in our bill, permit me to say, for substantially the same character of service for the city of New York, for a vessel to go out and meet the incoming vessels, and we appropriate $40,000 for the purpose of expediting the mails there. It is not an adjunct of the city post-office of New York, but it is an accommodation to facilitate the mails of the people of the whole country; and we put that special provision in here, otherwise it could not be provided for, because it can not come out of the money given for the support of the New York post-office. This service is of no interest to the city of New York whatever. The mistake the committee has made, and the gentleman who sought to defend the committee made, is that he took the ex parte statement of one gentleman before that committee and accepts that as all the testimony presented to the committee. Now, as members of Appropriations Committees in the House well know, the evidence in the preparation of an appropriation bill is taken before subcommittees.

Mr. SETTLE. Will the gentleman permit me right there?

Mr. LOUD. In a moment. Let me finish my statement. The evidence is taken before subcommittees. They prepare the appropriations on the best evidence that is presented to their minds, and on such they frame the bill. Now, permit me to say, one gentleman made a statement as to this before the full committee, after the chairman and the other members of the subcommittee had fully investigated the subject. It had heard the representatives of the marine engineers, the masters and pilots, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and had a communication from the postmaster at Detroit. As a result of the examination we made into this whole matter, we presented this provision to the full committee. We could not present to the full committee all the evidence that we had before us in the subcommittee, and it is not customary, I will say, for gentlemen who are on Appropriation Committees to submit to the full committee all the evidence that was before the subcommittee unless called for. The full committee listened to the statement of one gentleman, who came before the committee and made an ex parte statement. The subcommittee, composed of three gentlemen, of whom I, as chairman, am one, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. KYLE] another, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] another, gave to the committee as a result of our calm investigation the opinion that this item which is now sought to be stricken out should not be in the bill. Now, then, I think that the committee should have accepted the evidence and testimony of the subcommittee of three who had carefully gone over this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I ask for another five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SETTLE. Now, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LOUD. Let me finish the sentence. I think the committee, as an act of courtesy if nothing else, should have put as much reliance upon the word and testimony of that committee of three as they would in the unsubstantiated statements of a single member of this House, and that without reflecting on the gentleman at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will permit me, does he think that this paragraph is properly in the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I think so, except that part which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] seeks to strike out.

Mr. BINGHAM. And that it is good legislation?

Mr. LOUD. I think so.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman, in justice to the committee and in justice to Mr. CORLISS. That gentleman appeared before that committee, and went into a detailed statement as to the necessity for this boat or the nonnecessity of it.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes.

Mr. SETTLE. Well, I do not want this connection to indicate any want of confidence in the chairman or the subcommittee having it in charge. I want to state that, in spite of the detailed statement given by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], a member of this House, the subcommittee offered the full committee nothing but an opinion. That was all.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I want to say, in relation to some claims made before the committee, that they did not represent the city of Detroit. Let me say that the city of Detroit has no more interest in the marine free-delivery service than the city of New York has in the $40,000 we appropriate to expedite the foreign mails, because that service there is of no interest to the city of New York whatever. It is simply a service provided to expedite the delivery of these mails from the incoming steamers to Jersey City and the Union Depot and thence to the rest of the country.

It has nothing whatever to do with the New York service. Detroit is not interested in this service; Detroit has a free-delivery service of its own. This service is of interest to Buffalo, to Cleveland, to Toledo, to Chicago, to Milwaukee, and to every point up and down the Lakes—all over the Lakes—and, as I am credibly informed, there is a vessel passing Detroit every four minutes during the twenty-four hours. On a stream with so swift a current as there is at that point, it is impossible that this service should be performed by rowboats. Furthermore, it would be impossible for a rowboat to carry the immense amount of mail required to be delivered along these lakes. I am willing to leave to the Post-Office Department the discretion to expend $3,500 out of an appropriation of over $13,000,000 when we insert no provision of the kind in regard to any other section.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does not this service, as the gentleman states it, become either steamboat service or mail-messenger service, rather than free-delivery service?

Mr. LOUD. Well, it is free-delivery service. It is a special service.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not disposed to criticise the gentleman, but it seems to me he is starting to build up a general appropriation bill in such a way that no one can tell what the result will be in a very few years. The service now under consideration is either mail-messenger service or steamboat service.

Mr. LOUD. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself will be here for many years to come, so that we can see that this thing is properly managed. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SOUTHARD, it was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Before the Clerk reads further, I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of this bill in regard to a clause at the close of the paragraph on page 3:

And provided further, That 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for free-delivery service may be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects named, but no one item of appropriation shall thereby be increased more than 10 per cent.

Is not this provision new? Is it not very recent?

Mr. LOUD. A provision similar to this was incorporated in the Post-Office appropriation bill last year by the Senate, and the conferees on the part of the House accepted it because they thought it was necessary in view of the minute segregation that was made of appropriations for the support of the free-delivery service. A provision of this kind is carried in the sundry civil bill. It is not regarded as dangerous at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wanted the information about it, because it is entirely new to me.

Mr. LOUD. In view of the amendment which has just been adopted, I move to amend by striking out, in line 13, the words "And provided further" and inserting the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the verbal amendment suggested by the gentleman from California will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Postmaster-General is authorized to apply to the payment of the salaries of letter carriers for the fiscal year 1897 the sum of $23,000, being an unexpended balance of $13,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for street letter boxes, posts, and pedestals, and an unexpended balance of $9,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for package boxes.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I desire to raise a point of order on the paragraph just read, and I will state what the point is.

In the appropriation made last year for letter boxes, posts, and pedestals, and for package boxes, more money was appropriated than has been used. In the carrier system there is perhaps a deficiency. The effect of this paragraph, as I understand, is to take this money from the item for which it was appropriated last year and apply it to another item. Now, the question which I raise, and on which I wish the opinion of the Chair (because, as a matter of policy, I do not know that this is wrong), is whether this provision does not change existing law, from the fact that last year this money was appropriated for a specific object, and that the present proposition is to appropriate that money for another object, contrary, as I understand, to the general law, which requires unexpended appropriations to be covered into the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this is simply in the nature of an additional appropriation for letter carriers. There can be no question as to the authority of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report an appropriation giving an additional amount to letter carriers. The provision in this bill has simply the effect of a new appropriation. It proposes merely to use for this particular purpose an unexpended appropriation in the bill of last year. This appropriation is applied to an object already provided for by law, the payment of letter carriers. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that the provision is simply the application of a previous unexpended appropriation to a purpose contemplated by law.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experimental rural free delivery, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, $50,000.

Mr. TALBERT. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "fifty" and inserting "one hundred;" so as to make the amount of appropriation for this purpose $100,000.

The amendment proposed by Mr. TALBERT was read by the Clerk.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the interest of the great mass of the people in this great country of ours. I offer it in the interest of the farmers of our country, who are the foundation stone of all prosperity and all greatness and all happiness, and who pay at least 80 per cent of every dollar appropriated by Congress after Congress meeting here year after year.

And, Mr. Chairman, I see that in this bill we appropriate for free delivery in the cities and towns of the United States $12,529,000. That appropriation has been passed, and there is no objection to it. I do not object to it, because it seems to be necessary. At least, the Committee on Post-Offices has deemed it proper, and I do not object.

In addition to that, we have a provision for horse hire to the extent of $390,000; for car fare, $175,000, and so on. All of this money is to be expended in the interest of the people who live in the towns and cities. Now, after this, after we have made provision for this expenditure, would it not be an act of simple justice to add at least $50,000 to the small pittance carried in the appropriation merely for the purpose of experimenting in this free-delivery service in the rural regions? Surely the people, the great mass of the people, are entitled to some consideration. In the Fifty-third Congress I think $20,000 was appropriated for this purpose, and the Postmaster-General made some experiments and reported upon the feasibility of the work.

Mr. LOUD. That sum was not expended.

Mr. TALBERT (continuing). Well, it ought to have been expended. A part was expended, and showed that it was practicable.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I wish to suggest to the gentleman, when he refers to the bicycle, that it would be a very valuable auxiliary if we are to have free delivery in the country districts.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not making objections especially to that. I am merely calling attention to the expenditure for the free-delivery service where it is already established. I only object to it because it does away with the demand for horseflesh, and possibly the demand for that class which we sometimes call jackasses [laughter]—those fellows in charge of the Government.

But, Mr. Chairman, seriously I speak for the farmers of this country, the masses, the toilers, the taxpayers, and hope the House will not object to the little pittance asked for an experiment in this direction of free delivery in the rural districts. Let the people who live in the country districts, the poorer portions, have some way by which their mail matter can be carried to them and delivered at their doors; let the appropriation be increased, so that the poor people will have something of this privilege.

I do not object to the appropriation for the city or town people. There should be no question between the towns and the country on such a matter as this, but let the farmers come in for their share of the Government bounty in this regard. Give them a chance. Provide them some accommodations. The boards of trade, the chambers of commerce, the banking associations, and all others throughout the country have been heard. Now, Mr. Chairman, let the farmers and the taxpayers, let the toilers be heard once, and receive some little consideration.

I hope the amendment will be carried unanimously.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow an interruption for a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What does the gentleman understand by the terms "experimental free delivery?" How is it to be tried?

Mr. TALBERT. Why, in any way that the Postmaster-General shall direct.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But do you expect it to be tried in your district only?

Mr. TALBERT. No, sir; everywhere. It can be tried in many ways and in various parts of the country. For instance, there could be boxes placed along the line of the star routes, where mail would be deposited by the companies carrying the mail for the people and mail left by the rural population to be collected. I am not here to suggest the way. That is a matter for those who have charge of the appropriations. Let them devise the best method to attain the purpose desired. The Postmaster-General and the Superintendent of the Mail Service can experiment and test the best manner in which the mail shall be delivered to the poorer people of the country just as well as it is delivered to the nabobs and millionaires who live in the cities, like the gentleman from New York who asked the question. [Laughter and applause.] They are—these people who live in the country, the farmers and the working people—the bone and the sinew of this country. They have made it what it is. They have stood in the front when their services were required to preserve the country from danger. They are the people who stand throughout this country laboring for the welfare of all. They are the producers of wealth, and I stand on this floor as an humble representative of that class, and hope the gentleman with all his wealth will not stand here to object to this little increase. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the gentleman mean to say that we have no bone and sinew in the cities?

Mr. TALBERT. I am not criticising the cities. I have only said that you have appropriated $12,000,000 to deliver your mail free. I am not opposing that appropriation. It is right; you ought to have it. But is it not right, also, that we who live in the rural districts should give some concern, some consideration, to the people who live among the hedges and byways, and who have contributed so largely to the wealth of the country? Let them have some consideration at our hands.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, partly in addition to what has been suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina, I am satisfied that this experiment of free delivery in the rural districts is being tried to advantage, and it has already commended itself in my own district and State. I selected, at the suggestion of the Postmaster-General, a township that was entirely rural in which the test was made in the State of Missouri. A part of that township extended to and included a place of some 12,000 inhabitants. To this point in the township many of the farmers were in the habit of going at regular intervals for their mails. In the same township is the little town of Cairo, of some four or five stores only, which is more convenient to many of them; and after this experiment of free rural delivery was tried, the mail was taken largely from this town of 12,000 people and was delivered at the town of Cairo, much to the convenience of the people living in that township, and all are delighted with the change.

But the Postmaster-General is in favor of experimenting with the subject until he has ascertained practically its success, and knowing that fact, the committee called on him to know his opinion as to the sum necessary to carry out the work as efficiently and rapidly as possible. The committee thought, acting upon his suggestion, that the sum of $50,000 would be ample for this purpose, and that amount they have recommended in the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I hope the gentleman will not object to the increase I have proposed. Let him have the $100,000 if he needs it, and if he does not need it he will not expend it. It will not cost anything to the Government if the money is not expended. I hope the gentleman will not interpose any objection. If necessary, I will modify the amendment to say so much as may be necessary.

Mr. HALL. I do not think the gentleman feels any more interest in the prosperity of the agricultural classes than hundreds of men here who never pose in that attitude. The Post-Office Department has asked what they regard as a sufficient sum to carry on these experiments, and they have suggested $50,000 for that purpose, and while I am fully in accord with the idea of carrying the experiment forward, I do not think this increase is necessary, as proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TALBERT. Let me ask the gentleman would he object to putting in the words "if so much be necessary?"

Mr. HALL. I propose to stand by the bill as reported by our committee, and I propose to stand by the amount that the Postmaster-General said he wanted for this purpose, as he is a friend of rural free delivery, and I propose to support the bill as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to amend the amendment by adding the words "if so much be necessary." That would put it in better shape, and so, if it is not necessary, the Postmaster-General will not expend it.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, when we entered on the consideration of this bill, I had some misgivings in view of the absence of my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], and feared that the "common people" had no special defender on the floor; but I see that the common people are all right; so we need have no more fear in that direction.

Now, in regard to this item, these appropriation bills have heretofore carried an item of $20,000, but a new system of experimental free delivery has been inaugurated, which I think will be practical and result ultimately in benefit to the rural districts. But the service has just been established. There is a provision for the expenditure of $50,000. Now, the Postmaster-General, if he had $500,000 or $1,000,000, would not at present extend this beyond the offices in which it is already established. This $50,000 will fully demonstrate whether this system of rural free delivery is practicable or not, and is all that could possibly be used now. I ask the House to vote the amendment down.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. TALBERT; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 45, nays 39.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, of which a sum not exceeding $30,000 may be employed to pay freight on postal cards, stamped envelopes, and stamped paper, and other supplies from the manufactories to the post-offices and depots of distribution, $20,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in as a proviso at the end of line 7, on page 6.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no railroad company shall be paid a higher rate of compensation for carrying the mails than is now paid land-grant railroads, and that section 13 and so much of the rest of the act of July 12, 1876, as requires land-grant railroads to carry the mails for 80 per cent of the compensation paid other railroads is hereby repealed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order until I can state the reasons for the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am well aware that this amendment is obnoxious to the point of order, but I think that if the gentleman will permit a statement of its nature and character, and the reasons for favoring it, that he will not make the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection to the gentleman making a statement, but I shall make the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, Mr. Chairman. When the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was interrogated yesterday as to the possibility of saving money in the administration of the post-office affairs of this country, he called attention to the fact that the land-grant-aided railroads of the country were compelled by the act of July 12, 1876, to carry the mails at 80 per cent of the maximum rate authorized to be paid for railroad transportation of mails. He also stated the fact, and it was undenied and is indisputable, that all of these railroads are very anxious to get this work at the compensation paid them by the Government, which is 80 per cent of the maximum allowed by law to other railroad companies.

It also appears to be a fact undenied and undeniable that the railroads which carry the mail at 80 per cent of what is paid to the others do not receive a large volume of mail, and therefore can less afford to carry it at that rate than these other roads which get 20 per cent more could afford to carry it at the same rate.

So that here is an opportunity to save an amount of money to the Government without paying these railroads one penny less than they ought to have, or one penny less than they would be only too glad to do the work for; and although it is amenable to the point of order, I hope the gentleman will permit the representatives of the people to vote upon an amendment on its merits and bring about this saving, so much to be desired. Economy is a god which is worshiped everywhere except in the city of Washington. [Laughter.] I hope that when there is an opportunity to have a little sincere worship of it here the opportunity for our devotion will not be interfered with by a point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I make the point of order under Rule XXI, paragraph 2, that this is new legislation. The statutes are well defined.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars on routes not exceeding 20 miles in length, $225,000: Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the amount now received by companies performing said service.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the paragraph:

For inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars on routes not exceeding 20 miles in length, $225,000: Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the amount now received by companies performing said service.

I have a communication from Philadelphia this morning, which perhaps has as much of electric mail service as any city in the country, wherein I am informed that this provision will prevent the Department from paying or allowing electric mail-car service that amount which was adjudged fair as compensation by the report of the commission appointed by the Department to make an examination upon this subject. I desire to state to the gentleman that I am wholly unfamiliar with the question. I feel sure that if they have investigated the proposition that fair justice will be done the electric companies that are performing good service in Philadelphia, giving for 20 miles outside of the city quite expeditious service. They feel that they do not receive and are not receiving fair compensation for that service. I would ask the gentleman to give some explanation, as the subject is entirely a novel one to myself.

Mr. LOUD. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that I am glad the gentleman has asked the question, and I must confess that this is a subject on which I am not expert at all. I will explain how the railroad companies are now paid. A year ago, I think, there was a committee appointed by the Postmaster-General to consider this subject. It had been considered, I will say, by a committee the year preceding. But to go over it more carefully, he appointed a new committee which gave this matter careful consideration, and they have made a report which I hold in my hand and which I want to print with my remarks, and also desire to have read, because I want the House to be in possession of as many facts in the case as I am myself. I want the House to act intelligently, fairly, and justly in the proceeding as members shall see it from the presentation made.

I will say further that this committee was a fair committee, composed of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, a gentleman by the name of Myers, and one other. After a careful investigation they reported, recommending a certain rate to be paid these companies. Last year the service was established in so many cities that, in view of the amount carried in the appropriation bill, they could not pay the street car companies the full amount agreed upon by this committee. So the street railroad companies agreed with the Post-Office Department to accept, during the present fiscal year, a reduction of 25 per cent below the amount fixed by this committee.

Now, then, as I started out to say, it is an intricate question with which neither myself nor the gentleman from Pennsylvania nor any gentleman here is familiar. We have, however, arrived at the conclusion to insert the provision as we have it in the bill. Last year the Post-Office Department reported to us the result of one investigation, which was somewhat lower—much lower, I may say—than the report of this committee. They submitted to us a maximum rate, which the committee incorporated in the bill at that time. The maximum rate for a full car service, a 16-foot car, was 12 cents per mile. As the gentleman remembers, we had that in the bill. During some performances that went on here when the special defenders of the common people were rampant, points of order were raised and it went out of the bill; and the Post-Office Department did not have a statute of limitations fixed. So this year they went into the matter again, and came to the conclusion, as contained in this report, that a fair basis would be a cent per foot per mile, inside measurement, which would make for a 16-foot car 16 cents per mile—4 cents more than was recommended to this body last year—which I believe would have passed this House either in that form or a reduced form. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations did suggest an amendment to reduce it; but I think it would have passed the House almost unanimously if it had not gone out on a point of order.

Now, when we come to ascertain what the amount is at 1 cent per foot per mile—when we figured it upon the basis of the pay given for railway post-office car service—and let me remark that severe criticisms have been made by many reformers and by a great portion of the press of the country to the effect that the pay for this railway post-office car service is exorbitant——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I ask for five minutes more—not on my own account, but for the benefit of the House. I wish to go over this subject, so that the House may understand it. I am simply giving the result of our investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. As I was saying, the rate paid for railway post-office car service is assumed by many to be exorbitant. Now, at the rate of a cent per mile per inside foot for this car service the Government would pay for a 16-foot car on a street car line $58.40 per mile per annum. The rate we pay for railway post-office cars is, for a 40-foot car, $25 per mile per annum; that is, $25 for 365 miles. Figuring upon the same basis here, you will find that 365 miles at 16 cents in this 16-foot car would cost $58.40. Looking at the question from this standpoint, and in view of the cost of the construction of a 16-foot street car—in view of the cost of operation and in view of the amount of labor required to operate the car in comparison with the service performed on the railroads of the country—it seemed to me an exorbitant price. I may be entirely mistaken, but it does seem to me that we should be able to operate a car in a city at somewhere near the same figure as upon a steam railroad. That is the way the proposition strikes me.

Of course I know that gentlemen who are familiar with the street car service will say, "We are compelled to have the motorman, or the gripman, and the conductor under the requirements of municipal law." Admitting that, I find that under the rates which it is proposed to pay here for a trailer car, which, of course, does not require either a motorman or a conductor—at the rates proposed by this committee for a trailer car——

Mr. BINGHAM. What does the gentleman mean by "a trailer car?"

Mr. LOUD. I mean such as are used in the service in the city of Washington.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is, a trailer only in the sense of being a rear car. It is, in fact, a specially built postal car.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I admit that. But of course there is no comparison between the first cost of the construction of one of these cars and that of constructing a 60-foot car for service on railroad lines.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wanted the gentleman's definition of a "trailer."

Mr. LOUD. I think the House understands that a trailer car is one which does not require either a conductor or a motorman. Now, the rate provided by the committee in this bill would require us to pay $43.80 per mile per annum for a trailer car of 16 feet inside measure; yet we pay but $25 per annum per mile for a 40-foot car operated upon the railroads of the country. This is all the information that the committee or the chairman of the committee possesses on this subject.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for the information.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman desires, so much of the report as relates to this subject might be read. I think it would be well that it should appear in the RECORD in order that the House may understand this matter. I may be entirely mistaken. I do not desire to do injustice to any individual or company, but the rates proposed seem to me exorbitant.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no specific information on this subject, and I thank the gentleman from California for the information which he has given us. But the question I submit is this: Is it not wise, is it not in the interest of good legislation, in view of the gentleman's own declarations, that this question as to compensation of this service should be left to the better judgment of the Department? The provision to which I take exception is this: "That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the amount now received by companies performing such service." I do not think such a provision is good legislation. We are now in an experimental stage in regard to transportation of the mails by the electric car lines. The Department wants to reach a conclusion fair to the Government and fair to the roads. I fail to be convinced—and I think the gentleman fails to be convinced by his own argument as he states it—that he is clear and just in the conclusion that a provision restricting the allowance to be made by the Department should be adopted. I think this provision ought to be omitted from the bill. The amount involved is not great. The question as it may present itself in the future is a large one. The Department has been and is now investigating it. It seems to me desirable that the Department continue to operate on the lines on which it is now operating, so that it may reach a wise conclusion as to the compensation of these roads.

Mr. OGDEN. Let me ask the gentleman this question: In any city of this Union where the Government has proposed to put on these trailer cars, have the companies refused to perform the service at the rates fixed by the Department? I understand not. How, then, can the Department be embarrassed in any manner if this provision remains in the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am asking that we leave the rates to be fixed by the Department. This provision does not allow the Department to fix the rates.

Mr. OGDEN. The Department has fixed certain rates which these companies have accepted.

Mr. BINGHAM. They have been fixed for a year, under certain limitations, and upon the reasons which have been stated here. Between the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN] and myself there is no contention. I am merely seeking good legislation.

Mr. OGDEN. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Whatever the Department may consider wise I am in favor of; but I do not concur in the wisdom of limiting the discretion of the Department by providing that it shall pay no more than it is now paying for this service. There is no contention between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. OGDEN. With all due deference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], there is a difference between the gentleman and myself. This matter has gone beyond the experimental stage. The Department has already taken into consideration the rate of pay that should be allowed on electric car lines. Under the rates fixed by the Department, this system of transportation is already in operation, and this bill simply continues the existing system.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, let us be perfectly fair and frank with reference to this matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is all I want.

Mr. LOUD. If this provision passes in the shape that it is embodied here, the railroad companies will be compelled to accept 25 per cent less than is agreed on by the committee, because they would then receive the same amount they are receiving now.

Seldom the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I disagree on any question; and, as I have said before, I may be mistaken about this matter. I do not propose to proclaim that I am absolutely right and other gentlemen absolutely wrong; and yet, when I consider the proposition from the standpoint from which I view it, I assume that even the rate provided by us—25 per cent reduction—is exorbitant for the service rendered. That is the way it strikes me. I repeat, I may be wrong; may be mistaken. I can not make it too strong. I am not an expert, and do not pretend to be; I am only comparing it now with steam railroad service already in operation.

As to the suggestion of the gentleman to leave it to the discretion of the Department—yes. It should be left with the proper executive officer. There is no objection to that. But let me say to the House to-day that whatever rate is made here, or by the regulation of the Department, no incoming Administration, no matter what the conditions, will ever have strength enough to reduce it to its proper proportions again. To try to effect a reduction under such circumstances would be a most difficult proposition to bring to a vote in the House and enact into law.

But the gentleman knows my position on the general railroad question and this service with reference to it. I believe, as I said on yesterday, that the power is vested where it properly belongs—in the executive officer of the Government. And yet he finds himself unable, by surrounding circumstances and conditions, to regulate it in any way whatever.

I told the House on a preceding occasion, when the "special defenders" of the common people were present—defenders who do not seem to be here to-day in such great numbers as special guardians of the wants and desires of the farmers—I told them that the point of order they raised against this provision of the bill would ultimately cost the Government of the United States hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Now, then, if we had adopted the ratio in the bill proposed last year, which was 12 cents maximum and 8 cents on a trailer, the railroad companies would have accepted it with pleasure. There is no question about that. In the absence of any law, therefore, it is a question whether if they did not accept it, and this provision is carried in the bill, they will not, for a time at least, rebel against the rate fixed. And yet I believe the rate provided here is more than a profitable one.

So, Mr. Chairman, in legislation we must meet conditions. While you and I would like to pursue a different course, we have got to meet surrounding conditions and accommodate ourselves to them. We find a sentiment in the country, and you and I have advocated such course as would influence people for a time, hoping that that influence would ultimately get back to what we regarded the point of reason. It is necessary at times to pursue such course. You must meet conditions as they arise, and so, in such a case as this, it is simply necessary to pursue that course. If, then, that becomes the rate, it will be the fixed rate and can not be changed. It will be exorbitant; it can not be modified, and we will find ourselves powerless to remedy it.

I would like the House, after hearing the reading of this part of the report which I send to the desk, to consider this question, and then vote on it without fear or favor.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will he be kind enough to explain to the House the uses to which such appropriation will be applied? For instance, there is to be seen at times on the streets of this city a mail car. Now, what is the purpose of that car? What does it do in the great plan of the operations of the Post-Office Department?

I have heard gentlemen suggest that the use of this car in the cities was a mere fad; that there was nothing in it of benefit to the public generally. I confess I have no knowledge of the subject. I do not know what is done in it, or what it is for. Will the gentleman explain what purposes it serves?

Mr. TERRY. If the gentleman will permit me to give as one reason for the use of this car, it has been intimated that it is for the purpose of getting the Federal bayonets in the event of strikes among the street railway men.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will approach the discussion of this proposition calmly and with equanimity, and will not be influenced by outside questions which have no bearing upon the discussion.

In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa, I think, in some instances, perhaps, the use of this car may be a "fad," as he calls it. I do not believe that the street car service in this city, or a city located as this city is, can be of very material benefit to the mail service; and yet in some cities it certainly does expedite the mail delivery. You take a city, as an illustration, where the street car lines concentrate at one point, or where there is a system of waterways concentrated, as in some cities; if your mail goes upon street cars thus concentrated, then you have expedited the mail in some instances twenty-four hours, in others perhaps twelve or only six hours, which, of course, is a great advantage in the collection and delivery of the mails.

This mail is gathered from the letter boxes, taken onto this car and distributed there, without going through the main office, and if, as I have suggested, these cars concentrate at the point of debarkation of the mails at a union depot or at a water front, why, then, in many instances letters will be expedited twenty-four hours. It is a very beneficial service. Now, if there are no further questions, I should like to have the Clerk read so much of this report as is marked, and I should like to have members pay attention to it. It will give gentlemen all the information we have on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that there is no amendment pending.

Mr. LOUD. I ask unanimous consent that it may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the extract to which he refers may be read. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Our conclusion is that a rate of 16 cents per car per mile for cars not exceeding 16 feet in length, inside measurement, would cover operating expenses and in most cases allow a fair margin of profit. The most notable exception to this would be the West End Street Railway Company of Boston, and even in their case we believe that 16 cents per mile will fully cover the actual additional expense incidental to the service.

Assuming that this rate is adopted, it will be noted that it will form the basis for a very convenient unit of measure, namely, 1 cent per linear foot of car space, full width of car, per mile. This rate of pay, we think, should also apply to apartment space in combination cars. Inasmuch, however, as the cost of operating longer cars does not increase directly with the length, we would suggest that for space exceeding 16 feet the rate should be one-half cent per mile per foot up to and including 20 feet, which would make the rate for a car of 20 feet, inside measurement, 18 cents per mile.

For trailer cars we would recommend the rate of one-half cent per car-foot mile for 20 feet or less, and one-quarter cent per car-foot mile for space in excess of 20 feet. While several companies argue that the cost of a trailer car is more than half of that of a motor car, we believe that in cities which do not require a brakeman or conductor to accompany the trailer the cost per car mile for trailers is not much in excess of half of that for motor cars, since the items of wages for conductors and motormen and repairs of motors are saved entirely, and all other expenses, except general expenses, considerably reduced.

These rates of course contemplate that the cars shall be furnished with the necessary fixtures, lighted, heated, painted, and lettered in accordance with plans furnished by the Department, and include transportation of clerks actually engaged in distribution, messengers accompanying registered mail, and post-office inspectors in the discharge of their duties.

In the matter of compensation for carrying the mails in closed pouches the replies of the railroad companies throw little or no light upon the subject. There is no way to arrive at the cost of performing this service. The quantity of mail to be handled is usually small, and, even at a comparatively high rate, the total earnings of the companies from this source would be insignificant, and there is therefore little money inducement to perform the service. On account, however, of the other inducements mentioned above, most companies are willing to handle the mails. We would recommend a rate of 3 cents per car mile for transporting mails in closed pouches, regardless of the space occupied, which, upon most lines, is inconsiderable. This rate, however, on roads of short mileage, having few dispatches, would reduce the present compensation, which is so low as to cause much complaint and dissatisfaction on the part of the companies. To provide for such cases, we would recommend that the minimum compensation allowed such companies shall be as follows: For lines performing 2,000 car miles of service or less, $150 per annum; for lines performing not more than 3,500 miles nor less than 2,000 miles, $175; for lines performing not more than 5,000 miles nor less than 3,500 miles, $200; and for lines performing not more than 8,333 miles nor less than 5,000 miles, $250.

As the committee finds that if the rates herein recommended are adopted the appropriation for street-railway service which was made by the last Congress will be insufficient, it is recommended that the allowance for street-railway post-office cars for the ensuing year be 75 per cent of the amount to which the new rates would entitle them, and that the change in the rate of compensation for carrying the mails in closed pouches be postponed for one year, or until Congress shall have made a sufficient appropriation to put into effect the rates which the committee considers the railway companies to be entitled to.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Boston, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the entire paragraph commencing with line 21, page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph commencing with line 21, page 6.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROMWELL) there were—ayes 53, noes 79.

Mr. BROMWELL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. BROMWELL and Mr. SWANSON.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 107.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. BROMWELL was rejected.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "Boston, Mass., by way of;" and by substituting, in lines 23 and 24, for the words "one hundred and ninety-six thousand six hundred and fourteen dollars and twenty-two cents" the words "one hundred and seventy-one thousand two hundred and thirty-two dollars and seventy-five cents."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, strike out the words "Boston, Mass., by way of;" and further amend, in lines 23 and 24, by substituting for the words "one hundred and ninety-six thousand six hundred and fourteen dollars and twenty-two cents" the words "one hundred and seventy-one thousand two hundred and eight dollars and seventy-five cents."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] both raise the point of order. If the gentleman desires to be heard on the point of order, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I should like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The purpose of this amendment is not to change existing conditions in any degree. It has been acknowledged by the committee that no part of this appropriation is expended in New England.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then why strike it out?

Mr. SIMPKINS. For years, Mr. Chairman, we have had this appropriation in the bill, and this year, because it has not been expended, it has been necessary to add another paragraph to the bill, by which the Postmaster-General can expend, at his discretion, money not expended under this appropriation. It seems to me very unwise, it seems to me a fraud on the public, for the members of this Congress to appropriate money for a certain purpose year after year when they all know that not one cent of the appropriation is to be used for the purpose for which it is appropriated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wishes to make a point of order that this changes existing law, I will simply move to amend by striking out, in lines 23 and 24, the words "one hundred and ninety-six thousand six hundred and fourteen dollars and twenty-two cents" and substituting the words "one hundred and seventy-one thousand two hundred and thirty-two dollars and seventy-five cents," thus saving to the Government $25,000.

Mr. SETTLE. The gentleman knows that that money is not taken out of the Treasury anyway.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will ask the gentleman where in the bill is authority given to the Postmaster-General to expend the unexpended balance?

Mr. SIMPKINS. On page 8.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think there had better be an acceptance of the gentleman's latter proposition. The money has not been expended. It is discretionary with the Postmaster-General to expend it, and the discretion has been not to expend it. As it has not been expended, and is not proposed to be expended, I think the gentleman's proposition is a fair one.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to say that I have no objection to the adoption of that amendment, if other gentlemen do not object. I want to say this in connection with it, that we have voted for this paragraph. The gentleman's motion would have been in order before the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio had been voted on, because when a motion is made to strike out the entire paragraph, then a motion to amend that paragraph before it is stricken out is in order; but when the House voted that it would not strike out the paragraph, then a motion to amend it is not in order. So I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion comes too late—after the House has voted to retain this paragraph.

Mr. SIMPKINS. There is another suggestion——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia is now pending.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. It does not seem to me to be fair that gentlemen of the South——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, in addition to that, this is a change of existing law.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order, so that I may be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Georgia is not the same as the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CRISP. I do not care to discuss it. It is evident that it is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I ask the gentleman if he will not reserve his point of order, so that I may be heard for a minute.

Mr. CRISP. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia, and not on the one raised by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. CRISP. I reserve my point of order.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I hope gentlemen of the South and the gentleman from Georgia, now that the House has decided that this appropriation shall be made for their fast mails, will not insist upon voting into this bill a wording which gives a wholly false and erroneous impression to the people. Those gentlemen know that not one dollar of this appropriation is expended or is intended to be expended in the New England States. It is insisted that it shall be kept in the bill in order that the votes of members from New England States may be given to this proposition, under the false impression that this money is needed for their trains, in order that the South may have fast mails.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. SIMPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If this paragraph is left as it is and the road from Boston to New York will accept the Post-Office regulations, this money can be used at any day.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that I will say that this money has not been used for years.

Mr. BOATNER. Why not?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order. All this has been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order now being discussed is that made by the gentleman from Georgia. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia withheld the point of order until the gentleman from Massachusetts could be heard.

Mr. CRISP. That is correct.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I was trying to answer the question of the gentleman from Georgia, and I will say that already, without appropriating one dollar, the railroads of their own accord have given the very best mail facilities we have ever had between Boston and New York. The facilities will not be improved or increased by reason of this appropriation, and the Department does not seek to increase the facilities between those points. Already the latest mails can leave Boston and arrive at New York at 11 o'clock, in time to catch the fast trains from New York south at midnight as they are now scheduled.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me one further question?

Mr. SIMPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You suggest that we want to keep it in here for the purpose of securing the Eastern votes, while you want to strike it out because you want us to lose the Eastern votes next year?

Mr. SIMPKINS. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the appropriation is not necessary, ought it not to go out?

Mr. SIMPKINS. I want it stricken out, because it is of no use, and it makes a useless appropriation of $25,000, which can as well be saved to the Government as not; and I wish the Southern men in this House would give an example of their Democratic economy in voting for this amendment.

Mr. CRISP. I renew the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. I want to inquire whether the gentleman from Massachusetts is authorized to speak for the railroad companies that manage lines between Boston and New York, and to say for them that in the future they will not adapt their schedules to the wishes of the Department and be in a position to accept this money?

Mr. SIMPKINS. I will say that I am not authorized to speak for any railroad company, and I think that from my remarks it must be perfectly plain to the House that I have not been arguing in favor of any subsidy for any railroads in this country—either the Pennsylvania Railroad, or the Southern railroads, or the New England railroads.

Mr. GARDNER. But the gentleman said that no part of this money would be expended in New England. He can not say that unless he is authorized to speak for the companies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. In the opinion of the Chair, it is clearly in order to move to strike out the entire paragraph; and if that may be done, it is certainly in order to strike out any part of the paragraph.

The second point of order (raised by the gentleman from Virginia) is that as the Committee of the Whole refused to strike out the entire paragraph, therefore it is out of order to strike out any part of it. On this point the Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to clause 7 of Rule XVI, which expressly provides that—

> A motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor a motion to strike out and insert.

The Chair therefore overrules both points of order, and submits the amendment to the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. The only suggestion I wish to make is that one portion of this point of order has not been considered, and that is that the rules provide that an amendment shall be in writing. This amendment was not offered in that form.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I have submitted the amendment in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment as now in possession of the Clerk is in writing. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it understood that the amendment is to reduce the appropriation of $196,614.22 by some $25,000?

Mr. SIMPKINS. By a reduction of $25,000.

Mr. LOUD. The proposition is to dispense with a portion of the appropriation which has not been used for years.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is a wise legislative proposition. This House has determined that, so far as concerns an expeditious mail service, it is in favor of it from the point indicated by the bill, but actually and practically from New York to New Orleans. The expense of fast-mail facilities between these points can be covered by about $176,000. The New England road from Boston to New York, because of the competition in connection with passenger traffic, will not put any one of their trains under the absolute control of the Department as to schedule departure and schedule arrival. It pays that company better to control every train in their own administration than to give any one train to the control of the Post-Office Department. As to the line from New York to New Orleans, the proposition stands. The roads embraced in that line have submitted themselves to the control of the Department; they have said "You may start this fast train at an hour which you may designate; you may make it arrive at Washington at a given hour; you may control the schedule all the way south to New Orleans." This House has approved that as good legislation. It has supported a provision of that kind for almost twenty years. I have voted for it every year when the proposition has come up, whether contested or uncontested.

To-day the appropriation for these fast-mail facilities is not used from Boston to New York. Why, then, appropriate for a service which does not exist? Over that line the necessary expedition is given because of the competition in the passenger traffic. Such competition does not exist from New York to the points southward to New Orleans. The fact that this money is not used on the line between Boston and New York is shown by a paragraph incorporated elsewhere in this bill—a paragraph embodying new legislation, giving to the Post-Office Department a privilege never before given. It is in these words:

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

Now, as this money has not been used—as there is no evidence that it will be used—as it is a fact that fast-mail service between Boston and New York can be obtained without the expenditure of a cent by reason of the competition in passenger service, I say the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts is wise and economical legislation.

Mr. HALL. I believe the Chair referred to me as having made a point of order against the amendment. I made no such point. I have no objection to the proposition. It seems to me eminently proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] was that there was too much confusion in the Hall. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman in supposing that he made a point of order against the amendment. That error was corrected, and the point of order was attributed properly to the gentleman from Georgia.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SIMPKINS, it was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

Mr. BROMWELL. I make a point of order upon this paragraph. My point is that it embraces new legislation.

Mr. HALL. I desire to be heard on the point of order. This point, as I understand, is made under clause 2 of Rule XXI. I do not believe that any fair construction of that clause will sustain the gentleman's position. The clause reads:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The appropriation to which the pending paragraph refers is an appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, a portion of which remains unexpended.

Now, the decisions on that question are to be found under the head of "Amendments to, and provision in, changing existing law," on page 281 of the Digest. I will read a kindred proposition to this, which I think is in itself conclusive as to the point of order.

A proposition reported in an appropriation bill, or an amendment proposed thereto, changing existing law for the fiscal year covered by the bill, or suspending existing law, is, pro tanto, new legislation for that period, and is subject to a point of order under clause 2 of Rule XXI.

But, Mr. Chairman, this provision of the pending bill does not come under that provision of law. This shows the idea in the minds of the framers of the bill to apply whatever appropriation there remains unexpended to the continuance of existing law.

Again, on page 282 of the Digest, appears the following:

The failure of Congress to appropriate money in the appropriation act for the current fiscal year, for an object authorized by law, does not repeal such law; and an amendment providing for such object is in order on an appropriation bill, notwithstanding its omission from the previous appropriation act.

That is precisely the same idea embodied in this provision in the pending bill.

Following that citation we find—

An amendment being submitted to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, providing for the erection of buildings for a reform school in the District, and the question being submitted to the Committee of the Whole, it was decided that it was not in violation of clause 2, Rule XXI.

Again, on page 283, we find that—

The Post-Office appropriation act for the current fiscal year containing an item "for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines," a provision in the pending appropriation bill, adding to the words quoted a designation of the routes to which the appropriation should be applied, was held not to be a change of law, but merely a limitation of the discretion of the Postmaster-General; also held, that it was in order as being in continuation of a public object already in progress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from these words—also held that it was in order as being in continuation of a public object already in progress—

I do not see how the point of order can possibly lie against this provision.

But, following this citation I have just made, we find—

A provision in the Navy appropriation bill for additional ships was held to be in order, as being in continuation of a public object already in progress, namely, the maintenance of the Navy. There need not, therefore, be any previous legislation authorizing it.

Now, sir, if gentlemen will reflect for a moment, they will find, on page 3 of the bill, beginning with line 18, this provision carried in the bill:

The Postmaster-General is authorized to apply to the payment of the salaries of letter carriers for the fiscal year 1897 the sum of $23,000, being an unexpended balance of $13,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for street letter boxes, posts, and pedestals, and an unexpended balance of $9,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for package boxes.

And the present occupant of the chair has just ruled on this identical question. It seems to me if there can be anything in the doctrine of res adjudicata on the question of a ruling of the Chairman of the committee or of the Speaker of the House it has already been established. For instance, the point of order was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] against that provision of the bill, and the Chair ruled, using his own language, as follows:

The Chair is of opinion that this is simply in the nature of an additional appropriation for letter carriers. There can be no question as to the authority of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report an appropriation giving an additional amount to letter carriers. The provision in this bill has simply the effect of a new appropriation. It proposes merely to use for this particular purpose an unexpended appropriation in the bill of last year. The appropriation is applied to an object already provided for by law, the payment of letter carriers. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that the provision is simply the application of a previous unexpended appropriation to a purpose contemplated by law.

Now, then, this provision of the bill is identical in substance with that, only providing for an unexpended balance, in the following words:

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

There is an unexpended balance here of this appropriation; and on page 3 there is a similar unexpended balance, on which the Chairman of the committee has already ruled. The Chair has declared its opinion that it is in continuation of a work already in progress, and there can be no question as to the authority of the committee to report this proposition, making available this unexpended balance. It proposes, as the Chair held in the other case, merely to use, for this particular purpose, an unexpended balance of appropriation in the bill of last year.

Now, in direct line with the decisions I have already read, in which they state that where the object is to carry out a provision of already existing law it is not open to the objection under clause 2 of Rule XXI—that is, that it is in order as being in continuation of public object already in progress—I will read the law of last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like the gentleman from Missouri to point out the law providing for other trunk lines providing this appropriation shall be turned aside from the purposes of last year. The Chair would like to hear what the gentleman has to say as to what other lines now provided by law it could be applicable to, and to know what lines already established by law will be benefited by such a provision of law as this.

Mr. HALL. I would suggest that the appropriation for the year 1897 was reported by our committee, and this provision is in it, the same provision, for facilitating the mails on the trunk lines. That will be found on page 6 of the bill of last year, in the following words:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Boston, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Now, it seems to me that when there is a provision of law for the appropriation of this money for trunk lines specified as in that bill, and this unexpended balance remains in the hands of the Postmaster-General, it is on all fours with the rulings heretofore as well as the ruling on the paragraph found on page 3 of the bill made by the Chair to-day.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is ready to rule, I have nothing to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to the fact that in the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kansas to the appropriation for letter carriers there was no question as to the letter carriers being provided for by existing law. There was no provision for extending the letter-carrier system to cities not entitled to such privileges under the present law. If there had been a provision in that section on page 8 extending that provision to cities not now entitled to the carrier system, and then appropriating an unexpended balance for that purpose, the Chair would have held it out of order, because it would have been a change of existing law; but it was not a change of existing law in that case to simply make an appropriation for a purpose already provided for by law. It was simply a method of appropriation. The Chair would like to have the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] point out the law that provides for extending these fast-mail facilities to other trunk lines in the country.

Mr. HALL. I do not know of any express provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that there is no such law.

Mr. HALL. I do not know of any express provision.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] can point the Chair to any law providing fast-mail facilities on other trunk lines in the United States, then the Chair will hold quite differently, but the Chair does not understand the gentleman to point out anything except as provided in the appropriation bill, where a specific line is named and none other.

Now, this amendment gives the power to the Postmaster-General to extend fast-mail facilities on any other trunk line in the country where he may desire to do so, and it would be clearly a change of existing law to do something in that way which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] himself would say could not be done by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the naming of other trunk lines and starting additional facilities by an appropriation bill, under the present rules of the House. It certainly is not in order to give authority for an officer of the Government to do what the House itself can not do.

The Chair is of opinion that this amendment clearly and unequivocally changes existing law. It is not a question of simply making an appropriation of unexpended balances for purposes now authorized by law, but it is an appropriation of unexpended balances for purposes not authorized by law. In so far as it undertakes to expend unexpended balances for purposes not now authorized by law, or in so far as it undertakes the creation of new obligations upon the Government, the Chair thinks it is clearly out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL]. The provision will be stricken from the bill.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

For manufacture of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, $175,000.

For pay of agents and assistants to distribute stamps, and expenses of agency, $12,000.

For manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, $844,000.

For pay of agents and assistants to distribute stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and expenses of agency, $17,800.

For manufacture of postal cards, $197,000.

For pay of agent and assistants to distribute postal cards, and expenses of agency, $7,800.

For registered-package, tag, official, and dead-letter envelopes, $103,000.

For ship, steamboat, and way letters, $1,000.

For engraving, printing, and binding drafts and warrants, $1,000.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 11 and 12 on page 9.

Mr. LOUD. I find on examination, Mr. Chairman, that, while they have estimated for this amount for four or five years, there has not been a dollar of the money used, and it has all been turned back.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

For mail depredations and post-office inspectors, including salaries of inspectors, etc., and for per diem allowance to inspectors in the field while actually traveling on business of the Department at the rate of $3 per day, exclusive of Sundays, excepting in cases of emergency, $400,000: Provided, That post-office inspectors, excepting those receiving salaries of $2,500 per annum, may be paid in excess of the $3 per diem allowed by this act for such items of actual and necessary personal expense incurred in the discharge of their official duties, upon presentation and approval of vouchers covering the total expenditure for personal expenses for the date or dates which such excess may be claimed; or, if the exigencies of the service render the taking of vouchers impracticable or inexpedient, the sworn statement of the inspector reciting the objects of, amounts of, and necessity for, such expenditures, may be accepted in lieu of the vouchers: And provided further, That post-office inspectors shall be paid, out of any money hereby appropriated, a salary at the rate of not exceeding the following: For first year's service, $1,200; second year, $1,400; third year, $1,600.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. On page 9, line 19, I move to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "three;" and I do this more especially for the purpose of asking a question and submitting a few remarks.

I find by referring to the estimate that this item has been increased from $300,000 to $400,000. I wish particularly to know of the chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD] whether this covers, or is expected to cover, a further appointment of secret agents of the Post-Office Department, like those who interfered with the rights and duties of mail carriers in the cities during the last few years? I presume that that would not be justified by the present committee, but I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a list of the employees of the Post-Office Department who, within the last few years, have been engaged in the so-called secret service.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secret agents of the Post-Office Department and the places of their payment as such.

Mr. BAKER of New Hamsphire. Mr. Chairman, those are the men who, in the last few years, have been sent around the country for political purposes, under the guise of doing work for the Post-Office Department. It seemed appropriate to me that they should be put on record, so that the people of this country can know who these men are, and for that purpose I rose and offered the amendment, which I now withdraw.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4020. The Postmaster-General may appoint two agents to superintend the railway postal service, each of whom shall be paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of the mail a salary at the rate of $2,500 a year, with an allowance for traveling and incidental expenses, while actively employed in the service, of not more than $5 a day; and the Sixth Auditor shall charge to the appropriation for mail transportation the salary and per diem of the assistant superintendents of the postal railway service, and to the appropriation for the free-delivery system the salary and per diem of the special agent detailed for that service.

Mr. LOUD. I offer the following amendment at line 16.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "Sixth Auditor" and insert "Auditor for the Post-Office Department."

Mr. LOUD. That is required by the change of the title of the office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to strike out "five," in line 16, page 11, and insert the word "four," so that it shall allow for traveling and incidental expenses while actively employed in the service not more than $4 a day, instead of $5.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the present law?

Mr. DOCKERY. Five dollars a day.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, page 11, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four."

Mr. LOUD. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 4048 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph, after line 23, page 11, the following:

"The Postmaster-General shall, for the fiscal year 1899, and annually thereafter, submit in the annual estimates to Congress estimates in detail for expenses of the free-delivery service as provided in this appropriation act."

Mr. LOUD. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That if the revenues of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenues of said Department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1898.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following as section 2 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding as section 2:

"Section 4 of the act approved July 16, 1894, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, is hereby amended by inserting the word 'seven' in place of the word 'ten' wherever it occurs in the section."

Mr. DOCKERY. That is to come in as section 2. The section that is sought to be amended is section 4 of the Post-Office appropriation bill approved July 16, 1894. That section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General to destroy in such manner as they may deem best the money-order statements and paid money orders and paid postal notes accompanying the same after ten years shall have elapsed from the expiration of the period covered by such statements. The Post-Office Department now asks that this period for the destruction of money order-statements and paid money orders be reduced to seven years. I desire the Clerk to read a letter of Postmaster-General Wilson in this connection, and also a letter from the Auditor for the Post-Office Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1897.

DEAR SIR: In response to your telegram of this date requesting my opinion as to the propriety of a provision by law permitting money-order statements and paid money orders to be destroyed when seven years shall have elapsed from the expiration of the period covered by such statements, I have the honor to transmit to you herewith a letter from the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, accompanied by a copy of a letter addressed to you of the 20th of January, 1897, by the Auditor; and to say that I concur in the opinion expressed in his letter, that changing the limit to seven years instead of ten years would not be detrimental to the interests of the Government or to the payees of such money orders.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

WM. L. WILSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1897.

SIR: In response to your personal inquiry as to the effect of retaining money orders and money-order statements only seven fiscal years from the date of their issue, instead of ten years as required at present, I have the honor to reply that I do not think changing the limit to seven years, instead of ten, would be detrimental to the interests of the Government or to the payees of such money orders.

At present these orders are retained for ten years, and at the beginning of each fiscal year the oldest year of the files is destroyed. This system has been in operation during the fiscal years 1894–95 and 1895–96.

During the fiscal year 1894–95 applications for warrants for 26 invalid money orders which were issued ten years prior to the application, amounting to $267.29, were received.

For the fiscal year 1895–96 21 applications were received, amounting to $123.39.

For the fiscal year 1894–95 applications were received for warrants for 25 invalid money orders more than seven years and less than ten years old, amounting to $128.96. For the fiscal year 1895–96 applications were received for warrants for 13 invalid money orders more than seven years and less than ten years old, amounting to $79.74. Total for the two years, 38 orders, amounting to $208.70.

Of these 38 applications during the two years above specified 19, amounting to $98.94, were accompanied by the original unpaid money orders. There remained 19 applications, amounting to $109.76, which contained only the certification of the payees and issuing and paying postmasters that the orders had never been paid.

If the files for these years had been destroyed, payment would have been made upon these certificates, and of course search could not have been made to see if the original orders had been paid.

The number of money orders issued each year is increasing, as well as the number of money-order offices.

The basement of the city post-office, in which these files are stored, is now so crowded as to interfere with their proper arrangement for reference.

Each year's files stored in this basement is greater in volume than those of the year which is removed to be destroyed. It will therefore be very soon a necessity that additional storage room be provided for them or their volume decreased.

Very respectfully,

GEO. A. HOWARD,
Auditor.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will say there can be no objection to that amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be put into the bill after the last amendment that I offered, leaving the last paragraph at the end of the bill, as it should properly be.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the amendment shall be considered as coming in just before line 24, on page 11.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I desire to pay a just tribute to Hon. George A. Howard, the accomplished Auditor for the Post-Office Department. He has been honest, faithful, and tireless in the discharge of his official duties. Because of his great ability as an executive officer, and the reforms in the system of accounting which have been inaugurated in the Auditor's Office, pursuant to the recommendations of the joint commission of Congress authorized by the act of March 3, 1893, the Auditor has been able to bring up the business of the office so that it is now current.

The House and the country will perhaps better be able to understand the efficient conduct of the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department by a perusal of recent reports of the Auditor to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General, which I herewith append:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1897.

SIR: In compliance with section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1897, I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement showing the amounts due the United States on accounts of postmasters who retired from office, and from bidders who failed to enter into contracts with the United States for carrying the mails, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896. The number of postmasters who were retired from office by death, resignation, or removal during the above-named fiscal year was 11,794.

Their indebtedness on postal account is	$28,330.79
Their indebtedness on money-order account is	12,987.27
There is due from failing bidders	614.95
Total	41,933.01

An examination of the annual reports of this office shows that the last statement, covering only the indebtedness of late postmasters on postal account, appeared in the annual report of this office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, ten years ago.

The balance due the United States on postal account from 20,385 postmasters who retired from office during that year was $259,640.57. This sum does not include the amount due from late postmasters on money-order account, for the reason that the business of the money-order branch of this office has been, until the close of the past fiscal year, so much in arrears that its accounts had never been audited, and the annual balances have never before been stated. Nor does the report of 1886 include balance due from failing bidders for transportation of the mails.

The following is a comparative statement of the number of post-offices and the gross revenues during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1886, and June 30, 1896:

	1886.	1896.	Increase.
			Per cent.
Number of post-offices	53,614	70,238	31
Revenue	$43,948,422.95	$82,499,208.40	88
Number of money-order offices	7,264	19,825	173

Very respectfully,

GEO. A. HOWARD, Auditor.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of the report submitted to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury under the requirements of the act of Congress approved May 28, 1896, as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall, on the first Monday of January in each year, make report to Congress of such officers and administrative departments and officers of the Government as were, respectively, at any time during the last preceding fiscal year delinquent in rendering or transmitting accounts to the proper officers in Washington, * * * together with such officers, including postmasters and officers of the Post-Office Department, as were found on final settlement of their accounts to have been indebted to the Government, with the amount of such indebtedness in each case, and who, at the date of making report, had failed to pay the same into the Treasury of the United States."

From the inclosed report it will be seen that 11,794 postmasters retired from office during the last fiscal year. Of this number 265 are now indebted to the Government, 192 on postal and 73 on money-order account, in sums varying from 2 cents to $9,343.78.

The last-named amount arises from the embezzlement of postal funds by F. J. Nesbitt, late postmaster at Bozeman, Mont., who is now serving a term of imprisonment for the offense. Suit has been commenced against his sureties, and the entire amount will be recovered.

The next largest amount, $9,186.06, is due from the sureties of Frank Mapes, late postmaster at Kansas City, Kans., who committed suicide when his defalcation of postal funds was discovered. Judgment has been obtained by the very reliable and able United States district attorney in this case, Mr. John R. Walker, and, although it is believed that the sureties have endeavored to cover up their property to defeat collection of the judgment, yet United States District Attorney Walker is likely to reach them by bill in chancery.

The only other large amount due is that from J. H. Cooke, late postmaster at Quinlan, Tex., on money-order account, $5,096.69. Suit has been instituted and collection in this case will be made. Suits have been instituted in a number of other cases, and collection of the smaller balances due, both on money order and postal accounts, are being made daily.

In the annual report for the past fiscal year for this office, under date of October 12, 1896, the balance due from late postmasters and failing bidders for that year was stated at $56,015.98. On page 4 of the report the following statement appears: "A great part of this sum will be collected without suit before the expiration of the calendar year." The report submitted to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, heretofore mentioned, gives the total amount due the Government on account of the Post-Office Department, from its officials and employees who retired from service during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896 as $41,333.01, showing the collections to the 1st instant from date of annual report to be $14,082.97.

I do not believe the statement extravagant that nearly every dollar will be collected of the indebtedness recited in this communication.

Very respectfully,

GEO. A. HOWARD, Auditor.

Hon. WILLIAM L. WILSON,
Postmaster-General.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10289, and had directed him to report the bill and amendments back to the House with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the House in good faith to vote down the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], on page 4. Let me say in perfect candor to the House that that simply increases the appropriation $50,000, and can not possibly accomplish anything in the direction the gentleman seeks to accomplish. So that I ask the House to vote that amendment down. I now ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment than that mentioned by the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendments other than the one specified by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 4, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "hundred," so as to read "one hundred thousand dollars;" and add in line 4, after the word "dollars," "may use so much thereof as may in the discretion of the Postmaster-General be necessary."

Mr. TALBERT. I demand the yeas and nays on that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment; and on that the gentleman from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and the yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 102.

Mr. TALBERT. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and eighty-one gentlemen present—a quorum. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Several members called for the regular order.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HULL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will read the title of the first bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. Let the bill be read. I desire the first reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (before the reading was concluded). I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 53, noes 22.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the result of the last vote, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HALTERMAN, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. KNOX, for three days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DAYTON, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BULL, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ARNOLD of Rhode Island, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEONARD, for three days, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3675) to provide times and places for the trial in Oklahoma Territory of cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States; and

A bill (S. 3673) to amend chapter 67 of volume 23 of the Statutes at Large of the United States and to further provide for the retirement of enlisted men in the United States Army and Marine Corps and enlisted men and petty officers of the United States Navy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 5,000 copies of the message of the President of January 18, 1897, and of the report of the commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1895, to inquire into deep waterways between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, accompanying the same, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House, and 500 for the use of the commissioners.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the joint resolution (S. R. 191) relative to the improvement of the waterway between Birmingham, Ala., and the Black Warrior River.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 2321) to increase pension of John J. Cross.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 6903) granting a pension to Ellen Day, stepmother of Albert L. Day.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6713) to extend North Capitol street northward through the property of the Prospect Hill Cemetery, to pay for land to be taken for such purpose, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8672) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia, having general equity jurisdiction, to decree the sale, lease, or surrender of any lease of real estate in said District belonging to insane persons for purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 237) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, of the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, joint resolution and bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 201) to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the expenses of the inaugural ceremonies—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 3675) to provide times and places for the trial in Oklahoma Territory of cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3673) to amend chapter 67 of volume 23 of the Statutes at Large of the United States and to further provide for the retirement of enlisted men in the United States Army and Marine Corps and enlisted men and petty officers of the United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Concurrent resolution—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 5,000 copies of the message of the President of January 18, 1897, and of the report of the Commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1895, to inquire into deep waterways between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, accompanying the same, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House, and 500 for the use of Commissioners—

To the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9493) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof;

A bill (H. R. 1498) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to William M. Dalzell;

A bill (H. R. 1323) for the relief of Ira H. Sweatt;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 249) for appointment of a member of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 234) providing for the distribution of the maps and atlases of the United States Geological Survey.

MRS. LUCY ALEXANDER PAYNE.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday the Chair, in appointing conferees upon the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, appointed as conferees several members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, whereas the conferees should have been chosen from members of the Committee on Pensions. If there be no objection, that action will be vacated and the Chair will now appoint new conferees.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. COFFIN, Mr. BAKER of Kansas, and Mr. BLACK as conferees on the part of the House.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. COCKRELL on the 11th instant, intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN on the 1st instant, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10121) to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3565) to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia, to report it without amendment. I ask that the bill take the place of Calendar No. 1468, being the bill (S. 3498) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3687) to amend and make certain the intent of section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for salaries of judges in certain cases after retirement; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 3688) for the relief of Laura J. Locke; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 3689) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS IN INDIA.

Mr. PERKINS. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask shall be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. R. 204) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of India, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas a famine exists in India which is daily causing thousands of deaths among the poor, which famine can readily be relieved from the surplus products of other parts of the world; and

Whereas the people of the United States stand always ready to assist the distressed and afflicted wherever found, and California, Oregon, Washington, Nebraska, Iowa, and Kansas have already collected and donated wheat, flour, and corn for relief of the famishing inhabitants of India, which is now being conveyed free of charge by transportation companies to San Francisco for shipment to India: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ and place at the disposal of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco any ship or vessel belonging to the Navy of the United States best adapted for such service for the purpose of transporting to the famishing poor of India such contributions as may be made for their relief, or to charter and employ under the authority of the United States a suitable American steamship or vessel, with a cargo capacity of 1,500 to 3,000 tons, for the same purpose. Any sum of money which may be necessary to carry out the object of this resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury heretofore appropriated for the support of the Navy.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROACH (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT ON PRICES OF ARMOR.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Naval Affairs 1,000 additional copies of the report on the prices of armor without the testimony, and 300 copies with the testimony.

REMOVALS FROM OFFICE FOR ALLEGED POLITICAL REASONS.

Mr. ALLEN. I send to the desk a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Civil Service Commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to inform the Senate if Mary A. Dalton, William Holmes, Mary Flynn, John Zeller, and Dr. M. S. White, or any of them, have been discharged from the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, from positions held under the classified service of the Government; and if so, when, and for what reasons; and if they, or any of them, have asked or petitioned the Civil Service Commissioners for an investigation of the charges made against them, and if said request or petition has been denied by the Civil Service Commissioners; and if so, for what reason or reasons the same has been denied; and that the said Civil Service Commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to accompany their answer to this resolution with full and complete copies of all affidavits, letters, statements, testimony, depositions, reports of examiners, and all other papers or documents in their possession and in any manner bearing on the subject-matter of this resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, in the month of December last I received from a reputable firm of lawyers in Omaha, Nebr., a letter charging a very severe and flagrant violation of the so-called civil-service law in consequence of the discharge of certain persons who are named in the resolution. I sent their complaint to the Commissioners of the Civil Service for information as to the charges that had been made against the persons whose names appear in the resolution. I send to the desk and desire to have the letter read as explanatory of the matter to some extent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter, dated December 16, 1896.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the resolution ought to be referred or laid over. I object to its consideration. Let it be referred, if the Senator desires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; I shall not have it referred. I shall ask to have it taken up and considered on Monday morning——

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

Mr. ALLEN. And I shall debate it at such length as I am permitted to do under the rules——

Mr. SHERMAN. All right; I have no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator would prefer that I should take this matter up on Monday morning and discuss it instead of discussing it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution goes over under objection one day.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that quite well; but I understood the Senator's objection to be based upon the idea that I would let it be referred without any comment, which I shall not do. I shall either comment on it now or at the next regular session of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no desire to interfere with the Senator at the proper time, but I wish to submit a motion.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the reading of the letter be concluded, or have the RECORD show nothing about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ALLEN. I understood the Senator from Ohio to object.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution goes over under objection.

Mr. ALLEN. It goes over under the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands; but the Chair understood the Senator from Nebraska to make some request.

Mr. ALLEN. The letter has been only partially read.

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole of it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLEN. I can not hear what the Senator from Ohio says. I submit, however, that the question was put by the Chair whether there was any objection to the consideration of the resolution, and the Senate by unanimous consent proceeded to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair entertains the objection of the Senator from Ohio, but the Chair was endeavoring to submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Nebraska. The Chair only desires that the request may be again stated; that is all.

Mr. ALLEN. Then let the letter be printed in the RECORD. I have other letters, however, which I shall read when I get an opportunity on the next legislative day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

OMAHA, NEBR., December 16, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Some days ago we prepared and filed before the Civil Service Commission the protest of Miss Mary A. Dalton against removal from her position as assistant microscopist at South Omaha (Bureau of Animal Industry). The Board acknowledged the receipt of the letter, but so far as we know, have taken no action.

The facts in the case are as follows: Miss Dalton two or three years ago was appointed assistant microscopist in the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha, Nebr. Over a year ago she was placed under civil service. Shortly after election she was handed a letter signed by J. Sterling Morton, informing her that she had been discharged for "neglect of duty."

She was not notified that charges had been preferred against her; her superiors had not complained to her of her neglect of duty; she was given no opportunity to meet the charges filed against her.

Under the rules of civil service she certainly is entitled to know the name of the person preferring the charges, the nature of the charges, and then be entitled to be heard in self-defense. This is all we ask, but fear that the Board is playing us double. Within ten days after the protest was filed J. Sterling Morton had a special agent or spy on the ground, by the name of Sheldon, hunting up evidence.

Couldn't you see the Civil Service Commission and insist that they give this matter prompt attention? During the last campaign Mr. Bryan and the Chicago platform were denounced by Morton, Cleveland, et al., as enemies of civil-service reform, etc. Now, it does seem to us that we have these very same gentlemen in the hole. If they can remove these men, civil service is a farce, and Morton et al. rank hypocrites; if there is a civil-service law, these men and girls must be restored to their places, and Morton et al. again guilty of hypocrisy.

Yours, truly,

HERDMAN & HERDMAN.

W. V. ALLEN, M. C., Washington, D. C.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. ALLEN subsequently submitted the following letters; which were ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1897.

SIR: Referring to your communication of December 16, previously acknowledged, with reference to the removal of certain persons from the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha, Nebr., for alleged political reasons, you are informed that the Secretary of Agriculture has stated to the Commission that the removals were made for good reasons; that he did not know whom any of the persons removed supported for President; that he made no inquiry, nor whom they supported. He has laid before this Commission a number of sworn statements, from which it would appear that the removals related solely to the internal discipline of the service, in which this Commission has no authority to interfere. Later, the Secretary of Agriculture addressed the Commission, inclosing copies of additional affidavits bearing upon the conduct of Drs. White and Zeller, adding: "I think these affidavits show conclusively that my action was for the good of the public service."

The civil-service rules contain the following provisions respecting dismissals or changes of rank:

"Rule 11. * * *

"3. No person in the executive civil service shall dismiss, or cause to be dismissed, or make any attempt to procure the dismissal of, or in any manner change the official rank or compensation of any other person therein because of his political or religious opinions or affiliations.

* * * * * * *

"6. In making removals or reductions, or in imposing punishment for delinquency or misconduct, penalties like in character shall be imposed for like offenses, and action thereupon shall be taken irrespective of the political or religious affiliations of the offenders."

Where a removal or reduction is made for reasons relating to the internal administration of the service not contrary to clauses 3 and 6 of rule 11, cited above, the Commission has no authority to interfere.

In view of the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture and the evidence which he submits, the Commission feels that, with its limited force and the pressure of work, it can not at this time make an investigation of its own into the matter.

Very respectfully,

JOHN R. PROCTER,
President.

Hon. WILLIAM V. ALLEN,
United States Senate.

SOUTH OMAHA, NEBR., January 16, 1897.

DEAR SIR: You will please excuse my writing you, but think you should understand the matter of which I write. I was put in charge of the microscopic department at this town September 1, 1893, and believe it was run properly under my supervision. November 15, 1896, I received a communication from Secretary Morton, saying, "You are hereby discharged for neglect of duty." The date of dismissal notice is November 9, 1896. I wrote the Secretary and asked him to please name one duty I had neglected. Morton's private secretary answered my letter by using the following language, viz:

"I take the liberty of informing you, for your own satisfaction, that the Secretary's recent action in your case was based on what he considered the strongest and most indisputable evidence from several reliable sources as to very decided pernicious political activity upon your part during the recent campaign.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"JOHN NORDHOUSE,
"Private Secretary."

I took no part, virtually, during the recent campaign. My son, a young law student in our State university, and a great admirer of W. J. Bryan, did considerable work for Mr. Bryan, and it is reported that Secretary Morton removed me for my son's actions. I have asked for an impartial investigation, but hear nothing from my petition.

The Secretary sent Ed. Sheldon (you probably know him) out here almost two months after my discharge, hunting up evidence against me and the three others removed at the same time. I have done a little practice outside of working hours, and Secretary Morton said he wanted me to build up a practice. The three others removed with me employed counsel and appealed their cases to the Civil Service Commission, but believe they have concluded there is nothing in civil service. I wrote the Commission and asked if I was not entitled to a hearing. I said to the Commission I felt sure I could prove I had never neglected one duty.

I would like to see the appropriation withheld from that Commission if it will not investigate such removals as have been made here in South Omaha.

The two girls discharged were my most faithful assistants. Their offense was having Mr. Bryan's picture in their windows. Six other of my assistants had McKinley pictures in their windows, but they are all O. K. I understand the Civil Service Commission claims that it has no authority to investigate any removals outside of politics. Every discharged person here was fired for being "a free-silver crank," although the alleged reason is for neglect of duty.

Is there any court in the land that would convict a man and then hunt up evidence after conviction? That is just exactly what has been done here. This man Sheldon has been here twice getting evidence. The first evidence he sent in, I've heard that the Civil Service Commission said to Secretary Morton, was not "specific enough." Then Morton sends him (Sheldon) again, and he sneaks around stock yards, packing houses, and persons whom I've doctored, finding affidavits against those let out "for neglect of duty." The whole thing is outrageous and ought to be shown up. If Ed. Sheldon had not been sent here, I don't think I would have done anything in the matter.

Yours, respectfully,

M. S. WHITE.

P. S.—If I have not made this letter plain, just write me, and I'll take great pleasure in furnishing you, Senator VEST, Senator MORGAN, or Senator COCKRELL any information desired in this matter. I've letters to show that I was all O. K. as long as I was thought to be straight politically. Some of your friends asked me to write you.

Hon. WILLIAM V. ALLEN,
Washington, D. C.

OMAHA, NEBR., February 8, 1897.

DEAR SIR: Some time ago there was addressed to the Civil Service Commission at Washington, D. C., a communication stating to said Commission that Mary A. Dalton, William Holmes, Mary Flynn, John Zeller, and Dr. M. S. White were discharged from the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha for political reasons, upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture. The communication addressed to the Commission requested an investigation of the reasons for which said parties were discharged, as we are satisfied that it can be shown that the charge made that they were discharged for political reasons—namely, for supporting Mr. Bryan for President—is absolutely true. The Commission declined to order an investigation in the matter, practically declaring that they had no power to investigate because the Secretary of Agriculture had notified them that the discharges referred to were for the good of the service and not for political reasons. We inclose a letter from the Commission at Washington, dated January 21, 1897, which speaks for itself.

The Commission refers to affidavits taken here (under the orders and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture) for the purpose of proving to the Commission at Washington that the parties referred to were not discharged for political reasons. We desire to again state that we can show by irrefutable testimony that the discharges were not made "for the good of the service," but were made on account of political reasons. We know it to be a fact that affidavits have been made by persons in the employ of the Government, stating certain things of a political character which were alleged as neglect of duty against the person discharged, but which can be shown upon investigation to be untrue. We know that in the case of John Zeller it is charged in the affidavits sent to Washington under Morton's instructions that Zeller attended a meeting of the Democratic county central committee in April, 1896, and in so doing neglected his duty to take part in politics. We charge and can show it to be an absolute fact that the person in charge at South Omaha, under whose orders Zeller was working, instructed him to quit work and attend the said Democratic county central committee meeting in the interest of the bolting Democrats who were seeking to control said central committee meeting, and that, by the orders of said person in charge of said department at South Omaha, another man was put in the place of said Zeller during his absence. Said Zeller was given a proxy by those who represent Morton in this State, and practically compelled by them to vote according to their dictates. This is now charged against him as neglect of duty. We denounce as an outrage upon those discharged the action of Morton in having affidavits secretly taken to substantiate charges against those discharged, when they are not informed as to the specific charges against them, and are given no opportunity to be heard or to meet the testimony submitted against them. If the powers of the Commission are so limited, as they declare in their letter, that they can not order an investigation in these cases, but must accept the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture supported by affidavits secretly taken, when those discharged stand ready to prove that the reason given for their discharge is not true, then it seems to us the Commission has outlived the period of its usefulness, civil service, so called, is a glaring farce, and the Commission itself, instead of drawing a salary from the people, ought, in the interest of good government and public decency, to be abolished.

We desire to call your attention to a letter written to one of the discharged persons by the private secretary of J. Sterling Morton, dated November 16, 1896, which declares that the said White was discharged for pernicious activity in politics during the late campaign. We desire to state that this charge is absolutely false, as can be shown by the testimony of every honest and truthful person who knows Mr. White and knows what his conduct was during the campaign. We can show that those who actually took an active part in the late political campaign are still in the employ of the Government because they spent their time in working for Mr. McKinley, and in spending money, in saloons and other places, furnished them by the postmaster at Omaha to carry on the campaign in the interest of "national honor" and "sound money." While they were thus engaged, and also engaged in the further occupation of spying upon their fellow-workmen, Zeller and others thus employed were doing their own work and the work of those engaged in politics, and who were thereby neglecting the duties for which the Government is paying them. Those who supported Mr. McKinley and opposed Mr. Bryan are still in the employ of the Government, although since election the Department has found it necessary to notify some of them that unless they quit drinking their services would have to be dispensed with. We insist that we can prove every statement made in the foregoing communication, and if this Commission has not the power to give the persons thus discharged an opportunity to be heard to show that they have been unjustly dealt with, that they have been discharged in violation of the rules of the civil service, then we say the lawmaking power ought to give them the necessary authority or abolish it entirely. We ask for those discharged a fair and reasonable investigation, and being unable to secure it at the hands of the Civil Service Commission, our only alternative is to appeal to your lawmaking body and invoke your assistance. If the United States Government has gone into the business of "coercion" and intends to follow out the practice of discharging employees who refuse to vote according to the will of the heads of Departments, we think the matter ought to be investigated.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., November 16, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of November 14, addressed to the Secretary, is received, and I have to inform you that Mr. Morton left this morning for New York and expects to return to Washington in a few days, when your communication will be brought to his attention. In the meantime I take the liberty of informing you, for your own satisfaction, that the Secretary's recent action in your case was based on what he considered the strongest and most indisputable evidence from several reliable sources as to very decided pernicious political activity upon your part during the recent campaign.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN NORDHOUSE,
Private Secretary.

Dr. M. S. WHITE,
Care Bureau of Animal Industry, South Omaha, Nebr.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1897.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to your communication, previously acknowledged, with reference to the removal of Mary A. Dalton and William Holmes from the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha for alleged political reasons, you are informed that the Secretary of Agriculture has stated to the Commission that the removals were made for good reasons: that he did not know whom any one of the persons removed supported for President; that he made no inquiry, nor did he care whom they supported. He has laid before the Commission a number of sworn statements, from which it would seem that the removals related solely to the internal discipline of the service, in which this Commission has no authority to interfere. Later, the Secretary of Agriculture addressed the Commission, inclosing copies of additional affidavits, adding: "I think these affidavits show conclusively that my action was for the good of the public service."

The civil-service rules contain the following provisions respecting dismissals or changes of rank:

"Rule 11. * * *

"3. No person in the executive civil service shall dismiss, or cause to be dismissed, or make any attempt to procure the dismissal of, or in any manner change the official rank or compensation of any other person therein because of his political or religious opinions or affiliations.

* * * * * * * *

"6. In making removals or reductions, or in imposing punishment for delinquency or misconduct, penalties like in character shall be imposed for like offenses, and action thereupon shall be taken irrespective of the political or religious affiliations of the offenders."

Where a removal or reduction is made for reasons relating to the internal administration of the service not contrary to clauses 3 and 6 of rule 11, cited above, the Commission has no authority to interfere.

In view of the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture and the evidence which he submits, the Commission feels that with its limited force and the pressure of work it can not at this time make an investigation of its own into the matter.

Very respectfully, JOHN R. PROCTER, President.

Messrs. HERDMAN & HERDMAN,
Creighton Block, Omaha, Nebr.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PERRINE LAND-GRANT INVESTIGATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate as a part of the morning business the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution authorizing the Committee on Public Lands to investigate the issue of patents for the lands embraced in what is known as the Perrine land grant, in the State of Florida.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the resolution without a reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted on the 11th instant by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by the full committee or by a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, be authorized to investigate the issue of patents for the lands embraced in what is known as the Perrine grant, in the State of Florida, with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the adoption of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. The morning business is not yet completed, I believe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the resolution introduced by the Senator from Alabama and coming over from a previous day has not reached the desk from the Printer. The Chair will have the resolution read from the RECORD. However, the Chair understands that it is not a part of the morning business, being a joint resolution. Will the Senator from Alabama please repeat his request?

Mr. MORGAN. My request was that the joint resolution be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending the morning business, a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the Chair must entertain the motion of the Senator from Ohio pending the request of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WILSON. I ask leave to submit an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. If I am to be ruled off the floor in this way by the Senator from Ohio, I object to anyone else having it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not hear a word the Senator says, there is so much confusion in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I say if, on the joint resolution proposing to declare the Clayton-Bulwer treaty abrogated, I am to be ruled off the floor by the motion of the Senator from Ohio, which he insists upon, then I object to anyone else getting the floor for any other business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. My motion is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 15, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 13, 1897.

POSTMASTERS.

Leonard G. Babcock, to be postmaster at Lexington, in the county of Middlesex and State of Massachusetts.

John W. Carroll, to be postmaster at Cape Charles, in the county of Northampton and State of Virginia.

Mildred H. Davies, to be postmaster at Manassas, in the county of Prince William and State of Virginia.

William Graham, to be postmaster at Orange, in the county of Orange and State of Virginia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 13, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman permit me to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. For that purpose only I withdraw the motion.

PASSPORT REGULATIONS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which were referred the President's message and accompanying documents of February 8, 1897, relating to the printing of the special edition of the reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 257) providing for printing the reports of diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HULL in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. I ask consent that the bill may be considered as read a first time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that there was a purpose on the part of the committee to have this bill read through and then on Monday next to endeavor to pass it under a suspension of the rules. Last year when the sundry civil appropriation bill was passed under a suspension of the rules there was some criticism because of the fact that the bill had not been read; and I understand that the object in the present case is to avoid such criticism. I would like to know from the gentleman if the purpose of passing the bill under a suspension of the rules has been abandoned?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the course touching the passage of this bill, if I have my way about it, will be the course that a majority of this House desires to have pursued. It is now almost the middle of February; within two weeks almost of the close of Congress. The sundry civil bill has not yet passed the House; the naval appropriation bill follows this; the preparation of the deficiency bill is not yet begun—the estimates are just in and printed. The gentleman understands that this is the short session. I suppose it will take from three to five days to pass this bill under the five-minute rule. It will take the best part of a week to prepare the deficiency bill. In my judgment, all of the bills will be passed, or can be passed, before the 4th day of March. This bill has been prepared with very great care. Quite as much labor has been placed upon it as any within my recollection. I believe it to be a good bill, and after we consider it under the five-minute rule it would be substantially as it is now, except possibly as points of order may prevail against certain features of the bill.

Now, then, I think it possible that the consideration may lead here and there to its increase; but as an individual member of the House, I am quite content to pursue either course without committing myself now to any future promise or policy as to the consideration of the bill. I am ready now to press the consideration under the five-minute rule, and let Monday and other days of the session take care of themselves.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman may possibly observe, if he recollects what he has said, that he has not yet answered my inquiry. What I wanted to know was whether the purpose of passing this bill under a suspension of the rules had been abandoned?

Mr. CANNON. There has been no purpose determined to pass it under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman from Illinois answers, undoubtedly, totally for himself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I renew the request that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know what time will be given for general debate on the bill? I should like to have half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be no general debate, of course, until the reading of the bill is completed, or until its reading is dispensed with.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand that, but I would like to have an understanding about the general debate now.

Mr. CANNON. So far as general debate is concerned, if it seems to be indicated, as the debate progresses, that the day will be consumed in general debate, I shall not seek to close it until about the close of to-day's session; but if there is any disposition manifested to let general debate run beyond to-day, I should like to take the sense of the House, toward the close of to-day's session, on the question of closing general debate.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman in charge of the bill knows something about the time that will be consumed by the majority. I should like to have half an hour for general debate.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there are remaining about five hours of this session. Of course I have no doubt that the gentleman who represents the minority [Mr. SAYERS] or his colleague [Mr. DOCKERY] will accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There can be no trouble about that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think there will be no trouble about accommodating the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. I know I want forty minutes myself, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] wants some time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to dispense with the further reading?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I should like to learn what the course is going to be with reference to general debate, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment. I should like to have half an hour.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well; I will give that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to dispensing with the further reading, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he proposes to ask, at this time, that the committee put a limit on general debate?

Mr. CANNON. No. I have just indicated, in reply to my colleague [Mr. DOCKERY], that I want general debate closed during the day; but it will be better to let it run a little time. If we can close it by 3 o'clock, or 4, I shall ask to proceed with the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SAYERS. There are gentlemen on this side of the House who desire time, and if the gentleman will agree to let us have two hours and a half, I can parcel out the time. We may not need all that time.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we can agree about it later. I want to say that if general debate can be closed by 3 or 4 o'clock, I propose, if I get my way about it, to commence the reading of this bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that he can pass his bill much more readily by meeting us half way in this matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. You had better give us two hours and a half.

Mr. CANNON. If I can have a little quiet, I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] again, if it should be indicated as the debate progresses that the whole of to-day is required for general debate, I shall not seek to obstruct.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to say to the gentleman, in reply to that, if two hours and a half shall be more than sufficient for the minority, then I am quite confident that the minority will not seek to delay the consideration of this bill by paragraphs for a single moment.

Mr. CANNON. We shall have no trouble, I will say to my friend.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. The very moment we agree to close this debate in five hours, all the eloquence of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and myself will not keep one-third of the members here, and if general debate amounts to anything on a business bill like this, the House ought to be full.

Mr. SAYERS. Now I have made my proposition to the gentleman, and I shall not feel constrained hereafter, in representing the minority——

Mr. CANNON. What is it the gentleman wants? I fail to understand.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I have asked that two hours and a half be allowed the minority, with the assurance to the gentleman that if we shall not consume that time we will not stop the consideration of this bill for one moment. And the reason that I ask it is that I may be able to parcel out the time. Two gentlemen have already asked me for thirty minutes. Another gentleman has asked me for forty minutes. It facilitates the disposition of the time if the gentleman allows me two hours and a half, but if we go on with general debate, each gentleman who arises will be entitled to an hour, and the consequence will be that the time will not be parceled out as it should be.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; that would be so anyhow.

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir; because I will take the responsibility of controlling the time on this side, if such an arrangement can be made.

Mr. CANNON. With that arrangement I am quite content—that the minority shall have two hours and a half and the majority two hours and a half, if it wants to use that much time.

Mr. SAYERS. That is all I ask.

Mr. CANNON. And that the time shall be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] for the minority, and I suppose the gentleman in charge of the bill for the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the agreement is that the minority shall have two hours and a half, to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], and that the majority shall have two hours and a half, if they need it, to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection to that agreement? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill recommends appropriations for $50,664,000, in round numbers, for the service for the coming fiscal year. The estimates upon which it is based amount to $59,000,000, in round numbers, so that the bill is substantially $8,000,000 less than the estimates. The bill is an increase, however, over the corresponding bill passed last session of Congress, for the current year, of $17,500,000, in round numbers. Gentlemen understand that the sundry civil bill is what its name implies. You have the Army, the Navy, the Post-Office, the Agricultural, the Indian, the diplomatic, and the legislative bills, but this is a bill gathering up for the public service the items not carried in the other bills. Therefore it is a bill of much interest to members and the country; and very briefly, if the committee will bear with me, I will refer to the bill from the plain business standpoint.

The increase of $17,500,000 in this bill over the one for the current year is most extraordinary; and yet it is very easy and short of explanation. It is covered substantially by two items. First, in the aggregate the bill carries over $15,000,000, in round numbers—$15,131,000—for the payment of river and harbor improvements, placed or authorized to be placed under contract by the last river and harbor bill. This is an appropriation bill. The legislation was had a year ago. Gentlemen recollect about it. The authorizations of that bill, if I recollect aright, were, in round numbers, $60,000,000. Gentlemen recollect that substantially the general rule underlying that bill was that, commencing on the 1st day of next July, one-fourth of that amount could be expended for four years. Then there were exceptions enough to increase the expenditures over the fourth to make the amount larger than $15,000,000 if it had been inserted in this bill. The policy of that great bill I am not here to discuss. It was discussed a year ago. The bill, vetoed by the President, was passed over his veto, and became and is the law of the land. Let me say one word as to the policy, and one word only. Under proper conditions I believe, and, so far as I know, the Republican party has and does believe, in apt improvement of the great waterways of the country, in apt defense of our seaports, in apt construction of a navy to defend the national honor and national commerce.

Now, if I could have had my way about it, while I firmly believe in internal improvements, including the inland seas and our seacoasts and the great rivers of the country, in the present condition of the Treasury, or its condition a year ago, I would have let a portion of these improvements await an increase of revenue; but Congress thought differently. There were items in that bill which was enacted into law that in my judgment were improvident. I have never known a river and harbor bill that did not cover improvident items, that if I had the power would have been stricken out, and that bill was not an exception. Yet, I am compelled to say from the standpoint of merit, while that great bill, appropriating and authorizing over $70,000,000, covered a very large amount—yet, considering the amount, I believe, from somewhat of a painstaking examination, that the money and authority therein contained covered less in the aggregate of objectionable appropriations than any river and harbor bill that I have knowledge of which passed in the last twenty years. [Applause.]

I do not mean by this to claim that the passage of that great bill was judicious in the then condition of the Treasury. I think that we would better have waited for $45,000,000 of that appropriation and authorization. But, unfortunately, as I think sometimes, I do not control this country. [Laughter.] My vanity tells me that if I could regulate all things I would perhaps regulate them better than the majority of you gentlemen; but, unfortunately, you do not always agree with me, and you have the most votes. [Laughter.] So much for that. Wisely or unwisely, right or wrong, the last session of this Congress placed upon the statute book great authorizations; and when I say that, it is not necessary for me to add that, under legislation and authorization, this sundry civil bill responds necessarily, and so you have this great increase of more than $17,000,000.

There were other great increases made at the last session of Congress. A great naval bill was passed. It costs money to build battle ships at five millions a ship. A great fortification bill was passed last year, and one has passed this House this year, aggregating $17,000,000; an increase, if I recollect aright, of $13,000,000 for fortifications over the amount appropriated for that purpose by the Fifty-third Congress. We could not help it. The country seemed to demand it. The cry was raised that our great seaports were at the mercy of hostile fleets, and that the diplomatic arm of the Government was weak, because, although we had great wealth and great population, yet in the event of war with any foreign government or governments we should be practically helpless before powers really much weaker than ourselves. The demand came, and came from the people, for this great increase of expenditure in fortifications. If I had had my way about it, I would have gone more slowly than we did, but I think that perhaps no appropriations have been made of late that have received more hearty indorsement than those made for fortifications.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having said that much about appropriations and this bill generally, I come directly to the items in this bill that I apprehend gentlemen are specially interested in. I have already spoken of the increase on account of rivers and harbors, but before I leave that subject, let me say to gentlemen that all the money that seems to be demanded by the river and harbor bill on a cursory reading has not been recommended in this bill, for certain reasons. Let me call attention to these items work by work. Take first Newtown Creek, so called, in New York. The amount estimated for under the river and harbor bill is $400,000. The amount recommended is $183,000; a decrease of $217,000; that decrease being made for the reason that a contract has been entered into for the work at $183,000 instead of $400,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. But the other estimate was the estimate of the engineer himself.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the other item was the estimate of the engineer himself; but when we came to place the work under contract the competition was such, or the Chief of Engineers had been so "off his base" (if I may be allowed the expression), that that work which had been estimated at $400,000 was contracted at $183,000.

Mr. BENNETT. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that the work done previously on Newtown Creek had been done at the rate of 39 cents per cubic yard, but under a continuous contract it was found possible to let the same dredging work at 17½ cents per cubic yard.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; I know that contract work, continuous or otherwise, ought to be let now at lower rates than in former years, for two reasons: First, the price of labor is lower. People are out of employment and are so anxious for employment that they work on a closer margin and for less pay. Second, there has been great improvement made in labor-saving machinery for excavation, for dredging, for all that kind of work. Take the digging of that great canal running from Chicago to Joliet, by the use of labor-saving appliances the cost of the work has been reduced to a minimum, so that I understand that that kind of work is done now at from one-third to one-half less than it cost a few years ago and with quite as much profit to the contractor.

Take Delaware Bay: The amount called for on the face of the law was $714,000; the contract is let at $450,000 for the proportion of the work for the coming year.

Take Duluth, Minn.: The amount called for on the face of the law was $790,000, and the work has been contracted for at $500,000.

Providence Harbor: The contract there reduces the amount from an estimate of $400,000 to $125,000.

Take Chicago River: The contract reduces the amount there from an estimate of $400,000 to $113,000, and we have written the amounts in recommendation in the bill for the various items according to the necessities of the service and in compliance with the substance of the law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are three or four works that I want to call attention to that are omitted entirely from this bill, and they are omitted advisedly, after the fullest inquiry. The first is Wilmington, Del. Under the last river and harbor act there should be $205,000 carried by this bill for that work. The bill carries nothing in recommendation, for the reason that the last river and harbor act authorized a contract according to projects and plans then in existence, but put a limit on the contract as to cost of $205,000. Now, it appears that the work under the project authorized in the last river and harbor act can not be done for anywhere near that amount.

Now, then, as to Oakland, Cal. On the face of the river and harbor act there should be an appropriation of $400,000 written into this bill. But there is the legislation in the river and harbor bill, "according to the plans and specifications then in existence," and then a limit is placed upon the expenditure necessary to complete the work, as in all the cases covered by the river and harbor bill.

Now, on full inquiry of the Engineer Department, it appears that the amount of money authorized by the river and harbor act will not complete the work at Oakland, according to the project, by (in round numbers) $700,000. The result was that as soon as this fact appeared to your Committee on Appropriations, a letter was addressed to the Secretary of War as to whether he had authority to enter into this contract unless the contract could be entered into within the law and within its limitations. After referring the matter to the Adjutant-General, and upon full inquiry, the Secretary of War, citing in his reply the sections of the law, was clearly of opinion that unless the work could be completed within the limitation (whether the money was appropriated or not) he would have no authority to expend one cent without further legislation in the premises. And I have no doubt that he is entirely correct in this view under the law. Therefore, your committee do not recommend anything to be appropriated at Oakland.

You may say that as Oakland is a city adjacent to San Francisco, close upon the Golden Gate, why not legislate extending the limit $700,000 and make an appropriation accordingly? Purely and simply because there is a great committee of this House which, under our rules, has the power to recommend legislation touching rivers and harbors—namely, the River and Harbor Committee—and we did not believe it was politic for the Committee on Appropriations to even submit an item covering this and other matters not authorized by law touching rivers and harbors.

Now, in addition to Oakland, Cal., the same thing is true of the Kentucky River. The amount called for under contract on the face of the river and harbor bill is $400,000; yet on inquiry we found that under the limitations of that act it would take a million dollars additional to the limitation to complete the work according to the project.

Mr. BERRY. The gentleman will allow me to state that the last River and Harbor Committee, accepting the estimate of the Government engineer, which was $1,380,000, provided for placing the work on that river under contract. Subsequently the engineering arm of the United States Government made a second estimate, $1,000,000 higher. So that the river is in this condition: The work has been commenced at Lock No. 7, and upon that work the Government has expended about $125,000; but now there is no money to continue the work through the coming summer. This virtually stops the improvement of the Kentucky River, although the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had provided that the work should be placed under contract. One million three hundred and eighty thousand dollars expended under the contract system would complete that improvement; but, carried on as it has been by the United States Government, it will require hundreds of thousands of dollars more.

Mr. CANNON. I am not here to discuss the merits of the improvement on the Kentucky River.

Mr. BERRY. But as I should have asked (if I had anticipated the present action) an appropriation to continue the work there, or at least to have it placed under contract, I am placed in the position of having the work discontinued on that river which I represent, because this bill does not contain any appropriation to carry on the work during the coming summer. In this way the opinion of the River and Harbor Committee is set aside; and the Government as well as the people will be losers.

Mr. CANNON. I have failed to make myself understood by the gentleman——

Mr. BERRY. I understand the position of the gentleman and his committee. I have read the report.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; if the gentleman understands this matter, he understands that according to the project referred to in the river and harbor act the Engineer Department has stated that this work can not be done according to the project within $1,000,000 of the amount authorized, and then the Secretary of War says that under the existing law, whether the money is appropriated or not, no dollar can be expended and no contract made without further legislation.

Mr. BERRY. But does not the chairman of the committee understand that the original estimate of the Engineer Department of the United States Government was $1,380,000 for the completion of the improvement on that river, that we acted on that recommendation in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that subsequently the Department came in with an estimate vastly increasing the expected cost of that improvement?

Mr. CANNON. My friend and I can not afford to play upon words. I say again the officers of the Engineer Department testified before the Committee on Appropriations that the project referred to in the river and harbor bill—not the first project, but the project in being at the time the river and harbor bill was enacted—will require over $1,000,000 beyond the authorization.

Mr. BERRY. The gentleman will allow me to state that when these questions came up before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the last report of the Engineer of the United States Army was read, and in view of that report and of the estimate of $1,380,000 as the cost of carrying out the project, we placed the work upon the river and harbor bill at that figure; but a subsequent estimate made by the Engineer Department increased the amount to $2,400,000.

Mr. CANNON. I do not so understand.

Mr. BERRY. I so understand; and the report of the Engineer Department was read in the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; your Committee on Rivers and Harbors has plenary power to cure any mistake, and to report legislation touching rivers and harbors. Why do they not perform their function?

Mr. BERRY. We endeavored, as I have stated, to follow the estimate of the Engineer Department; we could not anticipate this subsequent and larger estimate.

Mr. CANNON. The Committee on Appropriations, of which I have the honor to be chairman, can answer for a great many things, but we can not answer for a mistake in the estimates of the Engineer Board, or a misapprehension of facts on the part of my friend from Kentucky or his committee.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, with his consent.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. There has been expended on the Kentucky River in all $1,700,000. The last river and harbor bill put that river under the contract system, but the bill now under consideration makes no appropriation to go on with the work of constructing the locks and dams on the river.

Mr. CANNON. I am aware of that.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It seems to me that there ought to be in the bill an appropriation to go on with those improvements. We can not afford to lose the full benefits of work that has already been done at an expenditure of $1,700,000; neither should improvements be delayed or impeded which will be beneficial to so many people and to such a large area of the State of Kentucky. It will not require a very considerable sum to finish the work.

I desire to ask the gentleman, therefore, if he thinks it good policy, after spending the amount already stated, to make no appropriation in this bill to continue the work?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will reply to the gentleman from Kentucky that the committee that makes up this bill makes provision for river and harbor appropriations under existing law, and can not make provision for those that are not under existing law. I have stated plainly, or have endeavored to do so in the report of the committee, the correspondence with the Secretary of War on this subject. We heard testimony, and thoroughly, and the unanimous testimony is that the project legislated about in the river and harbor bill can not be completed within the limit of cost by $1,000,000. Therefore no dollar of money can be legally expended, or will be, until there is legislation on the part of Congress to extend the limit.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit me one moment further. About a year ago, as I understand it, the Chief of Engineers made an estimate that $1,360,000 would be sufficient to construct the locks and dams required to carry slack-water navigation to the Three Forks of the Kentucky River and that amount was provided for in the river and harbor bill. Now it is claimed that $2,400,000 will be necessary to complete the improvement of the Kentucky River, and on this account no appropriation is made in this bill, and work on Kentucky River, will be suspended, although the Kentucky River was by law placed under the contract system last year. I protest against this.

Mr. CANNON. I am not combating that statement. I do not know whether it is true or not. But the engineer now comes and says the project referred to in the river and harbor act can not be completed for the $1,000,000 heretofore authorized for that work, and therefore it does not come within the provisions of the pending bill at all.

Mr. BERRY. May not that be a work like some of those the gentleman has already referred to, where a reduction was made when the contracts were let?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, we do not legislate on what may be. We must legislate on facts as they appear before us. If legislation is needed for the Kentucky River, and for these other projects, such as for the dams on the Ohio River from No. 2 to No. 5, or at Wilmington, that committee of which the gentleman has the honor of being a member has full jurisdiction under the rules of the House, and I never knew that committee fail to get consideration for any measure it reported here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the same is true with reference to dams 2 to 5 on the Ohio River. Under the project legislated about, it takes over a million of dollars more than is authorized to complete them. Therefore, there being no law for the appropriation, we do not recommend it in this bill.

I now come to one other item that is upon an exceptional footing, and that is the Yaquina Bay, Oregon. That work was authorized to cost not exceeding $1,000,000. I am not here to discuss its merits. That has been discussed and set fort fully in the public prints and otherwise. It is not necessary for me, therefore, to discuss its merits now. We had the engineers of the Department before us, and on full inquiry the information came to our committee that no project had been made of any kind for Yaquina Bay. Pencil has not been put to paper in regard to the work. We had a further statement that whether the money was appropriated or not, not one cent of it would be expended during the coming fiscal year. Now, as this bill makes provision for expenditures for the coming fiscal year, under that state of facts we did not recommend anything for the work at that point. So that while we recommend over $15,000,000 in the aggregate for meeting the requirements of the last river and harbor bill, we recommend $4,000,000 less than would seem to be indicated upon the face of the bill for the reasons that I have already stated.

That, Mr. Chairman, is all I care to say about that matter at this time. I would next call the attention of the committee to the question of public buildings. The amount carried in the bill is over four million of dollars—$4,072,000—for this purpose. It is an increase of $1,620,000 for public buildings. If gentlemen will take the report of the committee accompanying this bill, they will find the buildings referred to in detail. For instance, at Newark, N. J., we recommend there an appropriation not authorized by law, and I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact. There is $187,000 available to add to the site of the public building at Newark. It is a great city, as gentlemen understand. On the site that the Government owns a new public building has been erected, and it is inadequate to meet the wants of the Government, and it has become absolutely necessary to add to that site and to authorize a building on this piece of land to be purchased that can be used in connection with the present building. It requires, in addition to the $187,000 now available for that purpose, $66,000.

We submit the matter to the House. Then there is the court-house and custom-house at Omaha, Nebr. The limit of cost there was $1,200,000. This breaks the limit by $100,000, under the following circumstances and conditions: The Secretary of the Treasury, as I think without authority of law, concluded to put in a granite front, or granite finish on the outside, at a cost of $100,000 more, and went on and put up the building in that way. Now, it can not be finished without the other $100,000; and while we could stand and scold and criticise the Secretary of the Treasury, as I think he ought to be criticised, for proceeding to erect this building in the teeth of the law, nevertheless in that considerable city there is a great building standing unfinished, and can not be finished until this money has been appropriated for this purpose. It seemed to the committee that it was a case that they might safely submit to the House for its consideration and action.

Then we have legislation on the bill in quite a number of instances. One is we provide that the Post-Office Department in this city, on F street, shall be moved into the building, when completed, known as the new post-office building, down on the Avenue.

There is quite enough space there to accommodate the Post-Office Department and the Sixth Auditor's Office. We believe that it ought to be so occupied. If it is not so occupied, this great building, which should accommodate 2,000 clerks, will be occupied by only 600.

Then we provide by the appropriation that the Post-Office Department building shall be turned over to the Interior Department.

I think I have sufficiently referred to the provisions of the bill. No doubt there are various other items to which attention will be called as the reading of the bill progresses, but upon which I do not feel justified in taking further time, in justice to my colleagues on the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the attention of the committee for a brief time. I am not at all surprised at the aggregate of appropriations carried in this bill. What has occurred is what I confidently expected would occur, and what I stated to the House in the last session would almost inevitably result. The amount of appropriations carried in this bill is the consequence, first, of the failure, which I may call a willful and premeditated failure, on the part of the majority of the Committee on Appropriations to recommend appropriations for public buildings and also for river and harbor works previously contracted for this entire fiscal year.

The sundry civil appropriation bill for the present year contains appropriations for public buildings under contract, and also for old river and harbor contracts, only until the 1st of March, whereas a wise policy would have induced the majority of the committee, and also the majority of this House, to appropriate a sufficiency for such purposes until July 1 next. To-day, therefore, we are confronted with appropriations for sixteen months instead of for twelve months for the construction of public buildings and for meeting river and harbor contracts authorized by previous Congresses.

Secondly, because it carries appropriations for the support of the officials of the Federal courts for twelve months instead of for six months. Heretofore appropriations for the payment of marshals, clerks, commissioners, and United States attorneys have only been made for six months, but in consequence of the passage of the act at the last session of the present Congress paying salaries to these officials, instead of fees, the Committee on Appropriations have recommended an appropriation for the entire year, instead of for six months as heretofore.

Third, because Congress, in spite of the objections and veto of the President, at its first session passed the river and harbor bill which has necessitated appropriations in this bill amounting to the sum of $15,131,996.91, besides a further appropriation of $1,150,000 which will appear in the general deficiency bill.

These are the reasons, and the only reasons, why this bill is so much larger than the one of the first session. Every item in this bill may be subjected to the closest criticism, and I feel quite sure that it will be found that, with the exception of the appropriations to carry out the new river and harbor contracts, such items are entirely defensible.

Mr. LOUD. Are not the river and harbor items defensible, from the gentleman's point of view?

Mr. SAYERS. Some of them are and some of them not.

Mr. LOUD. It depends on where they are located, does it?

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. That suggestion comes from the mind of the gentleman who is always suspicious of everybody except himself.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I am suspicious of myself oftener than of anyone else.

Mr. SAYERS. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to say and will not say that an objection to any particular item in the river and harbor bill arises because of its locality.

Mr. LOUD. It is enormous in amount, is it not?

Mr. SAYERS. I think so, unquestionably.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman if he thinks it is possible to keep the river and harbor bill down, in view of the policy that we are following?

Mr. SAYERS. That depends pretty much, I think, upon the organization of the River and Harbor Committee. If members are appointed on that committee who would rather not appropriate than appropriate, I think the chances are that the bill would be reduced.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman another question. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good thing, in view of the condition which now confronts this country, and in view of the enormous pension roll which we must bear for some years, that this Government should stop for four or six years appropriating any money for river and harbor purposes, from an economic point of view?

Mr. SAYERS. I could not say so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will ask the gentleman if it is possible to stop with the continuing-contract system?

Mr. LOUD. To stop new river and harbor bills.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask, in connection with the question of my friend, would it not be a good thing for us to starve, because we can get along cheaper in that way than we can in any other?

Mr. SAYERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to have my time occupied with such questions as are pending between the gentlemen.

Mr. LOUD. We may have to starve. We can not help that.
